'Die Fledermaus' a fitting end to music instructor's career

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

The KSU Opera Theatre production of "Die Fledermaus" by Johann Strauss was an outstanding production in many aspects. It was quite possibly the one of the most accomplished productions performed at McCain Auditorium.

REVIEW

This production shines so brilliantly because everyone involved with it put their hearts and souls into it. This is director Jerry Langenkamp's last opera and a fitting finale to his 27 years at K-State.

No singular performer dominated the show. Somehow, everyone was a star without overwhelming anyone else. All the principals played their parts magnificently.

But this was still opera and man, was it classy! I fell in love with the costumes, especially the ladies' headdresses.

At any given moment there were plots, subplots and sub-subplots crisscrossing the stage. Mainly, Dr. Falke, played by Chad Pape, senior in music education, dreamt up the ultimate revenge for a prank. The object of the revenge was Gabriel Von Eisenstein, played by Timothy Bonnell, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine.

Included in this little revenge scenario were Von Eisenstein's wife, Rosalinda, played by Anne Walker, senior in applied music, and his maid Adele, played by Amelia Simmons, senior in applied music.

Along the way, two people fell into the trap — the not-so-innocent bystanders, if you will. Alfred, played by T.J. Schreiner, junior in medical technology, was Rosalinda's former admirer who wished to renew their acquaintance. Blind, performed by Erik Hogan, sophomore in applied music, was an appropriately named attorney.

The entirety of the revenge took place at Prince Orlofsky's palace, for the amusement of Orlofsky, played by Karen Doerr, senior in applied music. The prince continuously reminded everyone how bored he was. Finally he had the last laugh, prompting a chorus of astonished "Prince, you laughed!" from the chorus.

By the time the prince finally laughed, everyone else (in the audience) had to have been lightheaded from laughing. This is a funny, funny production.

Act 1 takes place in a room in Eisenstein's summer villa. It looked so inviting. The room was done in soothing pastels of peach and mint green.

A hall in the prince's palace was the setting for Act 2, and the set designer's magic took almost the same amount of space and made it look larger. With walls of lavender and lots of windows looking out at a bright blue sky, the whole feeling was one of light and airiness — fitting for the opera.

The jail setting for Act 3 was a favorite, probably because of the lighting. One could almost swear it was an early morning light crawling along the walls as the jailer staggered across the floors.

Two lesser characters really made the play. Frosh and Slosh, played by Scott Chamoff, senior in theater, and Brad Good, sophomore in theater, stole the show. Their performances alone make it well worth the price of tickets.

In a day and age of dark dramas — movies like "Reservoir Dogs," "Pulp Fiction" and "Fargo" — a trip to McCain for this production is a breath of fresh, clean spring air. This weekend, do yourself a favor and get thee to the theater.

SENATE

The question on the ballot read: "Would you be in favor of establishing an optional fee system?"

Senate would have had to draft a new bill that would place the optional fee question on the runoff ballot, because the original bill placed the question on the general-election ballot.

Faculty Representative Bill Muir said he agreed with the original bill, but he said introducing new legislation was pointless because Hansen would be able to veto the new legislation.

"He has the constitutional prerogative of holding it for eight days — i.e. Friday, next — which is beyond the date of the election," Muir said. "I'm not trying to put words in the president's mouth, but look at his actions that he took on the original bill."

Aaron Truax, veterinary medicine senator, said he was in favor of last week's bill but also said he agreed with Muir.

"Does the president have us over a barrel? In essence, we can pass it, and nothing can happen," Truax said.

Sean Tomb, arts and sciences senator, said optional fees were an important issue and the opinions of students needed to be known.

"Before the president was in office, for two straight years, optional fees was a huge issue," Tomb said. "I don't know where the president was when we saw that the last couple of years, but it's been out there, and people have talked about this issue.

"People know this issue," he said. "We've got to give the students a little bit of credit and let them have a chance to give their opinion on this issue, once and for all. Finally."

Shayne Costelano, arts and sciences senator, said the information gained was not valid enough to present to the Kansas Board of Regents.

"We don't decide on these fees," Castelano said. "What are we going to do with 5 percent of the student body's opinion? The apathy on this campus is pathetic."

Mandy Reese, arts and sciences senator, said that even if only 1,000 students voted in the runoff election, the information would have helped form an opinion of the students, and she said this term's Senate would not have been able to do anything about the vote.

"That's 1,000 votes I can't get myself," Reese said. "The Senate-elect will decide if they want to do anymore."

Nicole Johnson, arts and sciences senator, said she understood why Hansen vetoed the original resolution.

She said the questions were misleading and students did not have enough information to make a educated decision.

"Students don't see things the same way we do," she said.

Senate Allocations Chair Bret Glendening said it became evident students were not informed about issues while visiting student groups, and the information from the runoff election would have helped next year's Senate form an opinion about optional fees.

"These students get a paper every day, but they don't read it," Glendening said. "This was information this body can use in an effective manner next year."

In other business, Senate amended the honor system being considered by Faculty Senate.

Jeff Dougan, engineering senator, said Faculty Senate was offended by some of the language in the resolution.

"They saw that it was redundant and didn't need to be mentioned," he said. "They just didn't like the wording."

Senate also allocated funds to the college councils and 11 University Activities Board registered organizations.

read about Jennifer Lopez, who's playing Selena in the upcoming movie, or about Eleanor Choa the astronaut," she said. "This is something I want to read. We can look at our skin and say, 'This is a beautiful color.'"

Brought up in Houston Haubegger read women's magazines as a teen-ager, even though she never could find Hispanic models or any other representations of people who looked like her.

One of her friends, who was also Hispanic, would come over to read with Haubegger, she said, because her parents would not let her read them at home.

"She finally said to me, 'I know now why they won't let me read these,'" Haubegger said. "'They don't want me to find out I'm not really beautiful.' At that point, I started to think about the collective impact it must have on people."

Haubegger went on to get a Stanford law degree, keeping the idea in mind. The relatively limited effect she was able to make from her law practice frustrated her, Haubegger said. She decided to go forward with Latina, using the knowledge from business and accounting classes she had taken.

"I wanted to find something to do now, to make a difference now," she said. "If it didn't work, I figured I could go back to law."

Haubegger said she knocked on 300 doors looking for financial support from investors and got four replies of support.

"I had figured I needed between 5 and 7 million dollars to start," she said, "and in two years, I'd managed to raise $250,000. I thought, 'Great, I'll be wheeling around in a walker before the first issue gets published.'"

Haubegger said she was living on love and ice water, with her rent late and her phone being cut off regularly. She buckled down and tried selling her pitch to magazine publishers like Hearst and Time-Warner, she said.

Haubegger said she got a cool response until she called the publishers of Essence, a magazine for African-American women. Essence was interested in her idea, but knew nothing about the market for a Hispanic magazine, she said.

Eventually Haubegger convinced Essence to fund research, which began with focus groups.

"Basically we were paying Hispanic women $40 apiece to answer questions like, 'Would you be interested in a magazine for Hispanics?'" she said, "and they would in effect answer, 'Yes, dummy.'"

The research went on to pull all the Hispanic names from subscription lists of other magazines and send offers through the mail for Latina subscriptions at a discount.

"It was enough to convince them to subscribe, even without having seen the magazine," she said.

By the time the first issue was published, Latina had 9,500 subscribers, she said.

Haubegger said it was difficult to find Hispanic models for her magazine. She soon found modeling agencies don't hire many Hispanic models because they didn't get much work.

Once she asked an agency to send four Hispanic models, only to get a call back explaining the agency had only one blond Argentinean, and one Italian whom they thought could pass for Hispanic.

It took some time, but Latina has created a larger market for Hispanic models, she said.

Latina presents a different picture of America that exists in reality but doesn't exist on the covers of other magazines, she said.

"We don't mean to be revolutionary, but we are," Haubegger said.

times, Jones said. She said it was hard not to bring the court into the living room.

"It's funny, because we'll come home and say, 'We're not going to talk about basketball,' and then two seconds later, say 'Did you see this in practice?' We cannot stop talking about it," Jones said.

Fans cannot stop talking about this team either. Jones said well-wishers and people she has never met are e-mailing her with accolades of congratulations. She said she loves it.

"I just have to say something about how great the fans are," Jones said. "Having over 9,000 people at our senior game and then over 7,000 at the championship game was unbelievable."

Her only career regrets were not taking home the Big 12 Championship trophy and waiting until her senior year to play standout basketball.

"It was nice to compete for the championship, but it would have been so much nicer to have won it," Jones said. "I wish I'd have stepped it up a little earlier in my career and not waited until my senior year to really play."

Things in life happen for a reason, and Patterson said she is convinced Jones is a large contributor to the team's success this year.

"A.J. is one of the best players in the conference," Patterson said. "She's one of the main factors in the rise of the Kansas State basketball program."

Now she has the awards to prove it.

good advertisement for the company, but it also advertises to potential burglars," Crosby said. "Playing a stereo so it can be heard three blocks away is a heck of an advertisement."

Most burglars are fast and get away with what they want in a record time.

"It takes a matter of minutes, depending upon what he is stealing," Crosby said. "Most don't care if they damage the vehicle. They just don't want to damage the merchandise."

Burglars like dark evenings and cars that are parked in isolated spots that are not well-lighted.

Drawing attention to your vehicle with a car alarm is a deterrent in this area, Crosby said. It may not be in a larger city because people tend to be used to them and ignore them.

Most parking lots at apartment complexes in Manhattan are well-lighted Crosby said.

But most of them are not designed so a light pole can be placed in the middle of them.

is part of a larger effort.

"We created a climate in which the value of my colleagues and our cooperative effort allows us to work together and listen to each other," Langenkamp said.

Charlotte MacFarland, professor of speech, has worked with Langenkamp as a graduate student performer and then as a co-director. She said his role as a teacher, mentor and friend has contributed to the close relationship between the music and theater departments.

She further cites his warmth, patience and vision as central to the opera program flourishing at K-State.

"He's just wonderful. He's always kind and nothing gets him ruffled. It's real easy, doing what we do, for tempers to flare, but his never does," MacFarland said. "Each production is deeply important to him, and he cares personally about the quality of the work."

Students have the opportunity to work with a teacher who understands the needs of a vocal performer, Chad Pape, senior in music education, said.

"We are all convinced he thinks about all his students all the time, because he knows each voice and the parts and how they fit," Pape said. "He's just kind of a rock. He's supportive and there for you."

"Die Fledermaus" is Pape's third opera with Langenkamp.

"The show I'll remember most is this one, because we all went in knowing it would be his last," Pape said.

Langenkamp said he will miss having the cooperative colleagues, great theaters and talented students to do the large operatic productions.

"Everyone has put their shoulder to the wheel to make each production work," Langenkamp said. "I thought about this for 10 years. I kept saying, if I retire now, I won't be able to see so-and-so through their recital. But finally, I realized there's no easy time to leave."

Leaving for Bosnia

BRANDON WHITE/Collegian

STAFF SGT. MERIT WILLIAMS and his wife Julie spend a few moments together before Williams leaves for Bosnia Friday. Two-hundred-ten soldiers were deployed from Fort Riley to assist in Operation Joint Guard.

The reality of deployment

STORY BY TANYA NISLY

▶ 210 FORT RILEY TROOPS begin trek to Bosnia to join peace-keeping forces.

FORT RILEY — Troops from Task Force 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry were deployed for Bosnia to help with Operation Joint Guard Friday.

There were 210 troops deployed with two more deployments scheduled for Tuesday and Friday.

The troops will stop in Germany before going to Bosnia for four days to test their equipment and to screen tanks to make sure everything is working properly.

Troops driving tanks have a 150-mile, three-day trip to reach their destination. The trip takes three days because the tanks only go about 30 mph, but this does not mean they will be uncomfortable for the entire trip.

"It's kinda like sitting in a lawn chair," Ken Blaisdell, tank driver, said.

A common statement from the troops preparing to leave was one of curiosity to see what awaited them.

"I'm anxious to get over there and see what it's like. I know there are a lot of hazards. We've trained to keep away from the hazards and keep safe," Blaisdell said about the worry of the mines in Bosnia.

The farewell ceremony that the Task Force received was different from the farewell received by troops going to Vietnam.

"Nobody told us goodbye. We pulled out at 4 a.m. on a Sunday," Roy Williams, past state commander and member of Veterans of Foreign Wars, said. "We decided to change all that. We've all been there. We've all done that. We all remember."

Williams came to the ceremony to give out AT&T phone cards to the troops being deployed. The VFW and the Ladies

The difficulty of leaving

STORY BY HEATHER HOLLINGSWORTH

▶ TROOPS LEAVE FRIENDS AND families to serve their country in foreign land.

FORT RILEY — James Traxler was able to watch his 8-month-old daughter get up on all fours Thursday night, but he won't be there to hear her say "daddy" for the first time or take her first tentative steps.

"We were hoping she would say 'mommy' or 'daddy' before he left," Gina Traxler said. "When he gets back, she'll be walking and talking."

Traxler, along with some 200 other members of Task Force 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, were deployed for Bosnia Friday afternoon in support of Operation Joint Guard. The soldiers were bussed to Topeka Friday. From Topeka the soldiers will fly to Germany and travel to Hungary to complete their final preparation before going into Bosnia.

With long hours and little time off, training has frequently kept soldiers away from their families. However, soldiers were granted leave two days before deployment to spend time with their families.

Private Garland Ellenburg said the transition from preparing for deployment and actually leaving has been difficult for his family.

"With the training and everything like that we did, that took away a lot of time with our families. Then suddenly rushing into a deployment like this is kind of hard," Ellenburg said. "Most units take anywhere from four to six months, and we did it in two."

Ellenburg said he had mixed feelings about the deployment.

"The military side of me is gung ho," he said. "The other side of me is really hating life right now."

8th-graders face changes in college-prep classes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — High-school freshmen planning to attend a state university in Kansas must, beginning this fall, take courses aimed at preparing them for college.

Education officials have made the preparatory curriculum changes, but the list of high-school courses needed to meet the new admission standards falls short of a recommendation by the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

Under the new rules, Kansas universities will require students to meet state minimum standards for a high-school diploma, plus take another year of math, computer science and science, including physics.

But students failing to meet those standards can still get into a state university with a decent ACT score, a ranking in the top third of their graduating class or just some good luck.

State Rep. Ralph Tanner, R-Baldwin, who shepherded the qualified admissions bill through the Legislature last year, acknowledged that Kansas' admission standards are hardly strict.

"It really doesn't capture as much as it should in the way of academic rigor," said Tanner, former president of Baker University.

Given the deep resistance to any kind of admission standards, the standards approved by the Legislature last year are better than nothing at all, he said.

Passage of the legislation removed Kansas' peculiarity as the only state university system in the nation without admission standards.

The new requirements are being phased in along with the advent of qualified admissions, which start with the graduating class of 2001, this year's eighth-graders.

Students who want to attend a state university must complete a college preparatory curriculum with at least a 2.0 grade point average, considered a C average.

But they also can gain admission to a regents university by scoring a 21 on the American College Testing exam — the state average is 21.3 — or by ranking in the top third of their high-school class, no matter what courses they took.

If a student fails to meet any of those standards, the state law allows each university to exempt up to 10 percent of its freshman class from the requirements.

If a student fails to make the 10-percent group, he or she can apply to a state university at age 21 or older and face no admission requirements.

1st Gold Fork restaurant opens in Manhattan

BRANDON ROMBERGER

Grilled steaks, zesty pasta and 160 other items await Manhattan residents at the first Gold Fork restaurant in the nation.

Branching off from the Ground Round franchise, a casual dining chain with restaurants in the upper Midwest opens today, and is next to the Ramada Plaza Hotel at the corner of 17th Street and Anderson Avenue.

Because of the close proximity to the campus, Ron Pittwood, general manager of the restaurant, said he expects to get a lot of business from students and faculty.

He said K-State students make up 60 percent of the 150 people working at the restaurant.

"There are a lot good things in Manhattan because of the University. There are great people to work with," Pittwood said.

He said the Gold Fork does not fit into any category that compares to other restaurants.

"It's a casual dining concept, and I feel we offer something for everybody with the amount and range of items we have on the menu," he said.

The Gold Fork doesn't plan to have any lunch specials when opening.

"We will just run off the regular menu to start. An average entree time will be 12 minutes," he said.

The Gold Fork is planning to develop a breakfast menu a month after opening. A summer menu is also being planned.

While the menu is broad, Pittwood said he feel the prices are reasonable.

Appetizers will cost between $3 and $7. Salads will be between $5 and $7.50, and main dishes will cost between $5 and $15.

The restaurant will also offer hamburgers and deli sandwiches with 25 different toppings to customize each sandwich.

"If you can't find something to eat on this menu, then you are not hungry," Pittwood said.

The Gold Fork also will offer a full bar. It will have 12 different beers on tap, and Pittwood said they will serve domestic beer along with some beers unavailable anywhere else in Manhattan.

Pittwood said he expects a good reception from the community, and said he is excited about what the restaurant will bring and offer to Manhattan.

"I think the timing for opening the restaurant was good," he said.

"I think Manhattan is a good community to open your first restaurant. We'll offer a better menu, attractive building and good service that's friendly, personable and memorable," Pittwood said.

PICK UP APPLICATIONS TO BE A BUSINESS AMBASSADOR

▶ Applications for Business Ambassadors are available in Calvin 107. They are due Friday.

▶ 24 HOURS IN REVIEW

These briefs encapsulate the news of the past 24 hours, and they are from staff reports, wire reports and other news services.

▶ STATE, NATION AND WORLD

• U.S.-RUSSIA SUMMIT DELAYED A DAY FOR CLINTON RECOVERY.

WASHINGTON — The White House announced Sunday that President Clinton will postpone his Helsinki summit meeting with Russian President Boris Yeltsin by one day in order to give Clinton an additional day to recuperate from his knee surgery.

The meetings will be Thursday and Friday.

In Moscow, the Kremlin press service announced the summit was pushed back a day by mutual agreement and said the delay was made necessary by Clinton's recovery from knee surgery.

• 4 KILLED IN PLANE COLLISION OVER WISCONSIN.

MANITOWOC, Wis. — Two small planes crashed into each other 700 feet above the snow-covered ground, killing the owner and three employees of a company that reconditions aircraft.

The two airplanes owned by Basler Turbo Conversions and Flight Service collided during a test flight Saturday in eastern Wisconsin. Pieces of metal scattered in fields for at least a mile.

Company owner Warren Basler and materials manager Dave Schacherl were killed, said company President Thomas Weigt. The names of the two other Basler employees killed were not released.

Authorities and Weigt said a twin-engine DC-3 collided with a single-engine Beechcraft Bonanza.

• CHARGE FILED IN COSBY SLAYING; TEEN MAY FACE DEATH PENALTY.

LOS ANGELES — The young Russian immigrant who could face the death penalty if convicted of killing Ennis Cosby was an above-average student who struggled to fit in, aspired to be a gang member and spent time in a juvenile camp, classmates and school officials said.

Mikail Markhasev, 18, was charged with murder Friday for the slaying of Cosby, 27, the only son of entertainer Bill Cosby. Markhasev was also charged with attempted robbery and use of a firearm during commission of a crime.

He did not enter a plea and will be held without bail until his next court appearance March 28.

• JORDAN'S KING HUSSEIN JOINS ISRAELIS IN THEIR MOURNING.

BEIT SHEMESH, Israel — Jordan's King Hussein knelt in mourning Sunday with the families of seven Israeli schoolgirls gunned down by a Jordanian soldier and said they were all members of one family.

Hussein's rare visit, intended to re-establish the credibility of Jordan and its leader as peacemakers, came at the lowest point in relations between Jordan and Israel since the two countries made peace in 1994.

The shootings of seven girls on a school trip along the northern Israel-Jordan border is a crime that is a shame for all of us, Hussein said.

• 3 FOUND DEAD IN APPARENT SHOOTINGS AT GARDEN CITY.

GARDEN CITY — Two adults and a child died in an apparent shooting at a Garden City residence, officials said.

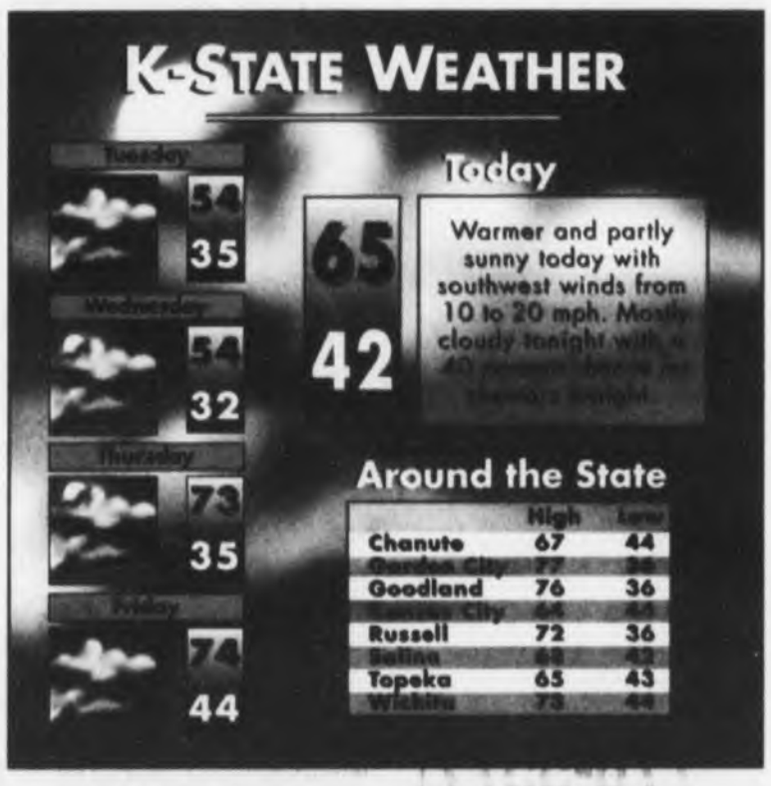
Police responded to a call at mid-morning Saturday that a man had been shot at a home in the southeast part of the city, Capt. Charles Armentrout said.

The bodies found in the house were those of a man, a woman and small child, he said.

• POLICE INVESTIGATE CRIPS IN DEATHS OF 2 RAPPERS.

NEW YORK — The Crips, a violent street gang with roots in Los Angeles, is under investigation in the deaths of rappers Tupac Shakur and the Notorious B.I.G., Time magazine reported.

Police in Las Vegas believe a member of the Crips was responsible for the Sept. 7 drive-by shooting of Shakur, 25, near the Las Vegas Strip, Time said in its March 24 edition, due out this week.



Crips hired as bodyguards are under investigation in the March 9 drive-by killing in Los Angeles of The Notorious B.I.G., whose real name was Christopher Wallace, Time said, citing unidentified sources.

ALBERTINA WALKER sings Friday night in All Faiths Chapel. Walker, singing for the first time at K-State, performed traditional gospel music.

Gospel singer entertains All Faiths audience

She performed in the movie "Leap of Faith" with Steve Martin. In 1995, she won a Grammy Award for the Best Traditional Gospel Album, "Songs of the Church." She's been a guest on "Bobby Jones Gospel Hour" on Black Entertainment Television.

Friday night in All Faiths Chapel, more than 500 people gathered to hear Albertina Walker sing for the first time at K-State.

The event was partially in observation of Women's History Month and Black History Month.

The United Black Voices of K-State opened the performance. People lined the back walls and filled the aisles to watch the choir.

Amanda Rodriguez, a member of UBV, said Walker was an inspiration.

"It's a great, great honor. You can see how much God has used her life and talent," Rodriguez said. "When we were singing, I heard her say 'Praise the Lord,' or 'Sing it girl.'"

Walker sat in a chair on the stage and listened as the singers honored her life and works through song.

Leander Sharpe sang "Wind Beneath My Wings" with the aid of a instrumental sextet to the chorus of amens from the audience.

The final performance before Walker sang was a tribute to Walker. Four young women sang songs that Walker had recorded throughout her singing career. These included "Let Jesus Come Into Your Heart" and "I Will Wait On You."

Before she sang, Walker was presented with a framed letter written by President Jon Wefald, which noted her many accomplishments and welcomed her to the campus. The letter cited Walker as a historical image and an ambassador of gospel music.

Walker intertwined a mix of preaching and gospel music for a powerful testimony.

Audience members stood when Walker began to sing. A few people danced in the aisles to the music of Walker and her protégée, Faith Howard.

Howard recently produced her first compact disc of gospel music. She sang a stirring rendition of "Amazing Grace."

"God has brought me through so many things," Howard said.

The Fellowship Temple and St. Paul Church choirs joined Walker to sing a chorus of "Lord We Thank You."

Walker has been nominated 11 times for the Grammy Award.

"I did win one Grammy. I didn't believe it was me they was calling," Walker said. "When they called me, I didn't even know my name."

More recently, Walker lost the Grammy to Cissy Houston, a well-known gospel singer and the mother of Whitney Houston.

"They gave that Grammy award to Cissy Houston. I'm still trying to figure out why they did that," Walker said. "I still don't understand how Cissy Houston got that award."

Walker said she felt it was an achievement to be nominated.

"It was a great feeling for your peers to nominate you," Walker said. "It's the highest award in music."

James Boyer was the event coordinator for the concert.

"She is my absolute favorite," Boyer said. "It was a celebration."

Walker led a quintet called Caravans for 20 years, from 1953 to 1973, where she earned the nickname "Miss Caravan."

"Her personnel would change, but she managed to keep that same sound," Boyer said.

Walker has performed at Carnegie Hall in New York, as well as the Lincoln Center for Sorority celebrates 50th year of activity

HEATHER PERKINS
staff reporter

The K-State chapter of Alpha Chi Omega celebrated its 50th anniversary Friday through Sunday.

The sorority had anniversary festivities during the weekend, and 620 alumnae and active members attended.

Six charter members from the first pledge class and one founder member who helped establish the chapter at K-State also attended.

Heather Lies, alumnae chair, said that people from across the nation were expected to be in attendance.

"From north, south, east and west. It's really exciting. We've been planning this all year, and now we finally get to see it all coming together," Lies said.

Stephanie Laudemann, alumna from White City, made the trip back for the celebration.

"I came back to see my friends. I'm excited to see everyone and see that they are adding onto the house. I hope this celebration will get more people involved with alumnae and the group. I think it's a great idea," Laudemann said.

Tara Elbl, junior in wildlife biology, was glad she had the chance to meet Alpha Chis who were at K-State in the past.

"It's a wonderful opportunity for all the active members to meet alumnae of the past 50 years. It all shows us how large it is and how special it is that we can be a part of it," Elbl said.

The Red Carnation Banquet and Golden Lyre Ball took place Saturday night at the Holidome. Alpha Chi members from every decade of the chapter's existence reminisced about how times and the sorority have changed through the years.

"It was really interesting. I think it gave a deeper meaning to the whole idea of Alpha Chi to see the history behind it," Dawn Myers, senior in apparel and textile marketing, said.

"There was a really good turnout, and everybody had a good time," she said.

COLUMNS are opinions expressed by the columnists. The opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the Collegian.

Considering pay raise pathetic for part-time legislative work

At a time when many students will consider themselves lucky to graduate and make $18,000 for a full year's worth of work, it's pathetic to see legislators even considering a pay raise from $18,596 to $35,697 a year for most legislators for their four months of in-session time.

On Thursday, the House Calendar and Printing Committee approved sponsorship of a bill that would give legislators full-time compensation for their part-time political jobs. The committee members include House personnel like the speaker, majority leader and minority leader.

The proposal would add at least $2.8 million to the Legislature's annual budget. At a time of rising tuition at Kansas Board of Regents' universities, educational cuts and increased crime, this hardly seems like a budget priority.

The only good coming out of this bill is a provision in the proposal that includes a ban on gifts, including meals, drinks and snacks, from lobbyists to legislators.

If this isn't a political move, what is? Reforms dealing with lobbyists are needed and should take place without an ulterior motive of buttering up voters so they'll support this bill.

Contact your legislators, and let them know your opinion.

"Treat us gently," Speaker Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, told reporters after the committee's action.

Good luck, Shallenburgher.

• EDITORIAL BOARD MISSES KEY QUESTIONS.

Editor,

I was extremely disappointed in Thursday's editorial regarding the possible impeachment of a senator. I agreed with the position of the Editorial Board, that the actions of that senator in this incident did not justify impeachment.

I take very serious offense, however, to the suggestion of conflict of interest, which the editorial insinuated.

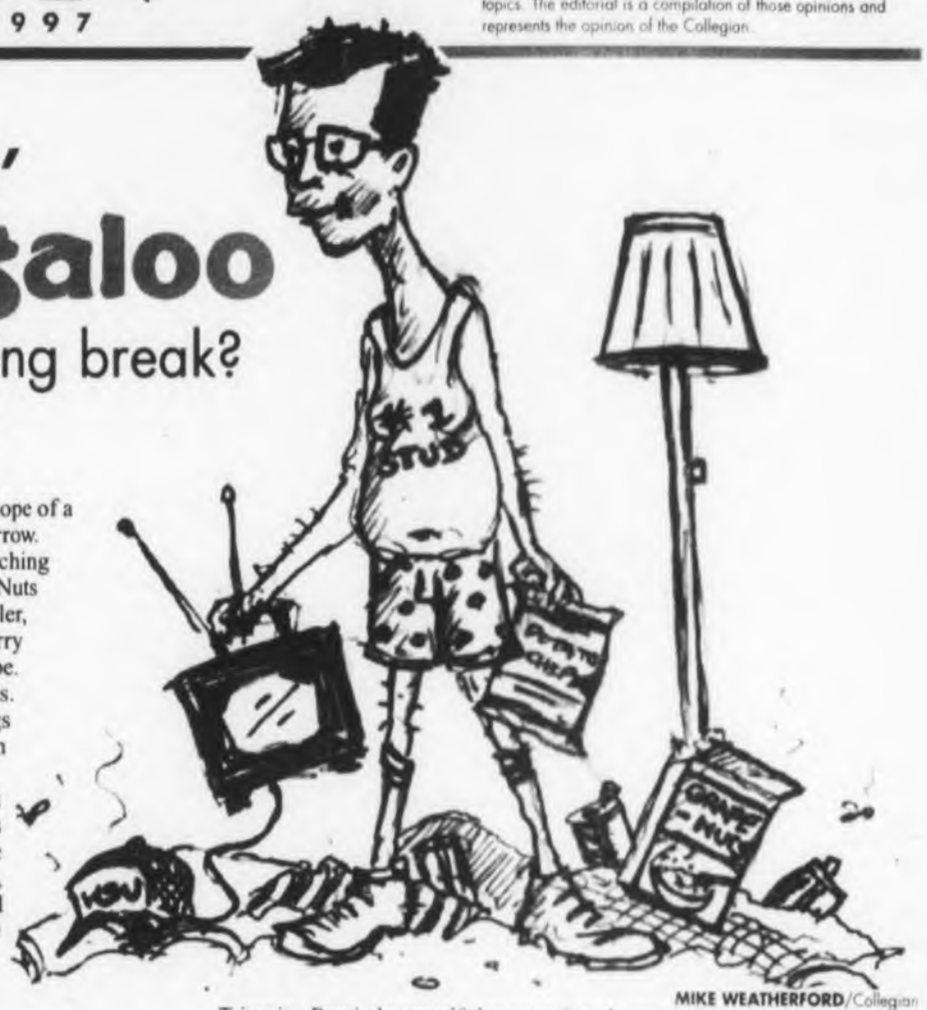
The implication of the Board's column was that certain officers of the executive and legislative branches were not professional enough to set aside their personal feelings on a subject regarding which they may have had an opinion.

I find the failure of the Editorial Board to give those officers the benefit of the doubt in the execution of their duties to be inexcusable.

The actions the Senate Operations Committee took in its special session bear me out. I would like to publicly commend Senate Chair Aubrey Abbott, Senate Operations Chair Sam Halabi and the whole of Senate Operations Committee for their professional handling of a sensitive matter.

Further, I would like to commend Senator Sean Tomb. While I agree with neither the content of his advertisement nor the manner in which he pursued it, his advertisement raised several questions regarding the future of campaigning for student government offices at K-State.

Should such ads, sponsored by no candidate or party, be considered in any expenditure guidelines?



If not, does that facilitate negative campaigning, by imposing an expenditure limit on positive ads run by candidates and parties, while imposing no such limit upon individuals not aligned with any candidate who choose, for whatever reason, to run ads which make only negative mention of candidates?

Is this the direction in which we want to encourage campaigning at K-State? Those were the questions Thursday's editorial should have addressed.

spring breakin' electric boogaloo

Not going anywhere for spring break? Here's what to do

MIKE WEATHERFORD/Collegian

Drip.
Drip.

Ahhh ... the sound of the drool of 20,325 students dripping from their gaping mouths, counting the minutes left until spring break (which is roughly 7,200). And what a glorious sound it is.

If you're like me, your plans for spring break are sparse due to supporting your habit of eating and your affection for electricity.

There will be no bikini-clad days spent bounding down the sandy shores of South Padre Island, no drunken nights spent stumbling down Bourbon Street. At best, we will sleep until 1 p.m. and spend our nights with the WB and a pack of Natural Light.

But it doesn't have to be this way. Nay! It WON'T be this way! I am proud to bestow upon you, the poor, huddled masses of K-State — "Let's Go! A Day-by-Day Guide to Livin' Large During Spring Break '97."

Saturday: Rise early, eager to get a start on this glorious realm of a week of freedom. Tell yourself those poor schmoes who went somewhere are probably miserable from all of that uncomfortable traveling. Smile smugly.

Have yourself a nice, fat bowl of Grape-Nuts Cereal, and with each labored chew, think about how much happier your colon is going to be than your partying cohorts' come spring break's end.

Once the cereal is down, keep with this healthy trend by going for a jog. Scamper down the street. Convince yourself that this is way better than anything you've ever seen on MTV about spring break.

When you happen by Sonic Drive-In, reward your good habits with some tater tots — regular size, not large, of course. Hop into a Sonic patron's car after offering them half of your tots for a ride five blocks back to your place.

Once back home, decide that you have done more than enough for one day. Tune into whatever wacky programming is on television.

Realize, with much sadness, that you haven't watched Saturday night television since "Golden Girls," "Empty Nest" and "Nurses" graced the NBC line-up. Retire, with hope of a bigger and better day tomorrow.

Sunday: Due to clenching bowels, forgo the Grape-Nuts for a strawberry wine cooler, reasoning that the strawberry is simply replacing the grape. Flip through the channels. Wrestle with guilty feelings when all that's on are dial-in prayer programs.

Consider calling in with the prayer that your chums are having a worse time than you over in Daytona, Fla. Change your mind when you find out it's a 900 number.

With a sudden surge of ambition, decide to renovate your entire collection of Dungeons and Dragons figures. Stop your polishing on Tass and Sturm of Dragonlance when one of the High Elves starts speaking to you. Vow never to eat Grape-Nuts again.

As nighttime rolls around, decide to hit every bar in Manhattan, and hopefully, hook up with a member of the sex of your preference. Proceed to get kicked out of every bar in Manhattan due to your inability to properly schmooze.

Monday: Wake up under your bed. Wonder about how you got there, then realize that it's a pretty comfortable place to be. Go back to sleep.

Crawl out from under the bed when the phone starts ringing. In a blurry fog, sign up for Sears vinyl siding. Think about your schmucky, partying friends. They don't have vinyl siding, now do they? Smile smugly.

In lieu of clothing, put on some beach wear and head out to the sand volleyball courts at Sonic. Pretend you're John Sencio on Beach MTV. Remind the Sonic employees of your recent tater tot purchase when they kick you out.

Tuesday: Decide to go fancy on your cuisine for the day by making little pizzas out of Triscuits. Remind yourself that your friends are probably broke by now because they aren't eating little pizzas made out of Triscuits. Applaud your frugality.

Pull out an old Rush album. Listen to "Closer to the Heart" and "Lakeside Park," trying to convince yourself that it really is a guy singing. Call a friend to discuss the matter. When a heated shouting match ensues, slam the phone down and throw the album against the wall. Cry.

Wednesday-Friday: Repeat Tuesday, alternating different bands with ambiguous lead singers, such as Culture Club, the Indigo Girls (but only argue about Amy, not Emily) and Firehouse.

Saturday: Wake up at 1 p.m. Spend your day with a case of Natural Light and "Homeboys in Outer Space." Get too worked up over "Babylon 5" when you realize Capt. John Sheridan used to be on "Scarecrow and Mrs. King." Drink the entire case of beer and a six-pack of Tab. Pass out during "Mad TV."

Sunday: Wake up in a puddle of your own drool. Savor the bitter irony. Smile smugly as your Sears siding arrives.

I'm giving you a running start.

This is your warning to lock the doors and stay off the roads.

Beware of rental cars. My family is coming.

They rise from their factions of the country, the east coast and the not-so-east coast, to endure a rather last-minute gathering of lost souls somehow relevant to the exchange of denomination-less vows.

Fret not.

Obviously it is not I who would ever consider changing my name to anything other than "Servant of Krishna," or "Dances with Deadlines," and no terrestrial creature could ever convince me to wear white unless guns were involved.

PAGE GETZ

It is my twin sister.

I'll be the one in the ugly dress standing next to her.

I guess that is where twin sisters become really useful.

She can do everything I would never consider doing and tell me what I'm not missing. And I wear the ugly dresses.

We've had it planned out since our 5-year-old after-hours when the future seemed too important to sleep through.

She planned to be a veterinarian, get married, have kids and possibly a zoo.

I would be a rock star and would never marry unless Luke Skywalker was in the market and would be traveling too often to ever settle down.

That's if the aliens didn't come for me first and if she didn't just drop dead, which we were sure was more likely.

Things really haven't changed that much.

Although she was the one who spent four years following the Grateful Dead after dropping out of high school, and I was actually the first to settle into therapy, finding shelter in the 12-step network after being kicked out of high school, the basic roles have remained the same.

She's getting as settled as one with our genes could settle and I'm getting less and less settled all the time.

It's been a long time since my whole family, all four of us, including my sister, Tracy, my brother, Chase, my mom and I have been in the same room together.

The neurotic potential will probably be the topic of therapy sessions for months to come.

For my mother it will be the first time she will see all of her kids under the influence of no illegal or addictive chemicals at the same time. (That's if you don't count excessive consumption of coffee, Midol and anti-depressants.)

Chase will be camping out on my futon. He is the only creature of the human persuasion I've encountered that can match my insomnia and we will stay up all night compulsively psychoanalyzing the family with no conclusions.

It's one of our only family traditions.

And he and I always bond by scoping chicks, something my mother and Tracy never had much interest or tolerance for.

There are some inevitables that will, with the grace of the Goddess, not result in police intervention or hospitalization.

Chase hasn't yet adjusted to my mother's loss of interest in taking orders from him, via assertiveness training.

Tracy and I can't seem to discuss the weather without one of us hanging up on the other or speaking in a less-than-principled manner.

And although my mother won't let us take it out on her anymore, she's still going to try to fix us, quoting various self-help books, not including "Co-Dependent No More."

Her tactics, while usually ineffective, are strikingly unpredictable and creative.

There was a Friday night when I was 12, shortly after my parents divorced and when accordingly, my mother was broke, when Tracy, some friends and I were deeply jarred by boredom.

Without explaining what the hell we were doing, she took us on a tour of Wichita escalators. The highlight was the Holiday Inn's glass elevator overlooking a riveting mesh of neon from car lots and fast-food joints.

Although boredom was the least traumatic of the traumas my mother had to medicate, she always managed to come up with something so bizarre, confusing or just senseless, we easily lost interest in our dramas.

This wedding business could possibly be the most normal thing my family has ever participated in, with the exception of my first encounter with a church.

I was 10 when my mother announced that the Easter bunny was broke and we were going to have to resort to a church for loot, which seemed a bit abnormal and suspicious at the time, but looking back was one of the more traditional things we did growing up.

I've tried to focus on the positives.

Fortunately, for my mother, there is waterproof mascara. And I get to throw something at my sister — even if it is just rice.

But all I know is when she throws that bouquet, I'm running for cover.

Bowlers compete during weekend to benefit Big Brothers/Big Sisters

KARA LOWE
staff reporter

Laughter and bowling balls crashing into pins could be heard Sunday during the Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Manhattan Bowl for Kids' Sake at the K-State Student Union bowling alley.

About 500 bowlers participated in the two-day event, which was also on Saturday at Memory Lanes in Manhattan.

Participants asked sponsors to donate a flat pledge or a certain amount of money per pin bowled. The funds are used for program expenses for Big Brothers/Big Sisters such as recruiting and screening volunteers.

"The donations from the event directly impact the ability to serve the children in Manhattan. We are hoping that we will raise 35 percent of the annual budget this weekend," Tami Carolan, caseworker for Big Brothers/Big Sisters, said.

Jarrett Grosdidier, senior in predentistry and biology, said he has participated in the Bowl for Kids' Sake every year since he was matched with his younger brother almost three years ago.

"I decided to participate because it is something my little brother likes to do, and it's for a great cause," Grosdidier said.

"Big Brothers/Big Sisters is such a good thing for everyone involved. There's so much good that comes out of it because it benefits the kids. This makes it all the more worthwhile to do it," he said.

Jill Livingston, senior in social science and social work, has been involved in the event since she was matched with her 9-year-old sister two years ago. She said her little sister's life has improved because her grades have gone up, and she can talk about problems.

"I participate in the Bowl for Kids' Sake because I know Big Brothers/Big Sisters needs the donations, and I try to raise as much as I can for them," she said.

Many K-State student organizations participate in the event to help the Big Brothers/Big Sisters raise funds.

Members of Golden Key National Honor Society participate every year. Besides getting donations from friends and family, the organization makes a donation as well.

"Part of what Golden Key does is try to make a positive impact on the community. Participating in the Bowl for Kids' Sake is one way we do this," Michelle Fore, senior in economics and president of Golden Key, said. "It's also a lot of fun. We get to interact with some of the kids and do something that is beneficial for them."

Cory Pfeifer, senior in chemistry and member of Smith Scholarship House, participated in the event with other members from his house.

"I have participated in the Bowl for Kids' Sake for three years and encouraged members of Smith to participate this year. It's good to do something like this that is a lot of fun and helps other people," Pfeifer said.

Eight-year-old Shanika Hardridge bowled with her big sister Michelle Swanson, senior in biology.

"I am very excited about bowling today. One of the things I like best about Big Brothers/Big Sisters is being with my big sister," Hardridge said.

Social worker stresses local action

Local action is the lifeblood of social work, said Josephine Nieves, the executive director of the National Association of Social Workers, at a conference of the Kansas chapter Friday in Manhattan.

Honored at the reception in the presidential awards for exceptional dedication in advocating for the profession were Brenda Hanger, the chairperson of the Kansas Committee on Women's Issues; Carl Meyer, professor of social work at Washburn University; and Bernice Hutcherson, recently retired professor of social work at Wichita State University.

Nieves, previously an appointee on President Clinton's committee for the JobCorps program, discussed obstacles in social services including privatization of child care, lack of job security and the long-term problems exacerbated by short-term solutions.

She said one-fourth of the nation's children live in poverty, 40 percent of children of color live in poverty, and in 1994 alone, 3-million children were treated for abuse or neglect. In contrast, Nieves said, corporate profits are at a record high.

"Polarization between the haves and the have-nots is higher than it's been in 40 years," she said.

Nieves said it was important for social workers to identify themselves as such, because many work in fields where the significance of social work is not recognized.

She said 200 social workers hold elected office, four in congress. Nieves also noted that half of the nation's mental health services are provided by social workers, who are often the only sources of such services available to rural Americans.

Nieves urged members to rekindle the activism in organizing.

"I think that social workers are America's heroes and probably one of this nation's best kept secrets," she said.

Exhibits from the K-State Department of Social Work, Varney's Book Store, the Menninger Clinic and Pawnee Mental Health were all represented in displays, and it was a record attendance for a state conference.

Several students from universities across the state attended the conference, including K-State social work students.

"It was good to have someone from the national level. Her statistics were really shocking," said Dannon McMullen, senior in social work and family studies.

"She had interesting things to say about the statistics, and that it's not just a national problem. It's a local problem, and everyone should get involved at every level," McMullen said.

Newsweek reports McVeigh confession

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Timothy McVeigh admitted his involvement in the Oklahoma City bombing during a lie detector test given by his lawyers, Newsweek reports in this week's edition.

But McVeigh failed a question about whether all his co-conspirators are known to investigators, and that might suggest that others were involved in the bombing plot, the magazine said.

The report of the test is attributed to anonymous sources close to the investigation.

"McVeigh confirmed his role in blowing up the Murrah building," the magazine said. " ... There is even fresh confusion about whether the FBI has tracked down all the members of the conspiracy."

It said some federal investigators think the lie detector story might be just a ploy by McVeigh's lawyer, Stephen Jones, to sow confusion before the trial begins.

FBI spokesman Paul Bresson in Washington declined to comment on the report Sunday.

Jones also declined to comment on the report, the magazine says.

Two other purported McVeigh confessions have upset defense attorneys. They contend the confessions reported by the Dallas Morning News and Playboy magazine in the past two weeks have jeopardized the jury pool.

Last week, they asked U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch to throw the case out of court, delay McVeigh's March 31 trial for a year, or move it out of Colorado. There was no indication when the judge would rule.

Jones said he was not optimistic the judge would grant any of his requests.

"We felt in order to protect Mr. McVeigh's rights we needed to file these motions," he told the Denver Post for Sunday's editions. "We'd love to have one of three granted, but we're preparing for trial March 31."

Mission statement urges conviction, insightfulness in journalism, column writing

VIEWPOINT

TODD STEWART

TODD STEWART is a junior in secondary education/English. You can e-mail comments to Todd at (toddvs@ksu.edu).

It might be a little overdone now, but let's call this my mission statement.

Journalism is the greatest profession in the world, but it is not for the faint of heart.

The job of a columnist is not to make friends or make enemies. The columnist only has one task — to say something.

I'll repeat that because that is the heart of it. Just say something.

A columnist who offers nothing to stir up emotions, feeling, reflection or inspiration does the entire profession a terrible injustice. See, days and days go by, and there is nothing out there. Open up the paper and all you have are writers regurgitating information and thoughts they heard somewhere else.

Those columnists hear something, slightly alter it to make it fit their belief system, and then run with it.

And when a writer offers the reader nothing new, nothing insightful, the purest profession in the world is soiled.

And those stains are not easily removed.

All they need to do is say something. Say anything.

Offer something new. Say something no one else says. Say what is in your heart. Say something that goes untalked about. Just say it.

This isn't as easy as it sounds, but it is how it is done.

You won't always make friends. You will make enemies. People will respond.

But something was said.

Develop a personality in the writing. With that, let the personality flow from the writing. And while you do that, say something.

It's not easy. It's not easy at all, but if a columnist is looking for an easy way out, this is not the profession for him.

It's not about being politically correct, or doing what people expect. It's not about making people happy. It's about making people think.

It's not about seeing how far you can push something or the number of letters to the editor that can be generated. Those things are inconsequential. If it happens in the course of the writing, then so be it, but it is not an objective.

> Sooner or later, people will realize how great it is to read someone's work that is actually saying somthing. Those writers are few and far between, and love them or hate them, that is what it is all about.

The point is no one has to agree. The only one who has to believe in what appears in print is the author. Not even the paper has to agree.

If the editor doesn't like it, maybe that is for the best. If an editor is intent on changing it to fit the belief system of the paper, fight for the work.

It is that editor who kills the creative process. It is that person in management who then soils the profession.

Those are the deepest stains of all.

Don't let the politics behind the system kill the fire inside. People will come around.

Sooner or later, people will realize how great it is to read someone's work that is actually saying something.

Those writers are few and far between, and love them or hate them, that is what it is all about.

Maybe the column will anger the reader. Maybe the column will make the reader laugh. Maybe someone will cry.

All the emotions in the world right there at the writer's fingertips, and all that has to be done to capture that emotion is saying something.

I'll take a writer who angers me on a daily basis every day of the week over someone without an opinion, without conviction. Someone who makes the reader think is the most powerful writer in the world.

It is so simple. All the writer has to do is capture it and run with it.

It's right there in black and white in three words.

Just say something.

In its 72-50 loss via St. Joseph's, the Cats hit the End of the road

K-STATE SENIORS Missy Decker, left, and Andria Jones listen to questions from reporters after the Wildcats' loss to the St. Joseph's Hawks in the first round of the women's NCAA Tournament in Tuscaloosa, Ala., Friday. The 70-52 loss was the final game for the seniors.

Second-half spurt buries K-State's bid for upset

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — In the Big Dance, the K-State women's basketball team did the bump and the hustle but couldn't prance into the second round, dropping a 70-52 decision to St. Joseph's.

"This win should quiet a lot of the doubters," Hawk forward Megan Compain said. "We heard from a lot of different sources that we were picked to lose this game."

The first half of the game, Compain might have been right.

The Cats were a step behind the Hawks most of the first half, exchanging leads five times. But with four minutes, 51 seconds to go, center Angie Finkes brought the Cats within two.

The Cats continued to trade baskets with the Hawks and exercised a two-point lead when forward Andria Jones nailed a jumper. Jones again hit another jumper and gave K-State a two-point lead at the half.

Offensively, the Cats were solid in the first half shooting 61 percent from the field.

Unfortunately, the Hawks noticed. Hawk coach Stephanie Gaitley said putting guard Melissa Coursey on Jones in the second half began the defensive pressure the Hawks were looking for.

"We knew we needed to put a little more pressure on Jones," Gaitley said. "We had to make her work to get the ball, because every time she did, she would score with a hand in her face."

The Cats did not score until four minutes into the second half. By that time, the Hawks had jumped to a six-point lead.

"Their players were aggressive during the first three or four minutes of the second half," Patterson said. "It set the pace of the game, and they had a great offensive performance in the second half."

The Hawks were shooting well from the perimeter, and a trey by guard Amy Facer at the 13:19 mark put the Hawks up by 10.

Jones put up a trey of her own to cut the lead to seven, but Compain answered with a bucket.

She then incurred a technical foul. Jones hit both charity shots and cut the lead to seven again, but Patterson said the Cats missed their opportunity.

"The technical was an opportunity to gain some momentum," Patterson said. "It was just that kind of night, and we didn't have an ounce of momentum in the second half."

Toward the middle of the half, K-State hit a dry-spell offensively and the Hawks went on a seven-point run that put St. Joseph's in command for good, 62-50.

"We weren't getting good looks at the basket," Jones said. "When we were, we weren't taking them."

The Hawks outscored K-State 8-2 in the last minute to account for the final tally.

St. Joseph's pressure defense held the Cats to 33 percent shooting from the field in the second half, and the Cats were 2-12 from the three-point line. Jones led K-State with 24 points and four rebounds, while Finkes contributed 12 points and three rebounds.

The Cats turned over the ball 18 times, and although the team was active on the boards, Patterson said the Cats' poor offensive performance was its downfall.

"We out rebounded their team," Patterson said. "But if you give up 10 threes, you better be scoring on the other end of the floor."

Jones summed up the Cats' first-round loss in a few words.

"We didn't come out on the top of our game," Jones said. "The final score showed it."

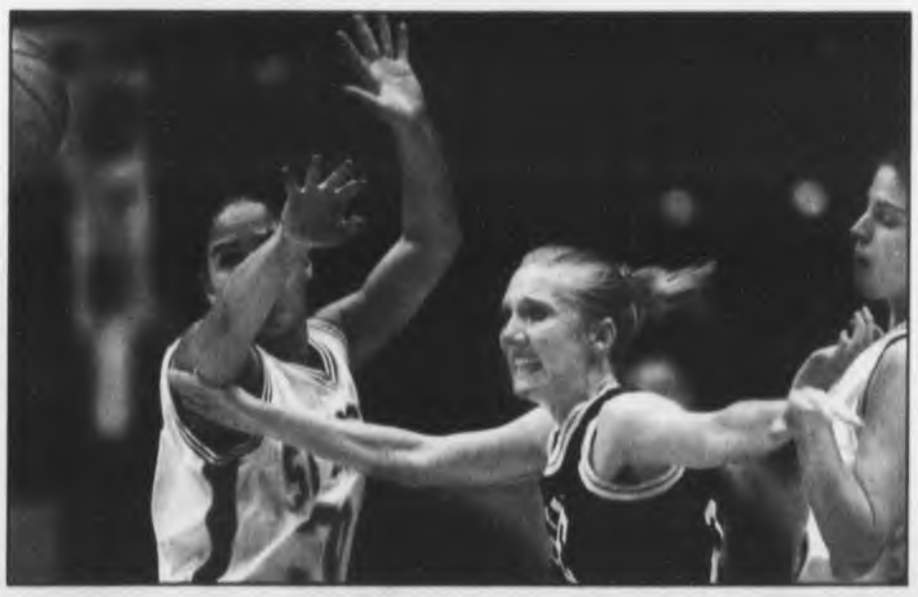
Seniors leave court with many accolades to their record

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Wildcat senior basketball players Andria Jones and Missy Decker joined junior Brit Jacobson at the post game press conference, obviously disheartened by their inability to advance to the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

Coach Deb Patterson said she was proud of the ball club, and especially the seniors, despite the 70-52 loss to St. Joseph's.

"They've achieved so much more than anyone would have expected," Patterson said. "Certainly we're disappointed, because we go away from this knowing there's better basketball in us than what we played tonight, but it doesn't take away from the tremendous achievements and the contributions of this senior class."



Jones racked up three Big 12 awards and two national honors over the last two weeks. Jones ranks third in the Big 12 and 46th in the nation with 19.1 points per game. She has scored in double digits in 29 of 31 games.

On the defensive side of the ball, Jones recorded a season-best eight steals against Nebraska Feb. 12 and is the team leader in steals with 64. She was also selected as the Big 12 Tournament MVP, the first Cat to receive the honor since Carlisa Thomas in 1987.

Decker was held to one three-pointer against the Hawks, but pulled down four boards. This season, Decker was named honorable mention all-Big 12 for the second year in a row.

In 31 starts this season, she played 14 40-minute games. Decker ranks second in Big 12 three-point percentage

Geological SNAPSHOT

▸ Core samples may help scientists determine climate changes.

Core samples from the Great Salt Lake promise to provide a global time machine for researchers.

"Recently we've been getting clues that there is a correlation between the behavior of Lake Bonneville and global-climate changes," said Jack Oviatt, geology professor, who has studied Lake Bonneville, the precursor of the Great Salt Lake, for 17 years.

During the last ice age, periods of tremendous climate change resulted in thousands of icebergs from the laurentide ice sheets floating into the north Atlantic, settling between Greenland and the Coast of England. Study of ocean-core samples taken from different sites indicates debris from the ice bergs is consistently found in the same levels.

By studying outcropping in the deserts of Utah, Oviatt and other researchers discovered fluctuations in Lake Bonneville can be correlated with these events.

"Lake Bonneville then becomes a place where we have a record of not just regional climate but global events," Oviatt said. "That puts it into another dimension."

The Great Salt Lake, first studied by Grove Karl Gilbert in the 1870s, has attracted more than 100 geologists to its shores.

The fascination: Lake Bonneville was a closed-basin lake. All water entering the lake came from precipitation. All water leaving the lake was from evaporation.

Oviatt and researchers at UC-Davis, the University of Minnesota and the U.S. Geological Survey have each been awarded about $28,000 by the National Science Foundation to take the previous study one step farther by examining core samples taken from the Great Salt Lake.

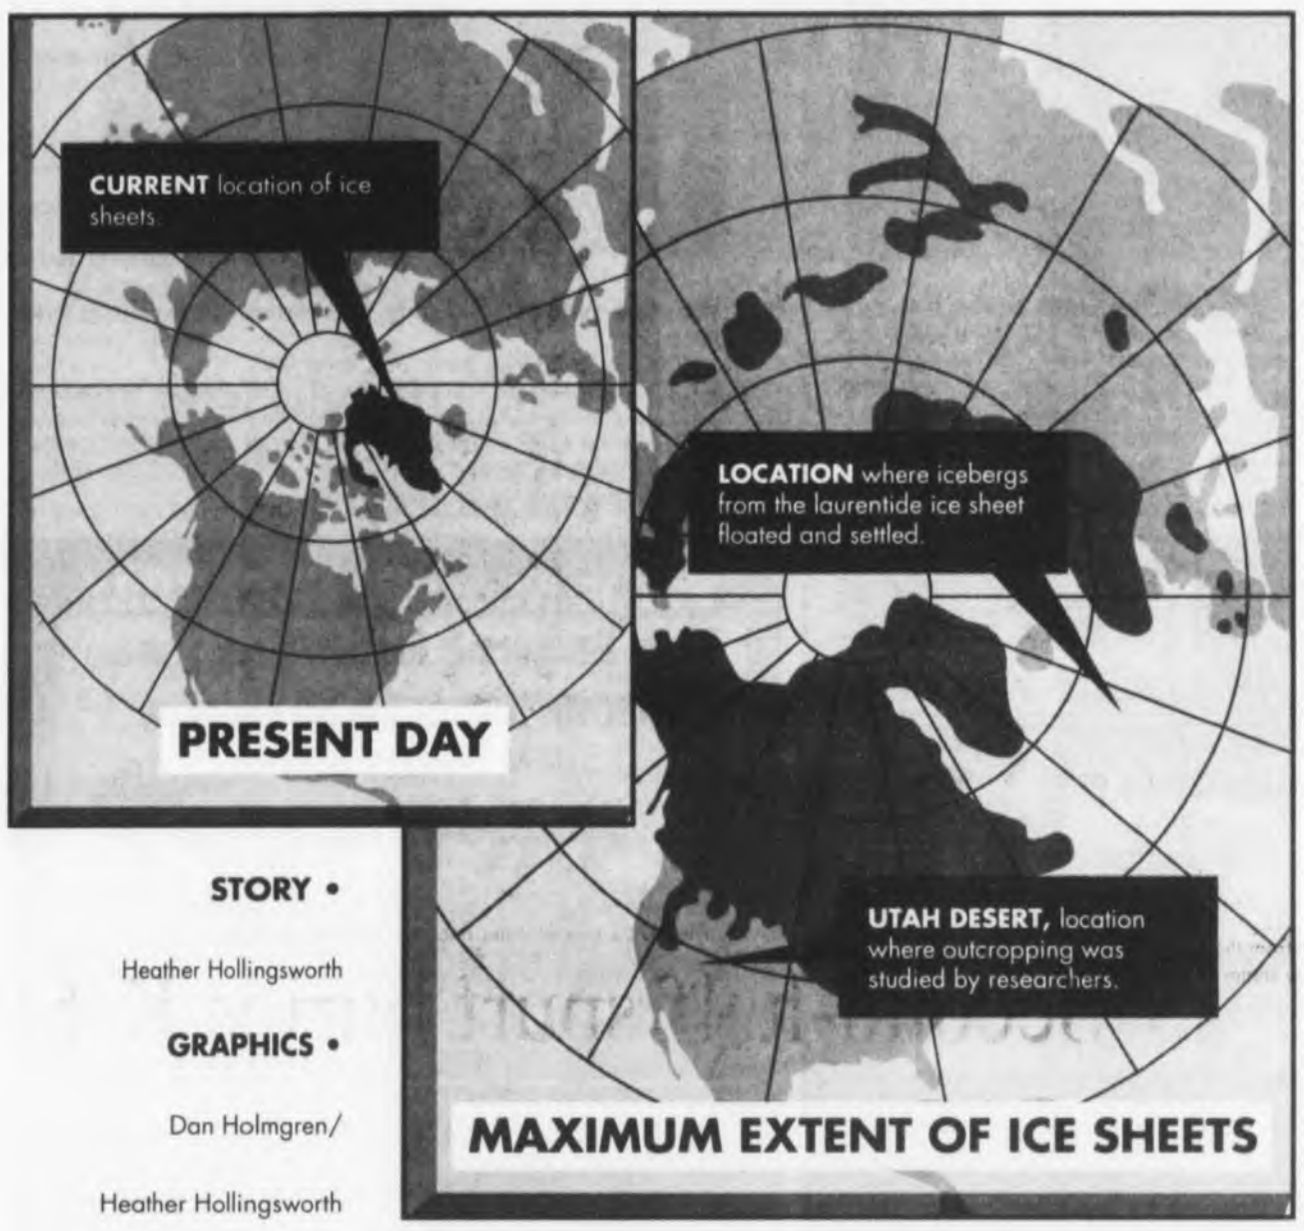
"The cores from the bottom will be more complete," Oviatt said.

In September 1996, researchers removed five long core samples, between eight and nine meters in length, and about five short core samples of about one meter from the Great Salt Lake.

These core samples provide valuable data concerning the level of the lake over time. As the Great Salt lake shrank, its chemical composition became more concentrated. As the lake expanded, its chemical composition became more dilute.

Researchers will travel to the University of Minnesota in May to begin the analysis of the longer eight to nine meter core samples.

"The same processes that formed the earth before are forming it now," Wendell Jolley, K-State graduate student in geology and research assistant, said. "It shows a lot of cyclocity."



By understanding the earth's natural cycle, future researchers can use the study to understand the affects humans have on global climate, Oviatt said. Research projects, like Oviatt's, are also useful in increasing the capabilities of computer models used to make climate predictions.

"Computer models are constantly being refined to try and improve the physics," Oviatt said. "The more realistic the models are, the more accurate the predictions will be. People who make computer models can use our information and other information from similar studies to help make the models more complete."

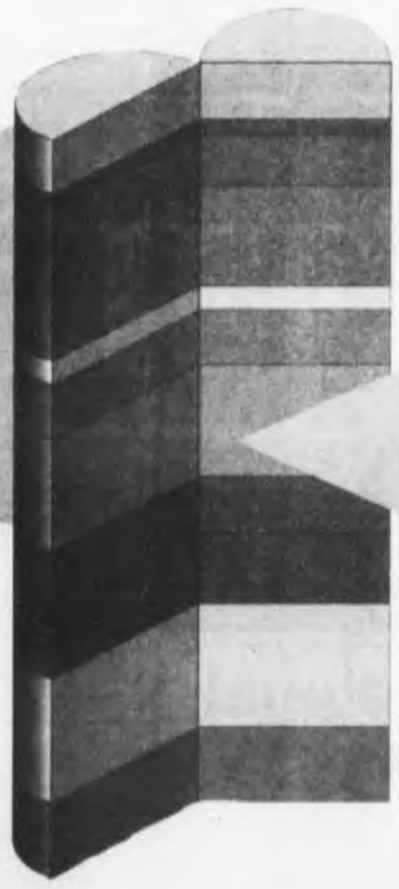
Experiment ONE



SIX DROPS IN LAKE LEVELS of the Great Salt Lake have correlated with heinrich events, periods where hundreds of thousands of gigantic icebergs from the laurentide ice sheet floated into the north Atlantic, settling between Greenland and the Coast of England. When an iceberg broke off, it carried sand and debris out to the ocean, eventually settling into the ocean floor. This phenomenon was discovered through an analysis of ocean cores taken from different sites. Study of the cores indicates iceberg-rafted debris are consistently found in the same layers of the ocean cores. Studying outcropping in the deserts of Utah, Geology professor Jack Oviatt and other researchers discovered the outcropping can be correlated with these heinrich events.

Experiment TWO

SOME 15,000 YEARS AGO Lake Bonneville was roughly the size of Lake Michigan. With a maximum depth of 1,000 feet, the lake covered an area of about 20,000 square miles of today's Utah, northeastern Nevada and southeastern Idaho. The lighter areas on the map indicate former lakes. The darker areas represent current lakes.

RESEARCHERS REMOVED five long core samples between eight and nine meters and five short core samples of about one meter in length from the Great Salt Lake. The core samples are cut in half. One half is photographed and archived. The other half is split into smaller segments and put into bottles. The segments are then examined for the presence and concentration of a variety of chemicals. Some samples are dated by the U.S. Geological Survey.

THE HISTORY of the lake is recorded in the lake sediments. K-State students examine levels of calcium carbonate. With more precipitation than evaporation, the lake level rose. With more evaporation than precipitation, the lake level dropped. The changes in lake level caused changes in the concentration of calcium carbonate, allowing researchers to determine the climate of the world during specific time periods.

K-State

K-STATE STUDENTS, Wendell Jolley, graduate student in geology; Matt Olson, senior in geology; Kim Edwards, senior in geology, are examining the cores for levels of calcium carbonate.

Minnesota

RESEARCHERS TRAVELING to Minnesota State University this summer will examine the longer core samples for:

- pollen
- ostracods
- oxygen and carbon isotopes
- brine shrimp egg cases
- fecal matter
- volcanic ashes

for all games, shooting 40 percent this season, and she finished fourth in the Big 12 with an average of two treys a game.

In the Big 12 semi-final win against Kansas, Decker was 6-for-6 from the charity stripe in the last three minutes to seal the win.

Senior center Kayla Hester was one of three Cats to start all 31 games this season. An injury in the second half against the Hawks took Hester out of the game, but she had three rebounds, an assist, a block and a steal. During the season, Hester grabbed a career-high nine rebounds against Texas Tech Jan. 18.

In the Cats' second meeting with the Lady Raiders in the Big 12 Tournament, Hester drained a career-high three treys and matched her nine rebounds while playing her first 40-minute game of the season.

Senior guard Kjersten Larson played 20 minutes in Saturday's game against the Hawks, assisting Decker at the point guard position.

This season, she was the first Cat on this team to play 100 games. In the Big 12 Tournament match up with Oklahoma, Larson recorded six points and a game-high three steals, one shy of her career-high.

"I think this senior class took this team and this program to another level," Patterson said.

"I think the challenge to our young players is to take hold of the example that this senior class has set for them and use it as a motivation and a model and hopefully as a standard for the future," she said.

families can receive support from the base.

"It's hard on the families. It really is," he said. "We have family support groups. It's a network of other families in the command, the rest of the families that stay behind, the chaplain — basically the whole post is at their disposal. We take care of their families while they're gone.

"If there is a wife or child in need of something, they call us up and we have people that are designated to take care of problems, whatever they may be. We have people on the phone 24 hours a day."

Paul Reese, Alpha tank company commander, said he was ready for deployment and eager for the mission to start.

He also said this deployment was different from his deployment for Operation Desert Storm.

"That was for actual combat. Peace enforcement is a little bit different mind set. That's what all the training the last couple months has been focused on," he said. "It's still tough for everybody to get ready to go — all the families." Bob and Mary Reese, his parents, said this deployment was also different in their opinion.

"When they left for the Gulf War, we didn't know if they would get whipped or not," Bob Reese said. "We were really worried whether they would get hurt or killed. It's not so bad this time. We know they can get in trouble over there, but it's not like going over for the Gulf War."

Reginald McDonald, acting platoon sergeant, said he looked forward to the deployment.

"I don't mind going," he said. "It's something new. It'll break up the monotony."

McDonald fought in the Gulf War, so this was not his first deployment. He displayed two pictures of his sons and wife, Cammie, tucked in his wallet. More were in his carry-on bags.

Cammie McDonald said she knew he had to leave, and they would keep in touch with letters because phone calls were too expensive.

She also said their children understood why their father was leaving.

"I just let them know that daddy is going to be gone for a while, and he will return," she said.

> "When they left for the Gulf War, we didn't know if they would get whipped or not. We were really worried whether they would get hurt or killed. It's not so bad this time. We know they can get in trouble over there, but it's not like going over for the Gulf War."

Auxiliary donated all of the money for the phone cards. Each card was worth $20 in long distance minutes.

Miniature American flags were given to everyone at the ceremony. Many of the troops stuck the flags in side pockets of their uniforms.

"These guys really cherish these. It doesn't mean a lot until you're away from home," Williams said.

The Task Force was notified Jan. 11 that it would be going to Bosnia, and it squeezed four months of training into two months.

"We set up all our own villages and checkpoints. We had certification exercises and have been working nonstop to get companies ready," Maj. Gen. Michael Dodson, post commander, said.

Dodson told the families of the deployed troops not to worry about their loved ones.

"Don't worry about their confidence. Don't worry about their discipline. These are hardened soldiers, and they will do a wonderful job," Dodson said.

During the ceremony, troops were encouraged by a colonel and a four-star general.

"Stay alert, stay focused on your mission and take care of each other. I look forward to seeing you when you return," Col. Joseph Peterson, 3rd Brigade commander of 1st Army Division, said.

"You are deploying to a part of the world where there is terrible strife. This is indeed a noble purpose," Gen. David Bramlett, Forces command, said to the troops.

"It is an honor to be among you. I wish you the best of luck. Know that all of us in the Army, all of us in the armed services in this nation are very proud of you and what you are doing," he said.

"This was a 20-year dream of mine. I didn't want her to go to McCain or Forum Hall," Boyer said. "She's a church singer, and this was the largest church on campus."

Walker has produced an album almost every year since she began performing. Boyer said he has 40 different albums by Walker in his music collection.

The concert was a way to transfer the music to another generation, Boyer said.

"It was a major celebration," Boyer said. "She is a pioneer, a mentor, and she is internationally recognized as a queen of this kind of music."

Carnatic music comes to Danforth Chapel

The sounds of India echoed through Danforth Chapel Friday night.

Bombay Jayashri, vocalist, performed for an audience of 50 people.

Jayashri sang traditional Carnatic music, a classical Indian music found mostly in the southern regions of India.

Music Review

The concert was sponsored by the campus chapter of Society for the Appreciation of Bharatiya Heritage and Arts and Indian Students Association.

Accompanying Jayashri were Trissoor Narendran, playing the mridangam, and Peri Sriramamurthy, playing the violin.

The mridangam is an instrument similar to a drum. Narendran held it in his lap as he played.

The singers formed a tight circle. Jayashri wore a traditional purple sari and sat cross-legged at the front of the chapel for the entire performance, which lasted almost three hours.

The chapel was filled, with people sitting in the aisles and standing in the back foyer to listen.

Jayashri was serene. Her soft humming turned into vocalization. Although it was a different language, her tone, voice and body language expressed moods beyond her words.

During difficult passages, Jayashri would close her eyes, sometimes for several minutes, as she sang.

Sriramamurthy's skill with the violin gave the audience the feeling that he was answering Jayashri's vocals, not in words, but through the music, in a clever conversation.

As she sang, Jayashri's hand beat the rhythm against her knee.

The music evoked images of sultry heat in the small chapel, despite the cold weather outside.

With the tip of the violin firmly grounded to the floor, Sriramamurthy bent low over the instrument and executed rapid, difficult finger passages fluidly.

Narendran's fingers beat the rhythm against his instrument, starting slow and growing faster and faster until his fingers danced.

Jayashri executed several difficult scales rapidly, with the violin playing a husky background. The violin supported the vocals, but wasn't overpowering.

The three worked well together.

Jayashri has produced several compact discs, including "Classical Melodies," "Your Favourites" and "Listeners Choice."

One of the most stirring performances of the evening was a violin solo. Sriramamurthy's music was enchanting, with a perfect verbratto and rapid, fluid transitions that spanned the strings.

The transitions were so quick at times it sounded like two violins playing in tandem.

Hema Viswanathan is a member of SABHA. She helped in planning the performance.

"That's what we do. Promote awareness of what India is," Viswanathan said.

Bharath Narayanan, president of SABHA, said, "It was unbelievably good. A definite home-like concert in the middle of Kansas."

▶ AURASCOPE BY C. ERA SAILER

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Put some method in your madness, and use your power where it counts. Avoid contact with human beings when at all possible, and hold your breath until spring break. Don't let a little exhaustion devour your self-esteem.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Don't spend so much effort reaching out to others that you don't notice those reaching out to you. Potential friendships or support are available to you from the least predictable of places. Don't hesitate to take advantage of help you would normally dismiss. It will make the difference.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Everyone around you is going haywire. If you don't check in with everyone vital, and even those who are not so applicable to your practical world, you'll miss a lot of life going on around you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may be accustomed to being the observer, but it is your turn to smile for the camera. While you've been taking it all in, you haven't had time to realize your own significance to the picture.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your ability to tame tempers with your disarming humor will be instrumental in resolving an issue at work. You have an opportunity to show what you're made of this week. Don't turn it down just because you'll have to share the spotlight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) For someone who prefers a post on the front lines, you've been doing a lot of retreating lately. You've been giving up the passenger seat in your life for a back seat in someone else's. Try carpooling.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Be gentle with all those who cross your path, and try to allow yourself the same relief. The professional massage was created for creatures like you. Shed some responsibility, and start your spring break early. You deserve it. Besides, you may not hold up that long.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You are impossible. You've been doing everything you can to screw up everything you wanted and are looking for someone to blame. You can aim an AK-47 at the mirror. Do the words double standard mean anything to you?

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Seek solidarity in all of the many disconnected spheres of your life. Avoid conflict, no matter how appetizing it seems. At the root of your trauma, as always, your spiritual life requires nothing more than attention to get back on track.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Find refuge and spiritual validation in an unlikely friend. Meanwhile, you've been working a little too hard. Let down your guard with colleagues, and you may find yourself with happier hormones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Try not to use a lover as your only source of intimacy. Be especially patient with those whose boundaries may be overlapping with your own. Be up front in re-establishing your own territory, and be honest with yourself about your motives.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Your idea of subtlety is a little unnerving to others. Don't neglect the bale of paper work stacking up on you for a roll in the hay or any such procrastination. Keep the pendulum tipped toward the footwork, but don't abandon playtime all together.

INDECENT EXPOSURE

In October in Great Falls, Mont., Tina Rae Beavers, 19, was arrested on the lawn separating the jail and the courthouse and charged with indecent exposure.

According to a sheriff's deputy, she was energetically complying with her jailed husband's request to remove her clothes, lie down in the grass, and make suggestive movements so that he could see her from his cell window.

Woman awaits sentence location

investigations editor

Tina Springwater is sitting in the Pottawatomie County Jail, waiting and wondering where she will be transferred to serve her sentence for the death of her boyfriend, David Shoop.

Springwater pleaded no contest to involuntary manslaughter and was sentenced to 36 months with no probation. This is the standard sentence in cases like hers, where there is no prior criminal record.

Shoop died last June. He and Springwater had driven up from Wichita in their 1978 Volkswagen bus. They were camping at Tuttle Creek State Park with hundreds of others who were attending the Country Stampede music festival.

They had been drinking for two days, and witnesses recalled their loud fights and brawling.

"He cold-cocked knocked her out the night before," Jared Weidmann, who was camping nearby, said. The two had been arguing about a lost ticket to the concert.

Late Friday, Shoop started to attack Springwater, but she picked up a 3-1/4 inch knife. He dared her to use it and continued toward her.

She stabbed him, but didn't mean to kill him, Pottawatomie County Attorney Jeff Elder said.

Weidmann came over to the campsite and found Springwater standing over Shoop's body. She asked

Party wins dominance in student elections

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

The Students for Students party has been a presence in student elections for the last three years, but this year it dominated them.

With 45 students running for 53 different positions, party members were elected to 51 seats in the Student Governing Association. Approximately one-third of those elected to SGA Wednesday were members of Students for Students.

Only two of the party members lost their elections.

Although Brian Fisher was elected engineering senator, Trent Lambert was elected agriculture senator, and Cassandra Taylor was elected architecture senator, the three party members can't take office unless two-thirds of the current Senate votes to overlook their violations of election regulations.

The candidate Students for Students endorsed for student body president was Aaron Otto. Otto must face opponent Tim Riemann in the run-off election next Wednesday.

Led by Senate Parliamentarian Patrick Carney and Governmental Relations Committee Chair Tracey Mann, Students for Students is designed to help members get elected through name recognition, cost sharing and combination of support.

"We're able to consolidate all of our friends with everyone else's friends," Carney explained.

He said the party breaks down the stereotypes of SGA members being active and greek, and represents both experience and inexperience in government.

Mann said members tended to be moderate politically.

"We're just trying to get quality people in student government," he said.

Speakers communicate experiences of black female slaves in narratives

staff writer

A riveting voice hung solitary in stark contrast to the stillness of the white walls of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art Sunday.

The voice belonged to Olga Davis, assistant professor in the Department of Speech, Communication, Theater and Dance, and was part of a chorus of storytelling in "Voices of the Past: The Rhetoric of Black Female Slave Narratives."

The potent and sacred stories were composites of black women's experiences as slaves derived from projects from Rhetoric of Female Slave Narratives, a class Davis teaches at K-State.

Davis said the program wasn't just confined to academia, but it invited all members of the community.

"We encouraged people of all backgrounds to come, because we have all been told many misguided notions of history," she said.

"And we all need to hear the voices of people who lived and died so that all of us could be here. They didn't just raise white children. They breast-fed white children," she said. "They gave their life to nourish the same children that might someday kill them."

Araminta Haynes, junior in sociology and American ethnic studies, said getting into character was a liberating and intense experience that she hoped could be used as a learning tool for others.

"It's so emotional, when you're in that place and you're thinking about what our ancestors went through. Especially the women, because they went through so much," Haynes said.

"I just wish we could reach more people," she said. "It's so important, especially from the woman's standpoint, because you hear a lot about the slave and you see a man, but you don't think about the children and the women."

Haynes' daughter, Sumatra, a sixth grader at Bluemont Elementary School, also played a slave in a skit with Davis' children, Erika, a third grader and Julian, a first grader at Amanda Arnold Elementary School.

The presentation was the last of a series of events sponsored by the Beach art museum's "Take A Stand," an educational collaboration of the Manhattan Public Library, Wonder Workshop and other local organizations in recognition of Black History Month and Women's History Month.

Davis said she hoped that through similar programs, people of all colors would move toward an identity as a human race.

"We have a lot of peculiar connections," she said. "We have a lot more connections than differences."

for his help, hoping he knew how to perform CPR.

"His arm fell off the stab wound," Weidmann said. "She said, 'I stabbed him, I killed him.' At that time, I freaked out and ran. The whole crowd was there, and she was throwing stuff around like she was getting out of Dodge."

Weidmann said she kept insisting that Shoop told her to stab him.

When the police arrived, they tried to give Shoop CPR, but he was probably already dead, Gerald Schmidt, chief investigator for the Pottawatomie County Police, said.

Shoop was pronounced dead at Memorial Hospital, where doctors found that his struggles had aggravated the stab wound.

Now Springwater, at the mercy of the secretary of corrections, waits to be transferred to a state prison.

K-State administration to unveil 'Colbert Hills' golf course plans

K-Staters might well be on their way to teeing off on home turf in 1999.

A proposal for a $9-10 million, privately developed K-State golf course to be named "Colbert Hills" will be unveiled this morning by K-State administration.

The course was conceptually approved Monday by the Professional Golf Association board of directors. The course project is being planned and partially financed by Jim Colbert, a K-State alumnus of 1964.

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, is leading K-State's drive for the golf course.

"We are in the feasibility stages," Krause said. "At this point, we're still not sure we're going to do something."

Krause said the golf course, which would be a public course with daily green and cart fees, now relies on getting all the development partners, including Colbert and the PGA, and other private contributors on board.

However, it has been Colbert, who plays on the PGA Senior Tour and owns Colbert Golf Design and Development Inc. of Las Vegas, has been the driving force behind the project.

Colbert's architects have identified a site in northwest Manhattan, just west of the Farm Bureau building, as the site for the course. Site plans and preliminary development plans do exist for the course.

"Jim has had a desire to do something for the Conflicts avoided in golf course site selection

The site selection for the proposed K-State golf course has been a priority for those involved in the project planning.

Jim Colbert, who is privately leading the drive for the course, has spent many hours flying over Riley County searching for a site. The site he and his architects chose is land north of Kimball Drive and west of Seth Childs Road near the Farm Bureau building.

According to Riley County land records, the Farm Bureau site identified for the course is owned by John "Jack" Vanier, John Vanier II and Donna Vanier. Their property, which would encompass much of the proposed golf course property, includes three quarters of rolling, partially vegetated hills.

Jack Vanier is Bob Krause's father-in-law. Because property surrounding the course would remain in private hands, the project invites some questions about conflict of interest and who ▶ WHILE FORMER CANDIDATE Bill Burns endorses Otto, Otto adopts safe-driving program plank into his platform.

NICOLE KIRBY

Although Bill Burns won't advance to the run-off election in the race for student body president, his ideas will, thanks to Aaron Otto.

Otto, who will face Tim Riemann in the run off, has adopted Burn's plan to have a designated-driving system run by the University. As a result, Burns decided to endorse Otto and his running mate, Amy Knedlik.

"I'm really glad to see Aaron and Amy attacking this, so something is happening on a tangible level," Burns said.

Otto, who is student body vice president, has been working on the student escort system with current president Chris Hansen. He said the designated-driving program fit in with his campaign for campus safety.

Students voted for the designated-driving program on last week's ballot, with 60 percent saying they would use the program and 63 percent who would not mind paying for it through student fees.

Otto said this vote was a mandate from the students.

The program Otto and Burns advocated, called Safe Ride, was created by Angie Jensen, Amy Mashburn and Jami Nelson.

Jensen said Otto had tried to reach her, but she hadn't spoken to him yet. She supported his campaign and was optimistic about his ability to help with the Safe Ride program.

"I think he could have a pretty good role in it because he has experience with the escort service, and the programs could probably be combined, like with the dispatching," she said.

Otto said Safe Ride is well thought-out and would require few changes to make it feasible.

Adam Balzer, John Farrell and Colin Rafferty, whose bids for the presidency also ended with last week's election, all endorsed Tim Riemann.

Woman launches flight to retrace Earhart's trip

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — A Texas woman took off Monday in a gleaming silver plane, hoping to complete one of the most mysterious flights in aviation history — Amelia Earhart's ill-fated bid to fly around the world.

San Antonio millionaire Linda Finch was at the controls of a twin-engine Lockheed Electra — a fraternal twin to the one Earhart flew from the same airfield exactly 60 years ago — as it soared into a blue, cloud-dotted sky.

Before boarding the plane, Finch told hundreds of well-wishers — many of them school children — that Earhart inspired people to dream big dreams.

"Limitations come from within, and we alone have the power to release ourselves from the limitations that we set," Finch said.

Finch

She restored the plane, which was sheltered in the same hangar from which Earhart's craft was rolled out on St. Patrick's Day in 1937.

Finch, 46, figures her flight will cover about 26,000 nautical miles and take her to 20 countries before she returns to Oakland in May.

Others have completed the Earhart flight, but not in an Electra. Finch, who operates nursing homes, has spent the past two years rebuilding and modernizing the plane. She even borrowed rare parts from another Electra on display at the Western Aerospace Museum at the Oakland airport.

Finch will make some concessions to progress. For one thing, she'll be wearing hearing protection.

"These engines are actually larger than those intended for this model aircraft," Finch said of Former K-State engineering professor dies of brain cancer

MATT SPURGIN
staff writer

A former K-State engineering professor, William H. Dawes Sr., died Saturday of brain cancer in his Manhattan home. He was 57.

Dawes had been a professor in the departments of electrical and computer engineering from 1992 until he was diagnosed with brain cancer last October.

Dawes first came to K-State as an undergraduate, receiving his bachelor's degree in physics in 1969.

He went on to earn his master's degree in 1972 and his doctorate in electrical engineering in 1974.

After he graduated, Dawes helped found the ICE Corp., an electrical engineering and design firm.

He started teaching at K-State in 1977 in the Department of Engineering Technology.

Dawes was also involved with a research project for NASA with BioServe Space Technologies. That research was to be launched on the January 2001 space shuttle for testing.

Before his illness, Dawes had been the faculty adviser for the parachute club since 1982 when he made his first jump. Dawes had made more than 100 jumps.

Dawes was a member of several organizations including the Manhattan and K-State ham radio clubs.

"He was an excellent engineer and a fine teacher. He was an entrepreneur and a man of many interests. I don't think there is any question he'll be missed by the students and the faculty of the college of engineering," Don Rathbone, dean of engineering, said.

Funeral services will be at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday at Seven Dolors Catholic Church.

• FORMER ASSISTANT DEAN DIES.

William Robert Jahnke's students and colleagues said they remember him for his emphasis on teaching a user-friendly orientation to design.

Jahnke, former assistant dean of the College of Architecture and Design, died March 7 at Stoneybrook Health Center.

Jahnke was born March 2, 1926, in Pittsburgh, Pa. Jahnke was known for his hard work and determination in the architecture and design college.

Jahnke built a photo lab in Seaton Hall that will be named in his honor.

Jahnke continued to work with students at K-State until last fall, when he suffered a stroke.

Jahnke served in the U.S. Navy from 1944 to 1946. He was the president of the senior class at Duke University, where he earned his bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering in 1948.

Jahnke began teaching in 1948. In 1968, Jahnke came to K-State where he was named acting assistant dean in 1970 and assistant dean in 1971.

Jahnke established his own architectural engineering firm in 1953.

• POLICE SAY MAN SHOT WIFE, SON, TOOK OWN LIFE.

GARDEN CITY — A man apparently shot and killed his wife and son at their apartment during the weekend, then took his own life, police said.

Capt. Stan Wojdylak said all three were dead when officers arrived at the apartment late Saturday morning after the man's brother called to report a shooting. Information gathered by investigators suggested marital problems, he said Monday.

Wojdylak identified the dead as Tuan Khac Du, 21, his wife, Thy Phuong Huyhn, 19, and their son, Justin Du, 14 months.

• ROBBERS ASSAULT MPs, STEAL CAR, ABOUT $36,000.

FORT RILEY — Two men wearing ski masks stole about $36,000 as it was being brought to the main post exchange at Fort Riley.

One of the military police officers on the escort detail was struck in the head during the holdup Saturday, Master Sgt. Terri Kane said. The weapon was not immediately determined. The guard was listed in stable condition.

The robbers were wearing gray Army physical fitness uniforms.

The robbers fled in the military police vehicle, which was found later on the post.

• ALBANIANS APPEAL FOR END TO ANARCHY, FLEEING.

TIRANA, Albania — Taking advantage of a break in gunfire, capital residents crowded into a central square and appealed for an end to the anarchy that has sent thousands of Albanians fleeing the country.

More than 4,000 Albanians have crossed the Adriatic Sea to Italy's southern ports in recent days, taxing relief resources.

In Brindisi, Italy, churches were turned into dormitories. Some 700 Albanians were lodging in a nearby seminary. Catholic charity workers said they were running out of volunteers' homes to put up refugees.

• ISRAELIS, PALESTINIANS PREPARE FOR JERUSALEM SHOWDOWN.

JERUSALEM — Israeli army snipers took up positions and Palestinian protesters erected tents Monday, eyeing each other suspiciously on a hill in disputed east Jerusalem where Israel plans to build 6,500 apartments for Jews.

Both sides were waiting for Israel's government to give the order — perhaps as early as today — for construction to begin.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is determined to go ahead with the controversial project. The Palestinians, who claim east Jerusalem as their future capital, warn they will block the bulldozers — with their bodies, if necessary.

Despite the tough statements, negotiators from both sides scrambled to avert a showdown by arranging a summit between Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat. They were prodded on by the United States and Jordan.

Army spouse copes with departure

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN
staff reporter

Melanie Dannatt didn't formally say goodbye to her husband the morning of March 14 before he left on his mission to Bosnia in support of Operation Joint Guard.

She drove her husband, Capt. Martin Dannatt, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, in their truck to his company building at the top of Custer Hill at 5 a.m. He jumped out of his seat, grabbed two duffel bags full of equipment and belongings for the next 6 months and began to walk to the front door.

She continued to wait for a goodbye, then finally rolled her window down.

"Are you coming back?" she asked.

"No," he said.

"OK. Bye."

Although there wasn't a formal goodbye, Melanie Dannatt said informal goodbyes are better.

"It's really hard for the men, I think, to see their wives upset when they leave home," she said.

Melanie Dannatt wasn't able to attend the formal farewell ceremony at Marshall Army Air Field at 11 a.m. because of work.

She didn't see the 35-foot American flag hanging inside Hanger 817, illuminated by a spotlight as "The Wind Beneath My Wings" played and 210 soldiers lined at attention on the staging area and marched single-file to enter the waiting buses.

Spouses, small children and friends wept and waved small American flags as the doors closed and the buses departed for Forbes Field in Topeka, where C-141 aircraft was waiting, destined for Germany and then Bosnia.

"You have to keep in mind that everyone knew for about two months what they were preparing for," Melanie Dannatt said.

"You kind of had a feeling that they were going to go, so you had to prepare yourself. We had two months to say goodbye."

For Melanie Dannatt, lengthy departures aren't uncommon. Martin Dannatt warned his wife while they were K-State business students in the late 1980s that he would one day be deployed in the military.

During his seven-year military career, Martin Dannatt has spent a year in South Korea, with only a four-week break in the United States.

"He's only been back in the United States for 18 months since Korea," Melanie Dannatt said.

"Now, he's gone again to the other side of the world."

The Dannatt's have been stationed at Fort Riley for 16 months. Although the Dannatt's have only been in 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry since October, Melanie Dannatt said deployments draw military families together.

"I'm of course getting a lot closer. Usually when something like this happens, where they're deployed for a long period of time, you'll form a close-knit group. It's really hard to break up a group like that even when they come home," she said.

Military wives keep in contact with their spouses through e-mail, newsletters and video-recorded messages, which are mailed almost weekly.

The battalion headquarters is open 24 hours a day for wives who want to sit in front of a video camera and talk.

Once a month, Lt. Col. Robert Rush, commander, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, will call and talk via speaker phone to military families and update the military situation.

"It's kind of a personal touch that will be great for families," Melanie Dannatt said.

"You can also ask questions, which will be great."

She said she dedicates many hours to volunteering and participating in activities with other military wives.

She maintains financial records for fundraising for the battalion support group, which plans activities such as holiday parties for battalion families.

Although she knows war is always a possibility when her husband leaves, Melanie Dannatt said she was more prepared for the deployment this time. A Manhattan native, she has a healthy network of support, including family and friends.

Melanie Dannatt said she remembers the many talks she had with her husband before he left, when they both expressed their anxieties about his departure.

"You think about not seeing him for a while, but I think you get over it," she said.

"The sooner he gets started, the sooner he's going to come back."

Minorities focus of ag recruiting

CORI HERBERS
staff reporter

Efforts of the College of Agriculture have increased to recruit minorities.

Through support and help from the dean's office, faculty members and student ambassadors, the College of Agriculture is hoping to start partnerships with several specific schools in Kansas to increase recruitment to the University.

"The only school that has officially said yes to the program is Kansas City East Agricultural Magnet school," said Steven Graham, assistant to the dean of agricultural.

"Kansas City East is an agribusiness magnet school that focuses on subjects ranging from horticulture to animal science to agribusiness marketing," he said. "Some other schools that we want to join the partnership are schools in larger cities of Kansas like Topeka, Wichita and Junction City."

The partnership program would give assistance to students about various aspects of college and the different fields of study.

"We would go into their schools and provide them the kind of help and assistance that might benefit the students," Graham said. "We want to talk to them about the opportunities in the agricultural industry and that college is an option."

On March 4, eight students and five faculty members from the College of Agriculture went to visit Kansas City East.

"In our visit to the school, we went into classrooms and did hands-on activities with the students," said Jackie McClaskey, assistant director of agricultural academic programs. "We made presentations that incorporated careers in agriculture and talked about the basics of preparing for college."

One of the challenges the program is facing is how to promote programs to students who have not traditionally shown interest in certain academic areas.

"A lot of students at this particular school may not look at the college and university education as an option," McClaskey said. "We want to go into their schools and provide them the kind of help and assistance that might benefit them," she said.

Liz Neufeld, College of Agriculture ambassador and sophomore in agricultural economics, said the trip to Kansas City was a great experience.

"We were able to visit with the students on a personal basis and talk to them about our college experience," Neufeld said. "Many of the students hadn't thought about college. They didn't realize all the scholarships the College of Agriculture has or that they can get financial aid."

Statistics show there is a 5-percent shortage of graduates compared to the number of jobs available in the agricultural industry.

"We want to explore opportunities to bring minority students and students of color into the College of Agriculture and K-State," McClaskey said.

"A number of employers are impressed with the students they have recruited from the University. In addition to those students, they are now wanting to hire more minorities, women and students who speak a foreign language."

On Tuesday, more than 60 students from Kansas City East came to K-State to learn more about the University and become aware of the opportunities the College of Agriculture has to offer.

"I was impressed with the school and the different fields of study within the College of Agriculture," said Moraima Hernandez, senior from Kansas City East Agricultural Magnet school.

"We had the opportunity to take a tour, visit with academic support services, listen to a panel of students and learn about the minority program," she said. "We live in a very diverse world. I want to be educated so I can help other people learn and communicate. I believe K-State and the College of Agriculture can give me that kind of education and opportunity," Hernandez said.

Planned K-State golf course should be used to benefit students, academic programs

Plans for a proposed $9 million-$10 million K-State golf course were announced today.

To be named "Colbert Hills" in honor of K-State alumnus, developer and PGA Senior Tour player Jim Colbert, the course could be built on land west of the Farm Bureau building.

This golf course has the potential to do great things for K-State.

A research and academic program is being combined with its development to benefit the turf management program, business students and hotel and restaurant management students.

The course is also planned to provide endowments for scholarships for men's and women's golf team members and extra funds for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. The golf team enhancements are important for the continuing improvement of the program.

The course would also be attractive to alumni, prospective students (who would be given discounted green fees) and golfers throughout the Midwest.

There's no arguing that these are lofty and admirable goals for a golf course.

There remains the potential for the development of this course to hurt K-State.

The eventual profits from the course should not only benefit athletics but should be applied to scholarships and fellowships for the academic programs that are being incorporated into the project. If the course is truly to be both recreational and academic, its finances should attest to it.

The K-State Foundation is seeking contributors for the course's development — contributors who could also be giving their limited supply of money to fund needed academic improvements.

Although the Foundation and the administration have made concerted efforts to find outside money that would not normally be going to K-State, the potential for diverting money away from academic interests is still an issue.

Donation speculation is an inexact science — will it harm K-State in the future? Will the golf course seek more money in the future for more development?

These are questions that still need to be answered, but only time will truly tell.

While golfers will surely anticipate the addition of a golf course to campus culture, students and faculty members should question the real effects the course will have on the University.

• CRENSHAW BORDERS ON PREJUDICE.

Editor,

So Valeri Crenshaw has an opinion column. But does she have to inflict such strong opinions that inevitably spark the beginnings of prejudice?

I was very appalled by the cross-dressing column. The only cheap way to make this school look good was to put the University of Kansas down.

I don't admire that kind of childish behavior. To make matters worse, every column Crenshaw wrote after that contained a rude comment about KU.

For example, she implies that every person affiliated with KU is ignorant. Exactly what kind of message is she trying to convey? That K-State is good enough only if others are stepped on in the process, or to wrongfully judge fans, students and staff simply because they attend or cheer for KU?

Don't hate, Crenshaw. What this world needs is for people to unite and to pull together, not tear each other down for our own greedy satisfaction.

• STUDENT SPOTS SHOULD NOT BE BLOCKED.

Editor,

I know this is an old issue, but as if the parking situation weren't bad enough, they blocked half of the student parking at Durland Hall Thursday morning.

What's up with that? Why not block faculty parking? We students paid our fees and bought our permits, and then they block our parking spaces for visitors. I've seen metered parking spaces blocked in the K-State Student Union lot for visiting dignitaries. Why block the student parking for the engineers?

At least I got my space and didn't miss any classes today, but what about other students?

• LACK OF RESTAURANTS DUE TO STUDENT PREFERENCES.

Editor,

This is in response to Russell Fortmeyer's column on Wednesday titled "Good Eats."

He says there is a lack of good eating establishments in Manhattan, and yes, to some extent that is true. He fails to realize, however, that the reason for this is that most of the town is college students, and they are very much fast food oriented and don't frequent the other restaurants as much as families and the alumni generation.

However, Fortmeyer must not have done his research very well, because he failed to mention a few restaurants. One in particular, Raoul's Escondido, which has been family owned for more than 30 years, with recipes passed down from generation to generation.

He mentions in the column that no restaurants make their food on the premises. Raoul's has a very limited number of items on their menu that are "shipped in on trucks" as Russell says.

All other items are homemade on the premises by the family and staff. Whatever makes Russell think he is a chef connoisseur, I don't know, but next time maybe he should check into the restaurants who have been here longer than most of these students have even existed.

THE RIVER wild

Summer rafting adventure makes for lasting memories

VIEWPOINT

JONATHAN WINKLER

JONATHAN WINKLER is a senior in mathematics, physics and English. You can e-mail your comments to Jonathan at (winkler@phys.ksu.edu).

They made me do it. I had no choice.

They came to me in early July, while I was tapping away at a computer terminal in suburban Washington, and asked me if I was interested in a whitewater rafting expedition in the mountains of West Virginia.

Images from "The River Wild" instantly popped up in my mind, where it seemed all Meryl Streep had to do to get rid of the two miscreants was merely to be a very bad river guide.

I demurred. I told them I would have no idea what to do and wasn't it dangerous anyway? Then one of them folded her arms and told me, "You're not getting out of this so easily." Because she had long, black tresses and a smile that would launch the entire U.S. Sixth Fleet, further resistance was futile.

So I found myself camping out in Fayetteville, W.Va, in early August, waiting to be taken down the New River. This stream drains Bluestone Lake near the Virginia state line and winds its way through mountainous country past Thurmond and Fayetteville on its way to the Ohio.

The region lies within the youngest part of the Appalachians, where the peaks are higher and the abysses are lower. Fayetteville itself is famous for its one engineering marvel — the bridge that carries four-lane U.S. Highway 19 hundreds of feet over the New just north of town and is billed as the world's longest steel-arch bridge.

We spent the first night in Fayetteville, where I got four hours of sleep on the hard and chilly ground. Then a continental breakfast followed.

I nearly brought the house down when I suggested that they weren't giving us more food in case they needed to perform emergency surgery on us.

We were then issued our gear — bright orange preservers and purple plastic helmets. The first helmet I received was covered with white stress marks, each indicating a place where it had been hit hard. I asked for and got another headpiece completely free of these white spots and tried to forget everything I had ever read about critical head trauma.

It hardly helped that the navigation company made me sign a form waiving my right to hold it legally responsible for any misadventures while under its protection.

We didn't actually set out on the expedition in Fayetteville. We were taken by bus to a launch point some 18 miles up the river, near Thurmond.

The trip entailed driving over one-lane mountain roads through hairpin curves so narrow that the bus driver did three-point turns to get through them, sometimes with only three wheels on the ground.

Upon arrival we rendezvoused with our guide, nicknamed Mad Dog.

I might have collapsed in nervous anxiety at the sight of the first rapid under a bridge support a hundred yards ahead, except I had become determined not to be defeated by a few million gallons of silty water.

It was as well my courage picked up, because I was nearly thrown out of the raft at this rapid. They hadn't told me before that it was essential to stick both feet, one fore and one aft, between inflatable crosspieces of the raft, so because I had only one foot (fore) anchored, I was pitched on top of everybody else.

There were 18 more rapids on this river, each more exciting and violent than the last. Mad Dog told us that the first eight or nine were easy, i.e., they ranked one or two on the scale used to rate these things.

I was too obsessed with simple self-preservation to ask how far the scale went or how the rankings were assigned, but I suspected uneasily that five or six meant Niagara Falls.

By the 10th rapid (rating: three or four) we were being spun around like a top while we paddled madly.

When not being terrified out of my wits, I wondered how water so muddy could produce such white foam.

Midway through we stopped for a rest at Jump Rock, an enormous boulder that overhung the river with about 10 feet of clearance. Mad Dog urged us to disembark and jump off it.

I got off, thinking I could take maybe five minutes on solid ground without actually jumping, until I saw the others slowly paddling away. I climbed to the top, where the 10-foot drop looked more like 100, and let three other people jump first before screwing my courage to the sticking point and plunging downward.

I was not as bold and adventurous as she with the long black hair and the aircraft-carrier-launching smile, who left us and swam parallel to us between rapids.

But by the time we reached the take-off point just ahead of the U.S. 19 bridge, we had passed through rapids liberally sprinkled with nasty-looking boulders and been swept under another rock that gave us no more than three feet of clearance.

Thus I was more happy than not to have come safely through 18 miles of hazard.

I still feel this way even in spite of sunburns that itched for a week and a nervous tremor in my fingers from clutching the paddle too tightly.

Taste for travel follows in tradition of great wanderers

Thank God spring break is four days away.

I hope you have scraped, begged, earned and, most importantly, saved enough money to get your butt far, far away from this purple prison. I want to see Manhattan in my rearview mirror as soon as possible.

Do not misunderstand — I love these hallowed halls as much as the next student, but I need a break. No, I deserve a break. My hair is graying, my blood pressure is rising, my heart is failing, my stress has reached its peak, and I am burning with that old nomadic itch.

Few people understand the nomadic itch. It's a disease few of us are afflicted with. It is the need to be rolling down the open highway in pursuit of nothing. It's as enticing to me as sleeping on Bourbon Street for days at a time.

The nomadic itch consists of nothing more than laying the eyeballs on something new, something spiritual.

Some very famous people have had the itch. People who have the itch are almost invariably bums. John Steinbeck would have been a grade-A hobo had he not possessed superb writing talent. One of his finer pieces, "Travels with Charlie" is nothing more than random traveling. He had the itch.

What about Christopher Columbus? The guy was little more than a vagabond. He concocted a loony scam to support his nomadic habits and sold it off to the Queen of Spain. Luckily he bumped into a continent. The guy definitely had the itch.

Hollywood and popular literature have tried to capture the essence of the nomadic itch. Hollywood's "Easy Rider" is probably the closest thing on film. Literature has offered us "On the Road" by Jack Kerouac.

Kerouac's piece is based largely on his life's experience. Hobos in pickups, bums with flack jackets and strange and new cities all beg the reader to drop the book and high tail it to the nearest bus station. And yes, Kerouac was a bum.

Kerouac, Columbus and Steinbeck aside, the finest deranged nomad of all time had to be Clark W. Griswold of National Lampoon's vacation movies. The guy is a fruit. He is beyond oranges or even bananas. You see, most itchers don't drag their great-aunt-in-law's dog down long stretches of interstate.

My itch is taking me to Las Vegas and the Grand Canyon. These two destinations contrast each other perfectly. The Grand Canyon is nature's gift to humans.

As you descend deep into the canyon, millions of shades of orange, purple, brown and red inflict the eye with an aesthetic nirvana. There is nothing as luscious as hiking to the bottom of the canyon and plopping your bare feet into the Colorado River.

The Grand Canyon is heaven on earth.

If the canyon is peace and tranquility, then Vegas is everything that is wrong with human beings. Vegas offers free booze, cheap hotels, neon lights, prostitutes, pimps, chains, guns, elopers, gambling, wise guys, gangs and overweight Elvis impersonators. Well, Viva Las Vegas. Even Tupac couldn't escape the wrath of Vegas. I can't wait to get there.

I don't know if the itch is hereditary or just a severe illness I picked up in high school. Either way, if I don't get out there every so often I begin to self-destruct. Once I went a year without a road trip, and I was institutionalized because of the string of drool that I let stretch to the floor.

Small animals were using it as a ladder to get a better view of the world.

People who have the nomadic itch don't wear watches on vacation. There are only two times — night and day. Time has no more meaning to us nomadic fools than the truth does to President Clinton. There are no agendas, no daily planners and no routines. Each day is a different state and different sight not before seen.

Although not all is grand with nomadic wandering. You can break down in the middle of a severe blizzard, or worse, Oklahoma. I once broke down in Oklahoma City. I ended up with a dog and a hitchhiker in the bed of my truck. The two were hiding under the tarp. I let them out in Kansas City.

So if you are going anywhere this spring, exercise care in all you do. Don't pick up hitchhikers or diseases (for those of you going to Padre).

But most importantly, have a good time and get home with all your pieces intact.

MIKE WEATHERFORD/Collegian

Relaxation, balance necessary for preventing student burnout

TRISHA LANGFORD
staff reporter

There are 24 hours, 1,440 minutes or 86,400 seconds in each day, yet there never seems to be enough time to get everything done.

For students, trying to balance school, work and extracurricular activities is a challenge.

Sherry Benton, psychologist and training director at Lafene Health Center, said the effects of balancing can be seen most often in new students — freshmen, sophomores and transfer students.

"Students assume, but don't prepare for, a difference. The amount of time things take is underestimated," Benton said.

The most common effects are stress and burnout. Response to stress occurs 50-200 times daily.

The symptoms are irritability, unproductive concentration, anxiety, depression and lack of sleep.

ZACHARY BAZE/Collegian

For Mike Burgess, junior in public relations, his way of balancing is obtained by sleeping only four to six hours a night.

"This semester has been the worst. I've been a joiner. Not sleeping creates time to get things done," Burgess said.

When burnout begins to occur, a cycle can be detected. Feeling stress can cause the immune system to break down. And because of illness more sleep is required, meaning that classes are missed. This can cause depression or even anxiety.

To prepare for a busy schedule, the best time to start is before the semester begins. Benton recommends being realistic about what you're able to do.

"Sometimes it is smarter, even though more expensive, to take five to six years to get through school. You will do better in that time rather than trying to cram," Benton said.

Other ways to prepare include having a schedule and sticking to it, using an organizer and making to-do lists. Include eating, sleeping and having fun as important things to do.

"For most people, these are really helpful. But you don't want to eliminate spontaneity in your life," Benton said.

If you're trying to balance, Benton suggests stepping back and assessing how workable things are, what can be delegated or eliminated.

The University Counseling Services in Lafene 232, offer 20 Help Yourself brochures, counseling and workshops on time and stress management.

Students receive up to five individual sessions free per year. A nominal fee is charged for additional services. Biofeedback, the use of computerized monitoring of body responses, is also available at Lafene.

In biofeedback, skin temperature, sweat, muscle tension, heart rate and respiration are all measured. Students are taught how to control the body and what it does in response to stress.

Sharon Temming, freshman in kinesiology, has been using the services at Lafene since last year. She said it helps her adjust to classes and deal with a new living situation.

"It's an outside source to help deal with things that bother me, rather than call home or talk to friends," Temming said.

To recover from stress and burnout, Benton suggests a form of relaxation. Many times, though, these important aspects are eliminated.

"Sleep, eating and exercising are the first things to be eliminated because they don't seem as pertinent. In fact, those are the most important in recovery," Benton said.

Ways to reduce stress are up to the individual. Taking a walk, cooking or going to work out are ways to calm down.

"It doesn't have to be elaborate. Just do what works," Benton said.

MICHAEL HALE, graduate student in sculpture, waits for the opening of his first solo art exhibit Monday night. Hale's sculptures are showing in the Union art gallery through Friday.

arches as art

Master's candidate fuses art, architecture in show

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Discipline-bending is a running theme in master's of fine arts and master's of arts shows this season.

Master's of fine arts candidate Michael Hale's work in his show "Will Sculpt for Food" in the Union art gallery fuses the disciplines of art and architecture.

Art Review

Compare his large, constructed pieces to the delicate, sculptural ceramic forms of Tali Cohen's work in her master's of architecture show in Seaton Hall last semester, and you might be confused as to what is art and what is architecture.

At Monday night's gallery opening in the K-State Student Union, Hale insisted his work was not architectural in nature.

That's an arguable point, because his soaring arches, columns and hanging objects invite comparison to classical architectural details, albeit loose interpretations of such. But, to consider Hale's meaning, we'll try to ignore the architectural implications of the work.

Hale's "M P Wishlist," steel and leather, is self-contradictory, with its suspended stretched leather piece, an internal structure beckoning to be released, which in turn penetrates the space created under the arch construction.

"The arch is strictly a framing element," Hale said. "I saw it as a figure holding the piece. All sculpture relates back to the figure."

Hale said he likes to play with the insides and outsides of work, and creating mystery by opening reveals this in his pieces.

"M P Wishlist" establishes Hale's formal vocabulary, echoed in three other pieces that progressively increase in size.

There are four wall pieces in the show, each differing from each other in style and none repeating the forms of the large-scale stand-alone floor pieces.

"Horus in Drag," steel, rope and leather, evokes Lee Bontecou's late 1960s constructions in defining orifices and voids.

Hale's piece is a tautly tied leather construction, with a centered orifice symbolic of a mouth (but as a few onlookers pointed out, just turn the piece on its side and it evokes more, shall we say, feminine, anatomy).

The piece that seems to overwhelm the gallery — perhaps unintentionally adding an architectural element to the uninteresting space — is Hale's "If Two Were Three," steel, wood and resin. Again, the piece is constructed of an oversized arch supported by two differing columns and a fine wood base.

"I like the idea and feel of large sculpture," Hale said. "The biggest piece is the smallest I'd like to do. I've always been impressed with scale. I prefer to work with things that involve people on more than a human scale."

More info?
"Will Sculpt for Food," the MFA show of work by Michael Hale, will be in the Union art gallery until Friday. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday

The arch-defining central void of "If Two Were Three" is penetrated with another suspended object, which in this case, rocks back and forth. The power of the void suggests a passage from one side to the other, mentally but not necessarily physically.

"While the scale enlarges, I don't want it to become an architectural piece," Hale said. "I can involve the viewer in the piece."

If there is a negative aspect of this show, or the other MFA shows that preceded it, it is they last only one week.

It's almost not enough time to effectively enjoy such impressive student work.

Thinking of leaving school for NBA? Take the money and run

Well, we are nearing the end of college basketball for this year. Everyone is caught up in March Madness. There are tons of side stories that surround the tournament. One of them is the continued debate over college basketball players leaving school early for the NBA.

VIEWPOINT

SHANE McCORMICK

SHANE McCORMICK is a senior in radio/TV journalism. You can e-mail comments to Shane at (shanem@ksu.edu)

This year, one of the biggest names to leave school early is Kentucky's Ron Mercer. Many say he is making a mistake leaving early. Critics say he should follow the examples of Wake Forest's Tim Duncan or Kansas' Jacque Vaughn.

To Mercer, I say you made the right choice: Take the money and run.

College basketball is not just basketball anymore. It is a business. If you don't think so, then you better wake up and smell the coffee.

The basketball conferences receive money from television. Revenue from ticket sales goes to the athletic department, and the coaches get the six-digit salaries. And let's face it — nobody is getting anything without the players.

Yes, the coaches coach, but the players have to execute the plays. If they don't, the coach looks bad. The players put the fans in the seats and sometimes they can get a coach hired or fired.

But how much money do the players get out of this?

Nothing. Everyone else makes the money off of the players but they receive nothing. I can't imagine how much money is made off of replica jerseys of Mercer, Vaughn or any of Michigan's Fab Five when they were in college.

Yes, they do receive a free education. But for many, they still struggle to get by. When you consider how much time a player puts into practice, playing, lifting weights and studying basketball footage, many don't even have time for all of their studies, let alone a job to pay for other expenses.

Education is an important tool in one's life. But these players can come back later and finish their degrees. The prime example of this is Dallas Cowboys running back Emmitt Smith.

Smith left college early for the NFL draft and got paid millions. And a couple of years ago, he went back to Florida to finish his degree. He got the money and his degree.

Mercer knows he is going to be a top five pick in the NBA draft. Do the millions of dollars outweigh the risk of a career-ending injury next year at Kentucky?

You bet your dollars it does.

One can always go back to school on a torn-up knee. But one may not be able to ever play basketball the same on that knee.

And let's throw out the argument that says these players aren't ready for the next level, the NBA. Give me a break. The first seven players in last year's NBA draft were underclassmen. The teams that picked them knew they could play at the next level.

Guards Stephon Marbury and Allen Iverson are already dominating NBA veterans in their first year.

The college game is going to go on without these stars. Teams will restock; they always do. Players will continue to leave early, but new ones will continue to be introduced.

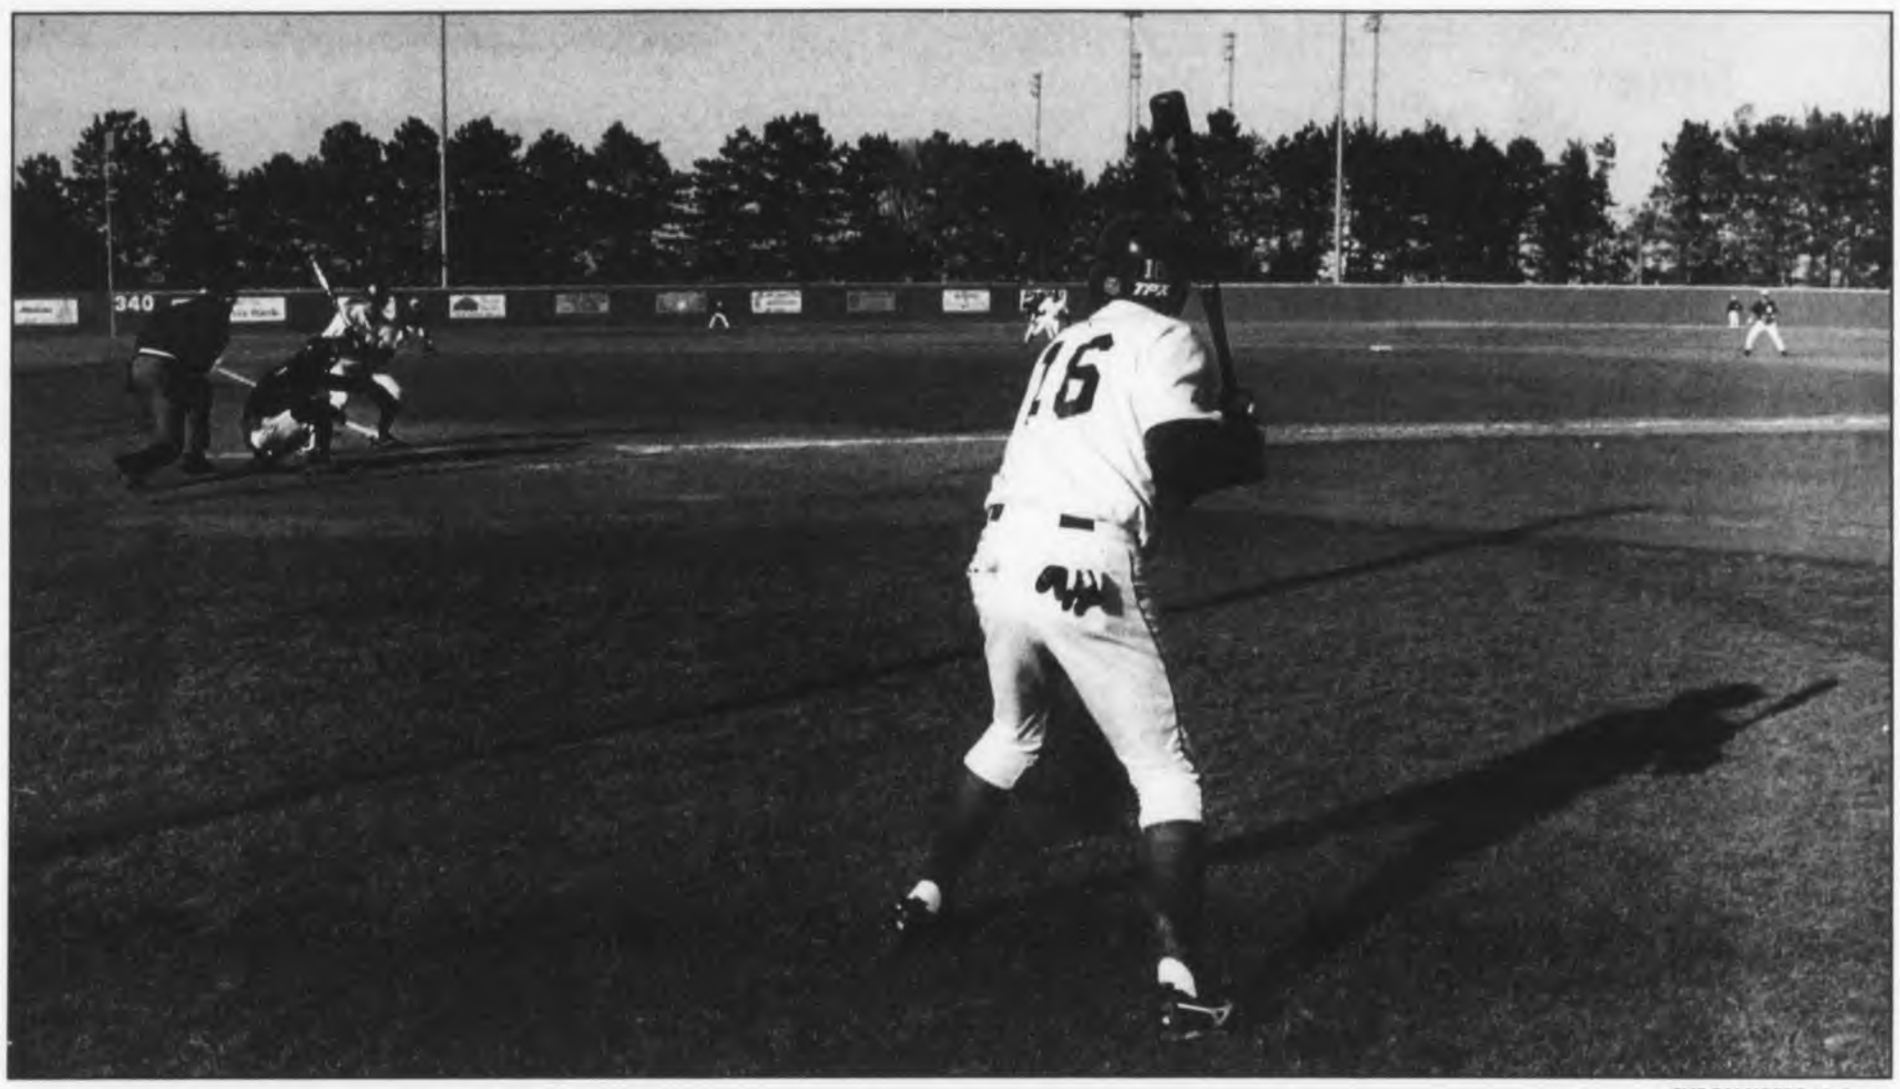
Kentucky and North Carolina both lost underclassmen to the NBA (Antoine Walker and Jeff McInnis), but they have not lost a beat, earning No. 1 seeds in this year's tournament.

I applaud those like Vaughn and Duncan who stay for their senior year. That was a very difficult decision for them, and it seems like it has worked out for the best. But for some, staying an extra year or two at college isn't the best answer.

For many, this is an outlet for providing for their families. Buying their parents that house they always wanted, providing money for siblings to go to college.

These players see the success other young players are having in the NBA. They see Kobe Bryant winning the all-Star game dunk contest. They see and hear what they are able to buy with all of that money.

They also hear about college graduates struggling to find a job out of school, and people who are settling for a second- or third-choice job.



If someone offered me a five year, multi-million dollar contract while in college, I am pretty sure I wouldn't turn it down.

Would you turn down guaranteed millions doing something you love for another year or two of homework and finals?

I think not.

After 3 wins at Oral Roberts, K-State is feeling nothing but SHORTSTOP HEATH SCHESSER waits on-deck as another K-State batter takes his turn at home plate March 1 against Missouri. The Cat lost to Missouri 15-14.

Cats play 27 innings of solid baseball, sweep tournament

BRIAN SMOLLER
staff reporter

The forecast for this year's edition of K-State baseball was supposed to be pitching, more pitching and some hitting.

Through the first part of the inaugural Big 12 season, the Wildcats' bats were supporting the team while the pitching struggled.

This past weekend, the Cats put it all together and pounded their way directly through three games in the Oral Roberts Tournament in Tulsa.

"We played great baseball," head coach Mike Clark said. "We didn't have one bad inning in 27 innings of baseball."

On Sunday the Cats delivered a 11-1 blasting to the host team Oral Roberts. Todd Fereday and Scott Poepard both went 3-6, and the 7-8-9 hitters in the lineup combined to go 8-11, driving in 6 runs.

Jason Wells tallied his fourth victory in as many starts, pitching eight innings and giving up one run on eight hits.

"Wells is throwing well," Clark said. "He's keeping the ball down and throwing strikes. We played with a lot of confidence," he said.

Saturday, the Cats tangled with Michigan. The Wolverines were ranked 30th in the nation coming into the game and were on a nine-game winning streak.

The Cats scored five runs in the bottom of the eighth to take a 9-6 decision.

"Garrett Bell had a two-run triple," Clark said, "and Mike Gardner had a pinch-hit, two-run double. Everybody we put in did a nice job."

K-State pitching again stepped up. This time Jon Oiseth delivered six innings, allowing only four runs.

Johnson pitched the ninth inning for his eighth save of the season, breaking the K-State single-season record. His 15 career saves also set a school record.

The Cats battled Pepperdine on Friday, escaping with a 1-0 victory against one of the top pitchers in the country, according to Clark.

"Everyone was saying, 'Tough luck, Coach. You drew Wolf,'" he said.

Randy Wolf, the ace of the Wave staff, throws somewhere around the middle 90s and was 3-1 heading into the contest.

However, the flip-flop action the Cats have taken this year with regard to pitching came through.

Chris Traylor notched his first victory of the season in his fourth attempt and shut down Pepperdine's offense on seven hits, allowing no runs in a stellar performance.

"Traylor matched him pretty well," said Clark of Wolf. "He obviously didn't have the same velocity, but he was just as effective."

Clark praised his team's diverse offensive production and lack of mistakes in the field.

"We got rallies from just about everywhere in the lineup," Clark said. "We played outstanding baseball. We made only one error in three games."

Although the weekend was a team success, it wasn't much of one for senior short stop Heath Schesser. Schesser went 2-15 in the series, collecting only one RBI.

"He was pressing a bit yesterday," Clark said Monday.

"He just needs some good swings in batting practice, and he'll be fine."

Another question mark is pitcher Tim Hertzel, who is experiencing back problems because of a muscle strain.

"We won't throw him for another week, which is too bad because we wanted to start him on Wednesday," Clark said.

Wednesday and Thursday, K-State plays host to Chicago State in a nonconference warmup for this weekend's clash with No. 21 Texas.

Johnson records 2 saves, nabs K-State record; 2 other players join him on all-Tournament team

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

Call it beginner's luck, but for Garrett Bell and Jason Wells it was just another day out at the ball park.

Both players, who are a freshman and sophomore respectively, earned all-Tournament team honors at the Oral Robert baseball tournament last weekend in Tulsa, Okla., along with closing pitcher David Johnson.

Johnson

In K-State's second-round game against Michigan, Johnson recorded his eighth save of the year and 15th of his career. Both marks constituted a K-State record.

Last year Johnson saved just six games the entire season.

"As a closer you're just sitting on the bench waiting for your opportunity," Johnson said. "For me, it's a total adrenaline rush and that adrenaline helps me prepare to get the job done."

Johnson pitched just 2.2 innings of relief work in the tourney, gave up just one hit and notched two strikeouts en route to his all-Tournament status.

"As a save situation comes up, the team does what they're supposed to do," Johnson said. "Our starting pitchers were really solid in that tournament, especially Jason against ORU."

Wells

Johnson said he was trying to concentrate on mixing up his pitches as the season progressed, but preferred to throw his split-finger fastball whenever he could.

"It's good to go to when my arm's feeling good," Johnson said. "If I continue to have the velocity, then that's what we'll go to."

Wells was named to the all-tourney team after a stellar performance in K-State's last game of the tournament against the host school.

Wells went eight innings, giving up one run and eight hits while fanning seven batters. Wells also picked up the win, his fourth of the year.

"Jason really is throwing well," Coach Mike Clark said. "He's keeping the speed of his pitches up, but keeping his location down."

Bell, meanwhile, consistently gave K-State solid hits toward the bottom of the lineup, especially when the Cats needed a runner on base.

Bell

"Basically, I just try to get on base and hope that our big hitters can get me in," Bell said. "I was fortunate to get some good hits last weekend."

Bell, who has steadily earned a spot in center field, said the weekend sweep gave him a lot of confidence.

"We know that we can beat those good teams, and I just went out there and had a lot of fun," he said. "I think that we have a great chance against Texas this weekend."

Sick of eating out of the vending machine everyday for lunch? Quit feeding quarters into that machine and start making

HEALTHY CHOICES

STORY BY CHRISTA CAREY

When in a hurry, eating healthy can seem tough. With the right foods on hand, students can make healthy choices.

"Students need to become avid label readers and learn what is in the foods they are eating," said Sharolyn Fleming, extension agent in family and consumer services for Riley County.

Meals should not be skipped, especially not breakfast.

"Skipping any meal is not good. It catches up with you, and you start to get edgy and or sleepy," Fleming said.

Preparing healthy snacks ahead of time and watching out for vending machines prevent long hours of exercising to burn off calories.

"Students should be careful of the food safety issue, however, and use caution with foods that need refrigeration," said Meredith Pearson, the director of the Family Nutrition Program at K-State.

The food safety issue follows a two-hour rule.

Anything perishable that has been out of the refrigerator for two hours at a time is not safe.

A suggestion for such items is freezing them if at all possible. This prevents bacterial growth that can cause sickness.

"Some frozen dinners are a healthy alternative if you add to them with fruit and vegetables," Pearson said.

Grocery shopping with health in mind can make it easier to stick to a good diet.

A grocery list should be prepared after a meal, so the shopper can think clearly about healthy choices. When shopping, the foods on the list should be the only foods in the cart. Less than 30 percent of an item's total calories should come from fat.

At home, get rid of fatty foods and foods that are outdated. Replace them with fresh, nutritious groceries.

Strawberry Shortcake

Ingredients:

One can of biscuits
2 pints of sliced strawberries
2 teaspoons orange juice
2 teaspoons granulated sugar
Nonfat yogurt (vanilla flavored)

Bake the biscuits according to directions on the can. In a bowl, mix strawberries, orange juice and sugar. Open biscuits and add strawberry mix. Garnish with yogurt.

Health Information
• Non-fat yogurt replaces whipped cream
• Offers vitamin C

[illegible] Stir-Fry

Ingredients:

3 skinless, boneless chicken breasts
3/4 cup reduced-sodium chicken broth
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1 cup snow peas
1 bell pepper
1/4 cup sliced onion
3/4 cup broccoli
2 cups cooked white rice

Cut chicken and onion into thin strips. Using a wok or non-stick skillet, heat oil over a medium heat. Stir-fry chicken for three minutes. Add vegetables and stir-fry for five minutes or less and add broth. Serve over a bed of rice.

Quick&Healthy Suggestions

Preparing snacks and meals ahead of time can help with healthy eating.

snacks

*Divide up a bag of pretzels, animal cookies, vanilla wafers, crackers or popcorn, putting each serving in its own plastic sandwich bag.

*Low-fat or fat-free popcorn. The best choice is air-popped.

*Popcorn rice cakes.

*Corn Nuts, unsalted.

*Individually packed string cheese.

*Wash and cut celery, carrots, cucumbers and green peppers, place in an air-tight container or individually package in sandwich bags.

*Fruits and vegetables are good because they have a protective outer layer and do not need any packaging.

meals

*Salad can be made and stored in an air-tight container, but just make enough for two to three days.

*Sandwiches are quick fixes. Try chicken or turkey breast, water packed tuna or roast beef. Be careful to use low-fat condiments.

*Soups, casseroles, rice, hot cereal and pasta can be made and frozen in individual microwave-safe containers and quickly reheated later.

*Leftovers make quick meals later on — reheat in the microwave.

*Frozen dinners — choose the ones with less than 300 calories, less than 10 grams of fat and less than 800 milligrams of sodium.

*A bagel spread with low-fat cream cheese or jelly, no butter and a glass of orange juice.

*Cereal with skim milk and a banana.

*A fruit shake made with 1 cup frozen fruit, 1/2 cup buttermilk and 2 teaspoons of sugar all well blended, served with a toasted English muffin.

*A fruit burrito made with a large flour tortilla, 2 tablespoons low fat ricotta cheese, 1/2 cup berries or apple slices and a dash of cinnamon sugar. Roll and microwave with seam down for 1 to 2 minutes.

*Hot oatmeal with brown sugar and a low-fat bran muffin.

Skalars CD romps with soul, swing-laden sound

PHIL KELLUM
staff writer

Soul, baby, soul!

You know what I'm talking about. Soul. Motown. Stax. Volt. Aretha. Otis. Booker T.

Some people have soul, and some don't.

Isaac Green and the Skalars, from St. Louis, Mo., definitely have soul. And lots of it.

Music Review

On their debut album, "Skoolin' With The Skalars," on Moon Ska Records, they take you on a fun romp through 13 songs that will get you out of your chair and onto the dance floor in no time.

Their distinctive, soul and swing-laden ska sound is set apart from other ska bands due to their triple female vocals, which are sure to make you weak in the knees.

After releasing two 7-inch singles in 1995 and 1996, it's good to see them in compact disc form on a nationwide label, so they get the respect and exposure they deserve.

All of the songs on here are live favorites, and all but two have not been released in studio form. Earlier versions of "The Row" and "Junbok" have appeared on the "Skankin' 'Round the Internet" cassette compilation and their first 7-inch single, respectively.

"Spoiled Brat" starts everything off on the right foot, and they don't stop pumping out the soulful grooves until the final song, the unlisted "Ike's Ride."

The Skalars show just how much soul they have on their cover of the Motown classic, "Beechwood 4-5789," by the Marvelettes. The Marvelettes would be more than proud of this version.

Vocalists and saxophonists Jessica Butler, Amy Scherer and Michelle Ferguson step aside on their cover of jump-blues legend Wynonie Harris' "Bloodshot Eyes" to let trombonist Evan Shaw take over on the vocal duties.

Manhattan native Shaw tears it up and rocks the house down to its foundation. You will be singing along in no time.

They even do the Skatalites justice, which is difficult, on their cover of "I Love You."

The musicianship shown by the Skalars is amazing. Each member of the band performs at a top-notch caliber.

The horn section is very full-sounding.

Scherer, Butler and Ferguson's vocals are stellar. They're smoother than silk and sweeter than a chocolate bar. They are easily the best singers in all of ska.

Ethan D'Ercole, guitarist, blows me away every time I hear his solos. They are very soulful and reminiscent of soul guitarists like Steve Cropper of Booker T. and the MG's and Otis Redding's backup band.

Drummer Dave Sharma is one of the best drummers in ska music, and this album is no exception. Along with bassist Willie Horton, they lay down some of the most rock-solid backbeats ever recorded.

Jason Brody plays the Farfisa organ how it should be played — incredibly well. He is phenomenal and there are some rather unusual sounds coming out of it during "Ike's Ride" that have to be heard to be believed.

Isaac Green himself, on "Steps and Shouts," does just that. He dances like a madman, with some of the best dance moves ever, during their live show. He also plays a mean cowbell and sings co-lead vocals on many songs, including "Junbok" and "Ike's Ride," a song about his ego.

It's too bad Isaac doesn't come with the CD because he is amazing to watch on stage.

The Skalars have the potential to be monstrous, and a force to be reckoned with in the ska world with an album like this.

GOVERNMENT IN ACTION

The New York Daily News reported in January that a fire hydrant had recently been installed at the busy intersection of Tremont Avenue and Boston Road in the Bronx but that it was installed in the street, five feet from the curb, requiring all traffic to go around it.

A city spokesman said the hydrant was installed properly and that eventually a sidewalk would be built in what is now the curb lane, but because of engineering delays and bad weather, construction has not yet been scheduled.

"I THINK IT'S A MATTER of getting attorneys working together and working out the options. ... My read on talking with members of the PGA board of directors is that they are going to need that land in place before they are going to make a decision."

would stand to profit from the land's development.

"I've been very careful on that," Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said. "I full-well recognize that becomes an issue, and I can guarantee that there is not a conflict of interest on that, nor would I become involved in a project that has a conflict of interest.

"That's a situation where I'm not involved in a land site selection," he said. "That's done through the architect, and that's done through Jim and the other people who are contributing to the project."

State statutes on conflicts of interest don't specifically address situations where a state employee or policymaker's decisions would benefit in-laws.

Charlie Smithson, attorney for the Commission on Governmental Standards and Ethics, said that unless the policymaker holds some sort of interest in a project, it would not be a conflict.

"There's an appearance factor that isn't in the laws," Smithson said.

Because neither Krause nor his wife, Marty Vanier, own any part of the property in question, by state law it does not constitute a conflict of interest.

The Kansas Board of Regents maintain stricter standards, but its standards have more to do with commercial research ventures and substantial interest in investments statements.

Although the Vanier site has been selected, the deal on the property has not been closed.

Colbert said he would hate to find another site but said Jack Vanier has not yet contracted a deal for the site.

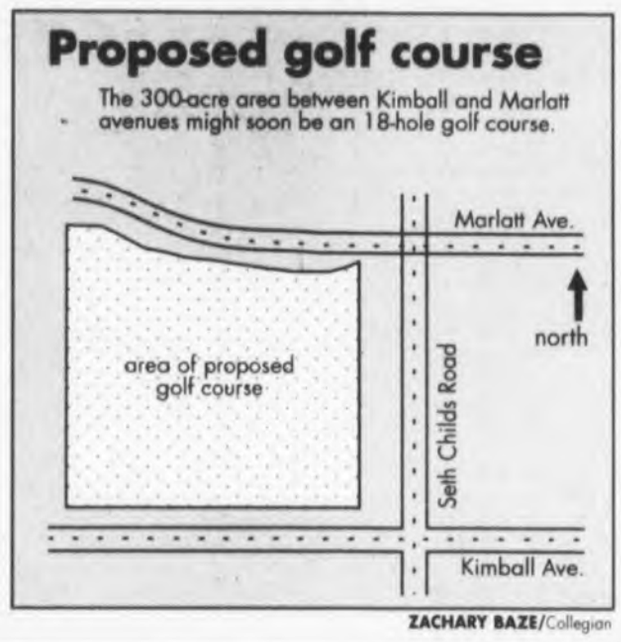
"I think we'll get together, but I don't know," he said.

The Vanier site isn't the only property that was studied. Land east of Manhattan was once considered but deemed too flat.

Existing University property north of the main campus was also explored, but was not deemed prime golf course property.

"Frankly, when Jim began looking at designs, it was really a matter of where is there enough land that you can do a championship course on and whether the development is east or west — what is available," Krause said.

Krause said he does agree there is the potential for private landowners in the site's area to profit from future development.



The current status on the site doesn't faze Krause.

"I think it's a matter of getting the attorneys together and working out the options," he said. "Again, it's a matter I've stayed out of. My read on talking with members of the PGA board of directors is that they are going to need that land in place before they are going to make a decision."

golf team, where he got his start and has had a marvelous career as a player," Krause said. "He's had a marvelous career as a developer and does a tremendous job with the PGA Tour charities, and he's had this desire for quite a while.

"Without major partners from the golf world and without Jim Colbert, I wouldn't waste a day's time thinking about it."

PLANNING THE COURSE

The K-State administration and Colbert's architects have been planning a course with local site selection and trips to other campus golf courses for ideas during the past year.

On Sept. 12, Krause; Gary Hellebust, vice president of the KSU Foundation; and Alan Klug, assistant controller at the Foundation; flew to Stillwater, Okla., to visit the Oklahoma State University campus.

The three men met with members of the OSU Foundation and discussed, among other things, OSU's golf course and how it was developed. OSU's course is owned by the OSU Foundation and is a for-profit development featuring a housing subdivision.

But, Krause said K-State has no interest in developing its course like OSU has.

However, the Ritchie Corporation of Wichita and the J.C. Nichols Company of Kansas City, Mo., have expressed interest in developing homes on private property bordering the course. Two hotel sites bordering the course are also included in preliminary designs.

The planned course site is north of Kimball Drive just west of Seth Childs Road.

Krause said K-State's course would probably include a clubhouse with eating facilities, although it is premature to know for sure, an 18-hole course, a driving range and a nine-hole teaching or experimental course. Other rumored developments, like hotels or housing, would not be pursued by K-State, Krause said.

The golf course would be a private development only spearheaded by K-State. A support corporation, the recently formed KSU Golf Course Management and Research Foundation, would develop and operate the course with profits eventually going toward golf team scholarships and other athletic endowments.

The course project also includes an educational aspect for the K-State turf management program and a possible opportunity for business and hotel and restaurant management students to be involved in the operation of a clubhouse.

The course would also act as a living laboratory for playing conditions research, product development, and technology application with golf industry partners.

"If there wasn't an educational component or research component with this program, if it were simply a facility enhancement for the golf team — to me that doesn't make a lot of sense," Krause said.

Although the Foundation has been involved in preliminary planning, it won't take a formal role in the course development. The Golf Foundation is a support foundation under the K-State Foundation.

"It's separate, but it's organized as a support foundation to the KSU Foundation," Krause said. "It will be incorporated as a non-profit foundation.

"The KSU Foundation has substantial control in the sense that a majority of golf board of director members will always be a majority of KSU Foundation trustees," he said. "We did that so it is within the structure of the KSU Foundation, but separate and would not incur liabilities that would go against the KSU Foundation."

The support foundation fundraises, manages and develops for the course project.

Krause said he has been selective about finding private contributors to the project.

"We're making sure to bring outside money in from people that heretofore haven't been associated with other Foundation fundraisers," he said. "Donors give to what they want to give to."

Gary Hellebust, K-State Foundation vice president, said the Foundation has been alerted by the K-State administration that the golf course is a University priority.

The Foundation does not accept gifts for projects that haven't been prioritized by the University administration.

"We could facilitate the receiving of donations for a golf course, but we would not be financially responsible," Hellebust said.

Hellebust said the K-State Foundation is not interested in running a golf course for profit similar to the OSU course, but would assist the University in accepting donations if the cause were to arise.

"We don't want to get into a for-profit situation," he said.

There have been some concerns floating around the campus about course fundraising being diverted from academic contributors.

"Any goal affects other goals," Hellebust said.

Hellebust said important donors for the course haven't suggested they would contribute to academic needs at K-State while still contributing to the course.

"We don't look for that to be a major impact," he said. "You are always going to have some negative comments about any progressive thing you try to do."

Hellebust said the KSU Foundation has spent minimal staff time working on the project and have basically helped to coordinate donors and answer administrative questions.

Hellebust said the golf foundation will do the fundraising. He said the majority of contributors are people who would not normally give to K-State but are giving to the course project in honor of Colbert.

COLBERT'S ROLE IN THE COURSE

Colbert, who is actively involved in PGA Charities and was named 1995 and 1996 Senior Tour Player of the Year, achieved record-setting performances on the 1996 PGA Senior Tour with a five-victory championship season as the repeat top money winner.

Already a member of the K-State Sports Hall of Fame and the Kansas Golf Hall of Fame, Colbert sees this course as his legacy to his alma mater.

"With all the great new facilities at K-State, I just decided K-State should have a world-class golf facility and a world-class golf program," Colbert said.

Colbert said he interested the PGA, which has recently begun to facilitate programs for non-golfers and youth, in the project through the educational aspects of K-State's proposal.

However, Colbert said the course will probably not lure a PGA Tour to Manhattan. He said the PGA will simply operate the course.

"To get K-State to be the first one of the PGA collegiate courses is a big feat," he said. "It will be the best thing that could happen to the city and the University at the same time."

VISIBILITY FOR K-STATE

"From a University standpoint, I think it could have a significant impact on visibility for K-State and on the region," Krause said.

"We talk a lot about this kind of development, but until that happens, until that decision is made that all partners are in agreement that this can be done and is consistent with the educational mission of the institution, then fine."

The PGA directors will meet again during the summer to finalize or dismiss a contract to manage the course — although Krause and Colbert are optimistic the directors will approve.

Colbert said the only way to do this project is to make it the best course in the Midwest.

"It could be very special," he said. "We'll have the best people in the world working on it."

Administration promises to revamp IRS structure

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration, seeking tighter control over the troubled IRS, unveiled a plan Monday to strengthen oversight and management of the tax collection agency.

The move comes as a congressional panel prepares its own recommendations to overhaul the Internal Revenue Service, which has come under unprecedented criticism for a botched computer upgrade and poor service.

"The IRS needs to be more responsive to taxpayers, to use technology more effectively and to be more efficient," Deputy Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers said in a speech to the Tax Executives Institute. Later, to reporters, Summers observed, "Money has been wasted that should not have been wasted, and customer service should have been better."

Leading House Republicans said the proposals, while well intentioned, aren't new and don't go far enough.

"We have as an objective ending the Internal Revenue Service as we know it," House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said in a House floor speech outlining the GOP's upcoming plans in Congress.

Gingrich, citing the IRS' troubled $3.3-billion computer modernization program, said the Clinton administration should pursue significant tax reform and shouldn't try to design a computer system to interpret an enormously complex and technical tax code.

While urging a reduction in capital gains and estate taxes, Gingrich said he wants to improve the IRS service so taxpayers will get accurate answers to tax questions and eliminate filing for as many as 40-million taxpayers with simple tax returns.

Rep. Jim Kolbe, R-Ariz., chairman of a House Appropriations subcommittee that oversees the IRS budget, said the Clinton administration plan "is not what I would call a bold reconfiguration of the IRS." Kolbe wanted greater specifics for improving agency operations.

> The IRS needs to be more responsive to taxpayers, to use technology more effectively and to be more efficient. Money has been wasted that should not have been wasted, and customer service should have been better.

The IRS is under fire after it admitted to essentially misusing or wasting $400 million out of $3.3 billion it spent on computer modernization since 1987, while failing to replace aging paper tax return processing or integrating nine databases used to research taxpayer complaints.

The General Accounting Office, Congress' watchdog agency, has been highly critical of the agency's management and considers the IRS a high risk for waste, abuse, fraud and mismanagement.

Responding to these concerns, the Treasury wants to make permanent an IRS oversight board within the Treasury Department to help supervise the troubled computer upgrade.

Seeking to minimize differences with Congress, Summers said he and Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin have had a productive dialogue with lawmakers about the IRS' future and that there's a broad consensus building on solutions.

Also under the Treasury's plan, IRS managers would have increased flexibility to hire outside help, particularly people with computers skills, and pay them more.

The plan also envisions the IRS contracting with private businesses to assist with processing tax returns and collect on tax deadbeats.

Summers also proposed reforming budget procedures so the agency has sufficient long-term funding to modernize computers. The administration previously recommended $500 million in long-term funds.

Summers said the administration will work to simplify the tax code but did not provide details. And it envisions giving IRS managers greater flexibility while holding them more accountable for mistakes.

IRS Commissioner Margaret Richardson has announced plans to leave the agency by next month. Summers said the administration will emphasize that her successor have proven managerial skills as well as tax expertise.

House passes bill suspending 1994 water quality standards

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House passed a bill Monday that would place a 2-year moratorium on enforcement of tougher water quality standards that were imposed in Kansas in 1994. The vote was 92-29.

It had been scheduled for final vote on Friday, but the vote was postponed because of the absence of some members.

The only House member to explain his vote, Rep. Ted Powers, R-Mulvane, put his reluctant yes vote to rhyme:

"I vote red against the feds;

"Someone, somewhere, somehow better use some restraint on ammonia and herbicides;

"I change to vote green (yes), reluctantly, for atrazine."

The measure not only suspends the 3-year-old standards, but also would create a special state commission to review federal Environmental Protection Agency standards on allowable amounts of atrazine, ammonia and chlorides in Kansas surface water.

The bill suspends 1994 water quality standards, but keeps in place 1987 standards so the state is not removing all requirements that cities and farmers must meet.

Gov. Bill Graves has given qualified support to the 2-year suspension of the regulations.

The suspension, which will continue until July 1, 1999, if the bill wins legislative approval and becomes law, puts back into effect 1987 standards that allow three parts of the chemicals per billion parts of water. The 1994 standards lowered that requirement to one part per billion.

Thirty-five cities do not presently meet the 1-per-billion criteria, and claim it will cost millions of dollars for them to upgrade their water treatment facilities to meet that standard.

They include Topeka, which claims its cost to upgrade would be $15 million, along with Atchison, Augusta, Chanute, Coffeyville, El Dorado, Fort Scott, Independence, Junction City, Ottawa, Parsons, Pratt and Winfield.

However, 865 cities and towns already meet the higher standard — including Wichita, which spent $25 million to upgrade its facilities to meet the 1987 and 1994 standards.

Electronic system for food stamps, welfare complete

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Kansas' new system for letting food stamp and welfare recipients get their benefits through use of plastic cards resembling credit cards is now operational statewide, the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services said Monday.

Use of the Kansas Vision Card for food stamps and the Electronic Benefit Transfer card for cash assistance began in the Wichita area last August, and took 8 months to fully implement, SRS said.

The program changes the state's food stamp and cash assistance programs from a paper system to an electronic system.

It permits people eligible for food stamps to use their Vision Card to purchase food at participating stores and for those eligible for cash assistance to use their EDT cards to get cash from their welfare accounts.

In its public announcement, SRS quoted both recipients and business people with rating the system an unqualified success.

"It's so much easier, so much more convenient," said Topekan Shannon Hauschild, a food stamp recipient. "It also boosts my self-esteem. To me, the most degrading thing in the world is pulling out a pocketful of food stamps with everybody in the world knowing what you're doing."

Jim Sheehan, executive director of the Kansas Food Dealers Association, was quoted as saying the system has worked extremely well.

SRS said the last region to have the system operational was the 25-county Garden City area in southwest Kansas, where it began this month.

As of March 1, SRS said, it had issued about $82 million in food stamps and $62 million in cash assistance through the electronic system. It said more than 1,500 Kansas retailers now accept the Vision Card.

The state issues the cards and creates authorized benefit accounts for the eligible recipients. When recipients use their cards, benefits in their accounts are reduced by the amount of food purchased or cash withdrawn.

Judge will not delay OKC bombing trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — The judge in the Oklahoma City bombing case Monday refused to delay Timothy McVeigh's trial despite a stream of news stories about his purported confession.

McVeigh

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch said jury selection will begin as planned March 31.

The stories about McVeigh appeared in recent weeks in the Dallas Morning News, Playboy and Newsweek.

"Past experience with jurors and a general awareness of public attitudes about pretrial publicity in similar cases strongly suggests that these stories have had neither the wide exposure nor general acceptance that the defendant's lawyers presume," Matsch wrote.

"I have full confidence that a fair-minded jury can and will be empaneled and that those selected will return a just verdict based on the law and evidence presented to them."

McVeigh's lawyer, Stephen Jones, had asked Matsch to dismiss the charges or delay the trial.

"Judge Matsch has addressed these issues, and we'll hope he's right," Jones said after the ruling.

Matsch noted that the story has been extensively reported in the two years since the bombing. Nearly 1,000 prospective jurors have been summoned, and Matsch expressed confidence that careful questioning could produce an impartial jury of 12 members and six alternates.

The trial was moved to Denver from Oklahoma City to make it easier to find an impartial jury.

Newsweek magazine reported this week that McVeigh admitted during a lie detector test given by his lawyers that he was involved in the April 1995 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. The explosion killed 168 people and injured more than 500.

McVeigh failed a question about whether all his accomplices were known to investigators, the magazine said, citing anonymous sources close to the investigation.

The Dallas Morning News also has reported that McVeigh had confessed to the bombing, and a story in Playboy outlined what it said were defense documents that detail how the bombing was carried out.

McVeigh and Terry Nichols could face the death penalty if convicted of conspiracy and murder. Nichols' trial date has not been set.

Finch will have some technical advantages over Earhart, the Atchison aviator who vanished with navigator Fred Noonan 22,000 miles into the flight near Howland Island in the Pacific Ocean.

A global-positioning satellite receiver will tell Finch exactly where she is. She also will have VHF radio communications to help with landings and takeoffs.

In another difference, Finch has planned all along to fly east. Earhart originally went west and crashed in Hawaii. The plane was shipped back and repaired, and she tried again on May 21, this time going east.

Finch, who plans to drop a wreath on Howland Island, will have an escort plane carrying a film crew to chronicle the flight.

Earhart was the first woman to fly solo across the Atlantic, the first woman to fly nonstop across the United States and the first woman to fly from Hawaii to the West Coast.

JILL STORY
campus editor

Both sets of candidates for student body president and vice president agree that the campus shuttle service should be expanded to combat parking problems and Lafene Health Center should be moved to Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue.

They also agree that teacher evaluations should be made public, but differ on the method that should be used to do it.

Presidential candidate Tim Riemann and his running mate Jennafer Neufeld, as well as presidential candidate Aaron Otto addressed these and other issues in the living room of Boyd Hall Tuesday night. Amy Knedlik, vice presidential candidate, was studying for a test and was not present.

Each ticket was given a chance to outline its campaign platform and then field questions from the audience of about 35 students.

Riemann and Neufeld said they were running on three main issues: a state education grant, the distribution of teacher information and the implementation of a plus system.

"The average K-Stater graduates with $10,000 worth of debt," Riemann said.

He said they want to work with the state Legislature to create a state education grant, which they said would help reduce the ever-rising cost of higher education for students who need the extra help.

The Riemann-Neufeld ticket is also proposing a take-off on the teacher evaluation system already in the works.

"We are proposing a student advisory committee on teaching excellence," Neufeld said.

The system the pair is proposing is modeled after a system in place at the University of Chicago. Teachers would submit summaries of and objectives for their courses. Students would fill out evaluations of the instructors and classes.

All of the information would then be given to the student advisory committee, which in turn would write a summary of the course. This information would then be made available to all students.

"This is positive for both teachers and students," Neufeld said.

Bringing the plus system to K-State was the last of the three main issues Riemann and Neufeld addressed in their campaign platform discussion.

"What the plus system is not, is a plus-minus system. There are no minuses, and there are no A pluses, so it is still on a four-point scale," Riemann said.

The system would reward a student for excellence within the established grading scale, Riemann said. If one student had an 89 percent, that student would receive a B plus, and a student with an 81 percent would receive a B.

He said such systems are already in place at the University of Nebraska and the University of Tennessee.

Neufeld also said that if elected, she and Riemann would work to continue to improve campus safety.

Otto, who is currently student body vice president, also addressed three main campaign platforms that he and Knedlik are running on. These include a teacher evaluation system, campus safety and replacing or updating aging equipment on campus.

"Chris Hansen and I have been working to make teacher evaluations public," Otto said.

The current teacher evaluations on ScanTron cards cannot be made public because they are the property of the faculty, he said.

Otto and Knedlik would like to publish information including course syllabus information, how often tests are given, if the professor curves grades and if the instructor has an English problem. Otto said they would like to publish the information on the World Wide Web.

"This information is especially important because of linear tuition," Otto said.

Students need to have this information readily available when they are making decisions about enrollment, he said. With the linear tuition system in place, students receive a smaller refund the longer they wait before dropping a class.

Otto said he and Knedlik also want to address campus safety by making changes to the campus escort service. Their idea is to restructure and centralize the service by moving it to Farrell Library and expand the radius to include service to places four or five blocks off campus, he said.

"We want to improve its range and service to people," Otto said.

The final issue Otto addressed in the overview of his and Knedlik's campaign platform was replacing outdated technology on campus.

"When Mound City High School has better equipment than we do in Ackert Hall, that's sad," Otto said. "We need to make legislators aware of deficient and

New course causes concern for local golf course owners

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Tuesday's announcement of a proposed K-State golf course has caused a stir in the local golf-course community.

Officials representing the two 18-hole golf courses in Manhattan — Stagg Hill Golf Course and the Manhattan Country Club — would not comment on the proposal.

The manager of Stagg Hill Golf Course refused to be interviewed or named for this story. Mont Green, general manager of the Country Club, said he has no comment.

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement and proponent of the proposed K-State golf course, said he doesn't see the course as hurting other Manhattan courses. He said a new course could create competition, but because it would be a championship course, it would be marketed statewide.

"It's not a matter of relying solely on your absorption market in a 10-mile or 20-mile radius," he said.

Like other courses, the K-State course would also be on taxable land, as opposed to K-State property that is non-taxable, he said.

However, those words come as no comfort to the one other golf course owner in Manhattan who will talk.

Kevin Fateley, owner of Kangolf, the parent company of Wildcat Creek Sports Center in Frank Anneberg Park and Sports Complex, isn't thrilled that there will be another golf course in Manhattan.

> "Our concern is, if it's a K-State course, and they can't bring in 50,000 rounds at $50, then they might have to lower their rates, and then that becomes competition."
> • Kevin Fateley
> owner of Kangolf

Kangolf only recently completed building nine holes of an executive golf course that could eventually be expanded to 18 holes.

"If K-State pulls in statewide, they might do well," Fateley said. "If they are talking $50 green fees and cart — the golfers in this town can't afford it.

"Our concern is, if it's a K-State course, and they can't bring in 50,000 rounds at $50, then they might have to lower their rates, and then that becomes competition.

"We've watched it closely and one of the things that concerns us is that it was an 18-hole course and now there is a nine hole executive course," he said. "What concerns us is if that executive course will be discounted to students."

Fateley said he is also torn by a commitment he has as past president of the Kansas Turf Grass Association, which would benefit from the K-State golf course's inclusion of turf management research programs.

"On one hand, I don't like it that they are competing. On the other hand, I see the research value of it," he said. "My question is, why not build one or two holes at the existing turf research farm?"

Fateley said he feels K-State is using research as an excuse to develop a nine-hole executive course.

There's also the question of new members of a golf club and how much they would be willing to pay.

He said he doesn't think Manhattan could support an exclusive golf club, let alone lure the PGA Tour to town.

"I can appreciate being secretive, and there's a huge land-swap going on," Fateley said. "As a guy who has lived here 20 years, I just can't believe that high-dollar, high-caliber course could make it in this town. I wish it could."

Krause said he doesn't see the nine-hole K-State course as competition for Wildcat Creek — mainly because he and other developers aren't sure if it will be included in the project.

"It's a second phase if it happens, and it will be a teaching course," he said. "They have a whole other niche in the marketplace.

"There's competition, you can't deny that," Krause said. "You try to do it so it is minimized.

"Hopefully, the price-range and the caliber of the course will sort that marketplace out."

Jim Colbert, the K-State alumnus who is privately leading the drive for the course, said he doesn't think the course will affect the other courses in Manhattan.

"I think it will really enhance the Manhattan Country Club," he said. "A little competition with the country club is terrific. If they lose a couple members — they are overused anyway."

Colbert said he thinks K-State's course will attract golfers from throughout the state.

Ringed in light from the "CBS Evening News" cameras, Jessie Foveaux, 98, stepped into the Manhattan City Commission meeting room Tuesday night and smiled.

Foveaux, a Manhattan resident, was honored Tuesday night for the book she wrote at 80 years of age.

The book, "The Life of Jessie Lee Brown from Birth Up to 80 Years," gained her national acclaim when her former writing teacher, Charles Kempthorne, submitted her book to the Wall Street Journal.

"That's my birthday present from him and June," Foveaux said. "They've been wanting it done for a long time. I thought it was a real nice birthday present."

Clare Ansberry, a staff writer at the Wall Street Journal, wrote a front-page article March 14 highlighting Foveaux's experiences of living with an alcoholic husband and raising eight children alone in the post-World War II era.

After the story ran, Foveaux began receiving calls from all over the country.

"The phone started to ring Friday morning at 8 o'clock, and it hasn't stopped since," Foveaux said.

Foveaux wrote the story 18 years ago as a Christmas present for her children. The book was written in longhand.

"I went up to the college, and they ran them up for me and put covers on them. That was their Christmas present," she said.

Foveaux's book will be auctioned today in New York, where publishers are rumored to be starting the bidding at $375,000.

"I want to see what they're gonna call it," Foveaux said.

Foveaux said people had been calling her from different states wanting a copy of her book.

A CBS News Crew spent Tuesday with Foveaux.

"I don't understand why there's so much excitement," Foveaux said.

Mayor Sydney Carlin presented Foveaux with a certificate at the City Commission meeting. March 18, 1997, Foveaux's birthday, was officially named Jessie Foveaux Day in Manhattan.

Foveaux said she was happy to have her family here.

"It's wonderful. That's more exciting to me."

Foveaux has not decided what she will do with the money from her book.

"It will take a great deal of planning. I'm not in any hurry," Foveaux said.

Despite the successful reception her first book has received, Foveaux is not anxious to try again.

"I'm not a writer. I never pretended to be," Foveaux said. "I think when this is over, I'll never try again."

Foveaux said Manhattan was her home.

"Sure I'm gonna stay in Manhattan. I don't know of any place else I want to live," Foveaux said.

Carlin said by issuing a proclamation, the city could honor Foveaux, who brought national acclaim to the city.

Foveaux has been a resident of Manhattan since 1910. She has lived in the same house for 74 years.

"I lived across the street from her," Carlin said.

She worked as a laundress and a nurse's aid. She lived through marriage to an alcoholic abusive husband, Carlin said.

"She created from her heart a powerful and moving story of her life," Carlin said.

With family from Minnesota and Georgia visiting, Foveaux was surrounded by her family on her birthday.

"We're overwhelmed and very proud — which we were always proud, but this was unreal," Dee Dee Torgerson, Foveaux's daughter, said.

"We're very happy for her, and no one is more deserving in this world."

Linda Rutledge, Foveaux's granddaughter, said Foveaux had also taught a tatting class through K-State. Although the class was offered through the University, it was in her home.

"She'd teach anyone that wanted to learn," Rutledge said.

These briefs encapsulate the news of the past 24 hours, and they are from staff reports, wire reports and other news services.

▶ NATION AND WORLD

• COMATOSE RAPE VICTIM DIES A YEAR AFTER GIVING BIRTH.

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — A nursing home patient who was raped while in a coma-like state and gave birth without ever regaining consciousness has died at age 30.

The woman, identified only as Kathy, died over the weekend at a health care center, said a law enforcement official who spoke on condition of anonymity. The cause of death was not disclosed.

The woman fell into a chronic vegetative state after a car wreck in 1985. A decade later, she was raped by a nurse's aide. Her Roman Catholic family ruled out an abortion and decided to raise the boy, whose first birthday was Tuesday.

Doctors said it was the first case of a woman in a coma-like state becoming pregnant and giving birth.

On Feb. 27, John Horace, 53, was convicted of raping the woman. He could get up to 25 years in prison at sentencing March 27.

• ISRAELI BULLDOZERS BREAK GROUND IN JERUSALEM.

JERUSALEM — Yellow bulldozers began clearing away rocks and earth Tuesday for a Jewish housing project in disputed east Jerusalem, triggering Palestinian protests and warnings that Mideast peace was near collapse.

Hundreds of troops in riot gear, backed by snipers and helicopters, sealed off the pine-covered hill where 6,500 Jewish apartments are to be built on land claimed by the Palestinians as part of a future capital.

There was scuffling around the site, and scattered protests broke out later.

A combative Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu defended his decision to go ahead with the construction. Both sides have made the project a test of their resolve on Jerusalem, the deal-breaker of the Israel-Palestinian negotiations.

• DRUG CHARGES DISMISSED IN MEDICINAL-USE CASE.

LOS ANGELES — Applause erupted in a courtroom when prosecutors dismissed criminal charges against an AIDS patient who used marijuana under a doctor's written diagnosis.

"We just had something phenomenal happen," defense attorney John Duran said Monday. "The city attorney had a change of heart."

The filing of drug possession charges against Willie Perkins, 35, was a key challenge to California's voter-approved medical marijuana law.

Perkins was arrested Dec. 8 with a plastic bag of marijuana. Although he produced a letter from a doctor at Harbor-UCLA Medical Center, it was not until Monday that prosecutors made calls to verify the authenticity of the letter, Duran said.

The prosecutor said he was skeptical that a precedent had been set.

California voters approved Proposition 215 in November, legalizing possession and cultivation of marijuana for medical purposes with a doctor's prescription.

• BIGGIE SMALLS TAKES LAST RIDE.

NEW YORK — Laid out in a double-breasted white suit and matching hat, the Notorious B.I.G. made his last trip Tuesday through the Brooklyn streets where he went from crack dealer to gangsta rap star.

The rapper's massive body was driven from a service on Manhattan's well-to-do Upper East Side to his Bedford-Stuyvesant neighborhood, where thousands lined the streets to watch the procession of black limousines and salute the man born Christopher Wallace.

Wallace, 24, was killed March 9 in a drive-by shooting in Los Angeles as he left a party.

Wallace, whose 230-pound, 6-foot frame also earned him the nickname Biggie Smalls, had told of selling crack on the streets before releasing his debut album, "Ready to Die."

The crowd cheered wildly as the funeral cortege passed. It was led by a hearse bearing the rapper — a father of two — and two black Cadillacs filled with flowers.

Commission supports housing development

DAVID FAIRBANKS
staff reporter

A land developer requested a letter of support from the Manhattan City Commission for a proposed housing development Tuesday night.

Phil Frigon's development, Victoria Place, will provide housing for low-income residents and senior citizens. It is set to be constructed at Wizard Circle on Little Kitten Avenue in Manhattan. The development will include 48 units, 24 two-bedroom apartments and 24 three-bedroom apartments.

Residents from the Little Kitten neighborhood attended to show their disapproval of the proposed construction.

Their main concern was that the construction would magnify their problems with flooding in the area.

Darold Dodge, soil scientist and area resident, voiced his opinions on the proposed development.

"By building these apartments Mr. Frigon will be causing a higher concentration of water runoff for property owners downstream," Dodge said.

Dodge said there was no way, with the space available, for Frigon to prevent this from happening.

"I'm not squawking about the buildings themselves. I'm squawking about where they're being put," Dodge said.

To correct the storm drainage problem, a set of guidelines called the Storm Water Master Plan was put together in 1995. This means that all land that was annexed, zoned and platted after 1995 must conform to specific storm water regulations.

However, the piece of land Frigon plans to put the new development on was purchased and zoned prior to the plan.

Jerry Petty, director of public works, said, "Even though the master plan went into effect long after the land was zoned and platted, he has agreed to comply with the regulations anyway."

The 5.7-acre lot in question can hold 19 units per square acre. Karen Davis, director of community development, said Frigon can legally build close to 100 units on this land. His proposed development includes only 48 single-story units.

After hearing from the public and deliberating among themselves, the commission passed the motion to sign the letter of support.

Also included in Tuesday's meeting was a request by Community On-Line Resource Exchange for $7,500 for funding assistance.

Karen Cole, CORE chairwoman, presented the request to the commission.

"Our major objective is to provide easy access to networked, public information," Cole said.

Cole reviewed with the commission what CORE hopes to accomplish and its preliminary budget. She showed the commission the newly constructed CORE homepage on the Internet.

Through this page, a user can access all Manhattan community happenings, connect with both libraries in town and be linked to an array of public information, Cole said.

The commission unanimously voted to grant CORE its $7,500 request.

Free concert features K-State bands

▶ Concert info. The K-State Symphony Band and Concert Band will perform at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium. The concert is free and open to the public.

SARA EDWARDS
staff reporter

A variety of selections will be featured at the K-State Symphony Band and Concert Band performance tonight.

The bands will perform one of their two concerts this semester at 8 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

The concert is free and open to the public.

The Independence High School Concert Band will be featured at the concert. The band will also attend clinics that day, Frank Tracz, director of bands, said.

Independence High School Concert Band selections include "Across the Plains" by Daniel Chism and "Military Escort" by Harold Bennett.

K-State Concert Band selections include "Winter Evening Song" by Brian Israel and "Satiric Dances" by Norman Dello Joio.

Dana Fritzemeier, Concert Band member, said "Satiric Dances" is her favorite selection.

"It's just exciting to play because it keeps moving," she said.

The K-State Symphony Band will feature Anthony Di Sanza, director of the K-State Concert Band, on marimba in "Concertino for Marimba" by Niel DePonte.

Don Farthing, Independence High School Concert Band director, will direct the K-State Symphony Band in "The Foundation March" by Richard Franko Goldman. The K-State Symphony Band will also perform "Slava!" by Leonard Bernstein.

Students audition for the Symphony and Concert bands.

The Symphony Band is the top band and the Concert Band is second, Tracz said.

Magnitude-5.4 tremor shakes California town

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALICO GHOST TOWN, Calif. — Century-old buildings and a modern overpass were cracked, bottles were tossed off shelves and nerves rattled Tuesday by a magnitude-5.4 earthquake, an aftershock of a 1992 temblor.

No injuries were reported in the 7:42 a.m. quake, which was centered 12 miles east-northeast of Barstow.

It was the latest of about 60,000 aftershocks to the magnitude-7.3 Landers quake. That temblor on June 28, 1992, was followed within hours by a 6.5 quake near Big Bear in the San Bernardino Mountains. Together, they killed one person, injured 400 and caused nearly $100 million in damage.

Tuesday's quake was about 60 miles northwest of Landers. It generated its own aftershocks, the largest a magnitude-3.7 temblor at 8:19 a.m. and was preceded during the night by a few smaller quakes, the largest at 2.9.

The quake was felt throughout San Bernardino County and as far south as downtown Los Angeles, 100 miles away.

The Calico Ghost Town, a recreated 1881 mining camp, was shut down for safety inspection after cracks were found in four or five wood and adobe buildings.

"Several buildings have what appear to be damage to the walls and the facades. It looks like cracks in the walls running from top to bottom. Some small walls fell over," Sgt. John Mattke at the Barstow sheriff's station said.

Several iron ore mines, now tourist attractions, also were closed for inspection.

Calico Ghost Town spokesman Steven Nelson said the brief quake sent up a thin, dusty haze of desert sand.

"It was a quickie, but it had some vigor and force to it," he said.

Make your vote count in today's run off election for top SGA positions

Today is election day, and it promises to be an exciting one.

With presidential candidate Tim Riemann and vice presidential running mate Jennafer Neufeld coming out only about 50 votes ahead of presidential candidate Aaron Otto and vice presidential running mate Amy Knedlik, every vote will be extremely important.

As the past has proven, the president and vice president can set the tone for the students at the University for an entire year.

It's unfortunate that only about 13 percent of the campus voted in the general election.

After all, as large and diverse as our campus is, we want the student leadership to be elected by a huge percentage of the student population.

But you do have one last chance to cast your vote, and your vote does count.

After all:

- One vote caused Charles I of England to be executed in 1649.
- One vote decided that Americans would speak English rather than German in 1776.
- One vote elected Rutherford B. Hayes to the presidency in 1877.
- One vote kept Aaron Burr, later charged with treason, from becoming president. That one vote elected Thomas Jefferson president in 1800.
- One vote saved the Selective Service System only 12 weeks before Pearl Harbor in 1941.
- One vote admitted California in 1850, Oregon in 1859, Idaho in 1890 and Washington in 1890 to the Union. In 1845, Texas was made a part of the United States by one vote.
- One vote made Adolf Hitler head of the Nazi party in 1923.

Get out and do your part.

25th birthday anticipation sparks reflection and memories of times past

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

VIEWPOINT
MARY RENEE SMITH

MARY RENEE SMITH is a junior in theatre. You can e-mail your comments to Mary at (mojo@ksu.edu)

While you're all off celebrating spring break, taking leave of your studies, basking in the sun and enjoying your youth, I'll be getting old. My 25th birthday is March 28.

I'll be a quarter of a century old. I'll be halfway to 50. Twenty-five years will have passed since the occasion of my birth. Almost a third of my life expectancy will have come and gone. I will be a full seven years older than the traditional college freshman. In case you can't tell, I am not taking all this very well — I refuse to age gracefully.

There are birthdays you look forward to — your sweet 16 when you're finally old enough to drive a car. The day you turn 18 and are legally accountable for your actions, and the all-encompassing birthday number 21 when you can do everything and anything your little heart desires.

Something strange happens around your 23rd birthday, though.

You forget how old you are and birthdays don't matter any more. When people ask my age, I honestly have to stop and think about it, and then I lie. Or at least I plan to start lying in the near future.

I work with older adults and am amazed at the things they remember and the changes they have seen over the course of their lifetimes. The invention of television, the civil rights movement and the incredible progress of technology have completely changed the world they were born into.

I realize I have witnessed many changes in the world since the I was born in 1972. Come and reminisce with me. Let's play a game. Let's play "Am I as old as Mary Renee?" How many of these things can you remember?

I can remember when the only computer I had contact with was the Commodore 64 in the electronics department of KMart. I thought I was pretty cool because I could program dirty words to run across the screen.

I can remember when advertisements for televisions and VCRs had to say "cordless remote control" because there actually was such a thing as a remote with a cord.

My best friend, Susan, had a Beta VCR with a remote control with a cord. It was still cool — you could change the channel from across the room and trip your Dad or whip your little brother with it.

I can remember when the family next door was the first family on the block to get cable television. I spent the night and watched a horror flick on HBO.

The movie was rated R because it contained some violence and the word "bastard." I didn't even know what a bastard was but I knew a child down the street that said some stuff worse than that. I wondered when he would be on HBO.

I can remember when the only black people you saw on television were the criminals, and the only gay people on television were extremely feminine interior decorators. Oh wait, that was yesterday.

I can remember when my boyfriend spent more than $200 on a compact disc player, and I told him he was stupid. "Those things are dumb. They'll be gone like eight tracks in less than a year," I said. (He has his masters degree in physics from Cornell University, and I'm still working on my first degree. Who is the dumb one?)

I can remember when there were no long distance companies calling your house day and night because there was only one phone company, AT&T.

You didn't have to pay to call information, the operators were real people, and the only call waiting you had was your mom picking up the phone every five minutes yelling, "Hey, I'm expecting a call."

I can remember when the coolest child in class was the child who got to turn the filmstrip along with the beeps on the tape recorder. The second coolest child in class was the one who got to go to the office and turn the ditto machine for the teacher. (Remember those blue, hand-written worksheets?)

I can remember when the news reported armed guerrillas were invading Central America, and I wondered why there were big apes with guns wandering around the Kansas plains. (We lived in Colorado.)

It is amazing how the world has changed in just 25 years. I can't wait to see how much changes 25 years from now, when I turn 35. (I told you I'd start lying about my age.)

Outstanding student candidates deserve recognition

The posters are now garbage.

What were once lofty aspirations are now yesterday's lies.

It's not the toppling of a corrupt government, but the conclusion of another round of Student Governing Association elections.

And aren't we glad? Well, aren't we?

Pardon my somewhat sarcastically tinged approach, but the 1997 elections surprised and provoked me about as much as a trip to Ogden.

Oh me, oh my, I was so shocked to hear that some candidate cares about what I think and feels that my views should be encouraged and actively solicited. My experience shows that as long as my views align with said candidate's, I'll be "heard." Yes, and SGA members don't push an agenda.

Bitterness aside, let's get to my 1997 Annual List of Awards for SGA Elections:

Best Signs: Keeping this spot for the second year in a row is Colin Rafferty (a.k.a. Ezekiel McCracken of 1996's election). His informed wit, such as the sign "Colin Rafferty: The Hockomattic Choice," stole the show and actually encouraged a pleasant read, as compared to the flashy colors and simple, bright symbols of his opponents.

Most Irrelevant: The Random Student Organization, a laughable student group bent on "saving the trees." Oh, please, don't tell me this campus is getting environmental on me. It's funny that paper and Styrofoam proliferate in the Union Stateroom but a couple hundred signs strung onto some trees elicit this kind of reaction. Move to California, greenies.

Scariest Revelation: It's a greek world after all. The truth of the matter is the election returns are decided in Wednesday night chapter meetings.

This is a sad reflection on the rest of the lackadaisical campus that the greek houses basically run SGA. (Student Senate and the executive branch are a majority of greeks.) Can it be all that bad?

No, I just love conformist, elitist thought, don't you?

Best Spoken Word: Hillary Rodham Clinton for her reading of her book "It Takes a Village." Now Hillary and Barbra Streisand have something more in common than that they've both slept with President Clinton.

Best Presence: John Farrell's lampoon of the candidacy for student body president was truly inspired. His brilliant appearance at the boorish candidate forum reduced the event to its proper level — that of pathetic joke. Once again, a prankster shows us the way. Paging Ross Perot.

Dick Morris Lifetime Achievement: Chris Avila's re-election to Senate proves embarrassing news coverage and a court conviction can't stop a politician. Is this news a comment on SGA or the students who vote? I'll call Sen. Ted Kennedy and get back with you next week.

Best Overlooked Issue: Almost every candidate had a plan for hauling drunk students back to their dwellings after a night in Aggieville, but no one had an answer as to why students insist on drinking to excess. Could it be that some of the candidates won't face their own demons? Oh, no, I wouldn't suggest that.

Scapegoat of the Year: Lately, when all else fails in student politics, people blame their problems on Student Senator Sean Tomb. Although Tomb's unprecedented negative advertising campaign ruffled some feathers, it was perhaps the boldest statement of the 1997 elections. To paraphrase Madeleine Albright, is this cowardice or cajones? Only today's results will truly tell.

Students Against Students for Students: I'm not one to be against student political parties, but the magnitude of this silly party is worrisome. Not that it's bad for the elections, but this group has a tendency to stay as one while in Senate. This past year, all S4S senators were elected as Senate officers easily defeating worthy independents. I smell conformity, and it ain't appetizing.

Worst Influence: The amount of Asian corporate money that poured into John Farrell's presidential campaign is definitely disturbing. To think that he was handed a $50,000 check while standing in Farrell Library calls him into question ethically. What next, anyone can get a photo opportunity and sleep in Farrell's bedroom for an extra $20,000?

Most Brilliant Display of Ignorance: Some presidential candidates insisted on the existence of a parking problem in need of a solution. Wake up, kiddies, Anderson Hall has wanted to build itself a parking garage in the K-State Student Union parking lots for about six months now. Forget the shuttle system, it's as much history as your campaign.

Best Reason to Have Stayed Away from Polls:Outrageously beautiful weather made you forget the urgent campus issues enough to instead opt for pleasant stroll to Tuttle Creek State Park.

The rest of us regret not joining you.

• TODD STEWART REPRESENTS AN EMBARRASSMENT.

Editor,

This letter is in reference to Todd Stewart.

I have attempted to communicate with Stewart through private e-mail my concerns about the lack of sensitivity, creativity and professionalism in his columns. He has never defended his positions, qualified his statements or even offered a reason for them.

I have received such replies from him as "My opinion is one in 20,000," "It is my opinion," and — my personal favorite, when I tried to express how I felt he could improve his column — "I am the journalist, send me no more advice."

He has no concern for the reputation of the Collegian. He has no concern about the reputation of the sports writing world. And, he has no concern for the University. All he is concerned about is himself and his notoriety. I suspected as much from the beginning, but after today I am convinced of it.

He has now so sullied even his own reputation that he feels it necessary to try to squeeze his trash under the umbrella of journalism. He is a monstrous fake. He cares no more for the soiling of the purest profession in the world than he does for Manny Dies.

As for offering something new or insightful? I have read almost all of Stewart's columns (call me a masochist!) and I do not recall one time where he ever offered anything new or insightful.

What is insightful about bashing a basketball player for being the worst player in college basketball history? And, above that, doing so without qualification and without a retraction when said player proves himself otherwise?

There is nothing insightful or new about that. But I can handle that. It can be written off to simply a stupid, uneducated opinion.

Then there is his trash about the women's basketball team (both of them). Nothing insightful there. Anyone can be sexist.

But the last straw was when he tried to drag his trash underneath the protection of journalism. First of all, he is not a journalist. He's a columnist. Secondly, good columnists do not hold unqualified opinions. They research a subject, come to an opinion, and then write about it, and then defend it come what may. That is what a columnist is and does. Stewart does none of these things.

For the sake of the Collegian's reputation, remove him. For the sake of sports writing's reputation, remove him. For the sake of the University's reputation, remove him.

He is an embarrassment to us all.

• STUDENTS SHOULD BE AWARE OF MISLEADING POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENTS.

Editor,

In a recent negative and dishonest Collegian advertisement, presidential candidate Aaron Otto was referred to as a "career student politician."

I decided to refer to my dictionary to see what this really meant. The results were quite interesting. Politician: A person skilled or experienced in practical politics or political science. According to the true meaning of this word, Vice President Otto is a politician, which, by definition, is not a bad thing.

Another thing I found quite interesting was the so-called committee that sponsored the ad. The students used the name "Committee for Responsible Student Government," but used false information to produce it. I think the word "irresponsible" would be much better suited for the committee name.

I just hope the student body does not believe these lies and seeks out the truth on election day.

• GOLF COURSE REPRESENTS DISTURBING PRIORITES AT K-STATE.

Editor,

I find it remarkable that the K-State administration has been able to arrange funding of $9 million-$10 million for a golf course as mentioned in Tuesday's Collegian, while at the same time announcing that 1.) they cannot convince the state legislature of the need for $3 million to keep up with inflation for current periodicals subscriptions in Farrell Library and therefore will be canceling subscriptions, mostly to "... high-dollar science journals, possibly eliminating our entire list of titles supplied by selected publishers ..." (letter to faculty from Brice Holbrock, dean of libraries, Feb. 14, 1997).

And 2.) has scaled back the planned size of a 25-year planned addition (publicly and privately funded) to Ackert Hall Division of Biology by one-half, with further reductions likely.

Is modern science too expensive a discipline to teach to students at K-State? Apparently K-State will have nice athletic facilities and an attractive, modest-sized library building containing some places to sit, but very little to read. Certainly, current science journals will be disappearing.

Does the state really think it can convince Kansas parents this environment offers a quality education? Is K-State just becoming a recreation facility?

Perhaps while "Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advance-

• RESIDENCE HALLS NEED MORE ATTENTION FROM CANDIDATES.

Editor,

I am writing in regard to the attention the residence halls have received from the candidates for student body president/vice president. The residence halls make up a significant group of the student body population, roughly 15 percent.

The candidates who win this election will be representing this large population of people during the course of the 1997-98 school year. I believe that the residents of the halls make up a group of some of the most involved people on campus.

The decisions made by next year's Student Senate, as well as by the student body president and vice president, could affect residents of the halls more than any other group here at K-State because they live on campus.

It disappoints me that only one pair of candidates have visited every single one of the Hall Governing Board meetings for this year's elections. I realize other candidates have visited a couple of meetings, but only candidates Aaron Otto and Amy Knedlik have expressed interest in answering questions at every residence hall.

It would be interesting to know why other candidates were visiting organizations, such as greek houses and scholarship honoraries, without visiting all of the residence halls, which have much larger populations.

• CRENSHAW PROMOTES CLOSED-MINDED ATTITUDE.

Editor,

In Thursday's Collegian, there was a column by Valeri Crenshaw that I believe is promoting poor attitude.

I think that there is a point to be brought up about school spirit and the relationships that exist between our beloved K-State and other schools.

I am a former University of Kansas student of three years, and when my major changed, the path led me here. This is the second year I have been here, and I love it very much. As a student of both colleges and a resident of both Manhattan and Lawrence, I can certainly say that the two are different.

They both have their strengths and their weaknesses. If I had to generalize each experience, I would have to say that KU and Lawrence people are much more open-minded, yet tend to hang out in smaller groups.

On the other hand, K-State and Manhattan people tend to be friendlier to strangers but aren't nearly as opened-minded as you would expect on a college campus.

During the time that I have been here, I have had to suffer through many belittling remarks about KU and the people there. It is odd how most of the people who said them have not even been there. I can't even count the number of times I have heard the words "I hate KU" roll off someone's tongue.

This is a despicable and insulting comment. If you want to hate something, hate rapists, murderers and child molesters. Don't hate a whole city of people who are just like you, trying to get an education and getting by the best they can.

Referring to Lawrence as "Godforsaken," and rejoicing in "Mark Young throwing an elbow that landed in Jacque Vaughn's mouth," are not just wrong, they are mean. I am certain that if people came up to Crenshaw and planted their elbows in her face, her heart would not flutter, and her face would not smile.

We need to have some respect for the feelings of others and stop promoting this negative attitude. Setting our sights on the positive aspects of life is the only way out of that hole.

Surely, Crenshaw gave us enough positive reasons to indulge in purple-pride at K-State.

• ACCESSIBLE PARKING NEEDS TO BE RESPECTED.

Editor,

Thank you for publishing your views on accessible parking spaces in the Feb. 27 issue. Hopefully, your view, along with the letter from Tibisay Marin in the same issue, will alert individuals to the importance of respecting accessible parking spaces.

Laws require that accessible parking be available for those individuals with special physical needs. It is unfortunate there are a few individuals who feel their needs (late for class, late for work) override someone's disability.

The state of Kansas views accessible parking as a very important issue. Currently, Senate Bill 29 has been introduced to this year's legislative session. This bill calls for increasing the fine for parking illegally in an accessible parking stall to $200. Obviously, if this bill passes and goes into effect on July 1, the effect will be felt by those who abuse these parking stalls.

There were two statements in your editorial which should be clarified. First, it was stated that Parking Services issues disabled parking permits. This is not the case.

Disabled parking permits are issued by the state of Kansas and may be obtained at county treasurer's offices. To obtain a disabled parking permit, the applicant must have a statement of medical need from a physician.

Second, you suggested that Parking Services should consider monitoring those spaces more closely. The accessible parking stalls are given high priority, regardless of the time of day. These stalls are reserved 24 hours a day for individuals with disabled parking permits.

Again, we at KSU Parking Services echo your thoughts regarding sensitivity. Please leave the accessible parking spaces available for their intended purpose.

• CLONING SURROUNDED BY MYTHS.

Editor,

Everyone, everywhere, has been talking about cloning lately. As usual, those with the least amount of knowledge on the subject are the same people whose gums are flapping like Old Glory in a Kansas breeze. I would like to clear up a few of the most frequent falsehoods that are floating around.

One thing too many people are worried about: "What if they cloned someone like Charles Manson?" Let's briefly explore how it is Manson became who he is today. Manson was born in 1934 to a 16-year-old prostitute. He was neglected for the first five years of his life, until his mother was imprisoned for robbery.

He then lived with his uncle, who made him wear a dress to school his first day. His uncle said he wanted to make a man out of him because he considered him a pansy.

From here on out things got worse (not that it justifies his actions).

Back to the subject. Say we did clone Manson.

We would take some cells from his body, insert them into an ovum, from which the genetic material had been removed, and eventually implant a dividing embryo into a woman's uterus.

Nine months later you would not have a 63-year-old man with a swastika tattooed on his forehead, spouting sadistic poetry. You would have a baby, like any other baby. This baby would have only one thing in common with Manson: his genetic code.

The baby would not have been subjected to any drugs or alcohol during development in the mother, and I hope the baby would grow up in a more productive environment.

Far too many people seem to think when you clone a person you get an exact replica of that person, instantly, like genetic Jiffy Pop. You do genetically, but we don't have any way of advancing the age of any potential clones, just as we don't have any way of advancing the age of any other person.

A cloned person would have to grow like any other person from birth to adulthood. A clone would be a human-made identical twin. Most of us have known a pair of identical twins and know how different they can be. The differences between a clone and the person they were cloned from would be similar.

Yet another myth is that a clone would be born a mindless zombie. I've heard people say, "What if I wanted to clone myself some slaves?"

Two answers (aside from the fact that that is a moronic statement): 1) Slavery is illegal. 2) Any cloned individual will act like and be just as free-thinking as any other person born into this world.

He might see the person who had them cloned as a parental figure. He would not see that person as his master, any more than you see your own parents as your masters. He will need to be taught as a child and cared for like any other child.

Any cloned animal, from sheep to man, has to develop within the womb of an animal of the same, or very closely related species.

Therefore, clones would not be some sort of science fiction-like product of a laboratory. They would be born just like the rest of us.

A cloned person would be nothing more than just that — a person.

• CONCEALED WEAPONS LAW IS UNNECESSARY.

Editor,

I've searched every corner of my brain to find a reason why one should carry a peacemaker/concealed weapon. I guess I found some reasons, but they were as absurd as the Pope's big hat.

My first point is that the idea to carry a weapon is a paranoid, individualistic idea. People don't carry a weapon in the hopes they will save a society from the brutal attacks of criminals by constitutionally resorting to the militia status.

The idea to carry weapons is manifested in those who feel some immediate threat to their lives here or even in Texas, where everything is so great. I would bet that most citizens "packing heat" have never been in a life-threatening situation other than the time their high school's "cool kids" met up with the rival high school for a confrontation on the local boulevard.

My second point is that there is a greater social good to consider. I believe most individuals fully understand that given an increased speed limit, the number of pointless deaths will increase. At the same time, they realize that is a risk they are willing to take to get to Lawrence faster. When our highways and our homes are not safe, one must ask how far we are developing. I and others are not willing to give up our right to live in a safe society so a few paranoid individuals can have their personal militia world.

Finally, do not defend the pro-concealed weapons position. Admit what it is. Studies show that regardless of who has the guns, an increase in guns leads to an increase in pointless deaths. The existence of concealed weapons is not justification for condoning their legalization. To carry a weapon is a purely self-minded act.

One should ask oneself if, like the increase in speed limits, am I willing for individual rights to increase the amount of pointless deaths, violence and paranoia facing people who have never had their lives threatened?

Not unless you guarantee that the bullets in the gun won't leave your personal space and infringe on my legitimate rights.

• FACULTY/STAFF, STUDENTS SHOULD HAVE EQUAL PARKING PRIVELEGES.

Editor,

How many times have you found an empty parking space but couldn't park there because it was faculty/staff parking? Many students, while looking for a parking space before class, have this occur every day. The vast majority of conveniently located parking is strictly for faculty/staff permit holders.

Who works for whom anyway? When you go to a business, do the employees park in the front? No, they leave the close spaces for the customers. Are the students not customers?

A possible remedy for this parking problem is a general pass, excluding residence halls. This would not be a complete disruption of convenient faculty/staff parking. They usually arrive on campus earlier than students and stay all day. Students are constantly arriving and leaving.

The creation of the general pass will combine student permits and faculty/staff permits into a universal permit. By combining both passes, the paperwork and employment needs of the parking services could be reduced. This general pass would create equal opportunity parking for everyone. By the way, have the faculty and staff ever thought about carpooling?

Tuning up.

With a massive series against 21st ranked Texas looming on the horizon, it's hard for the Wildcats to not consider tonight and tomorrow's contest just a tuneup.

Tonight at 8:30, the Wildcats step onto the field to meet Chicago State in the first part of a two-game series.

Despite being a relative unknown, the Cougars are in Division 1 and have the respect of head coach Mike Clark and the Wildcats.

"Coach told us today, 'This is not the team to overlook,'" said senior second baseman Todd Fereday. "They have a record of 0-10, but they lost to three top-10 teams."

Be that as it may, the Cougars seem to pose little threat to a Wildcat team that is in the midst of a six game winning streak.

K-State's offense is hitting on all cylinders, averaging nearly 10 runs per game over the six game stretch.

"We've got a lot of confidence on this team," said senior outfielder Scott Poepard. "You look up and down our lineup, and there's a lot of juniors and seniors."

The pitching has tamed the opposition as well, allowing only four runs a contest since the OSU victory March 9.

Senior southpaw Eric Yanz, who is 1-1 with a 12.10 ERA, will start Wednesday's contest for the injured Tim Hertzel.

Clark said the team plans to see how Hertzel's back strain is holding up after one week of rest.

"We'd like to get him in there," he said. "He hasn't pitched for a long time."

For Thursday's contest, it will be pitching by committee, with Pat Hertzel to get the nod.

"We'll probably throw six guys," Clark said.

The Cougars, coming off a 20-28 record last season, have 29 returning lettermen, including eight starters. K-State leads the all-time series 1-0.

Even with the warnings against overlooking a seemingly overmatched opponent, both Fereday and Poepard can't help but look at this weekend's series with Texas as a chance to prove themselves.

"I'm pumped up," Fereday said. "I hope everyone's as pumped up as I am. We've definitely got a chance to get three wins."

"We just can't be intimidated by them," Poepard said. "They're in Texas, so they get all the attention, but we're confident in our play."

"If we play the way we have been, then we've got a good shot at winning," Poepard said.

The first pitch for Thursday's match is slated for noon. After the game, the team loads up and heads to Austin for their weekend series with the Longhorns.

Big 12 comissioners happy with conference's success in post season

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — With three conference teams in the NCAA's round of 16 and two remaining in the NIT, Steve Hatchell would love to hear from anyone who still thinks the Big 12 is a football-only league.

In its first foray into postseason basketball, the new megaconference is turning out to be a megahit.

Led by Kansas, ranked No. 1 the last 14 weeks of the regular season, the Big 12 had five men's teams still going this week.

Only the Pac-10, with four teams, is doing better than the Big 12 in the NCAA tournament.

"This is fun," Hatchell, the league commissioner, said Monday from the Big 12 offices in Dallas. "You like to brag on your coaches, and you like to brag on your programs.

"And now we can do it without anybody saying, 'Well, he had to say that since he's the commissioner.' "

The Jayhawks, who won the Big 12's regular season and tournament titles, have dispatched Jackson State and Purdue in the first two rounds of the Southeast Regional and will meet Arizona Thursday in Birmingham, Ala.

Hatchell

In the East Regional is Texas, which raised a few eyebrows when it got an at-large invitation with just 16 wins. But the Longhorns have beaten Wisconsin and giant-killer Coppin State and are now preparing to go against Louisville on Friday in Syracuse.

Weighing in as the Big 12's third round of 16 entry is Iowa State in the Midwest Regional.

The Cyclones will duel UCLA Thursday in San Antonio after beating Illinois State and Cincinnati in the first two rounds.

In the first round of the NIT, Nebraska beat Washington 67-63 and Oklahoma State downed Tulane 79-72.

In Tuesday's second round, the Huskers, the defending NIT champions, will meet Nevada. Oklahoma State will go against Michigan.

In addition, the Big 12 put six teams in the NCAA women's tournament, and four were still going as the week began.

"The best thing about this is that it really showcases our coaches and their commitment to the basketball programs in our league," said Hatchell.

"The very best meetings we've had with anybody this year were our meetings with our basketball coaches at the beginning of the year. Their attitude was, 'Let's work hard and make this the most terrific basketball league in the country.' They looked at the big picture. Frankly, working with them could hardly have been any better.

"This will let everybody know what we already knew, that basketball in the Big 12 is superb. Our tournaments were great for both the men and the women. But the bottom line in all of this is the coaches. I'm really happy for them."

Sony PlayStation only thing to cuddle up to when weather is bad

VIEWPOINT

JEREMY KELLEY
JEREMY KELLEY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Jeremy at (weasal1@ksu.edu).

This less-than-desirable weather is messing with me.

Because it has been far from pleasing weather for springtime, I have been forced to remain cooped up in my house with a jar of hot banana peppers, watching "Seinfeld" reruns (it might sound pretty bland, but those peppers will throw you for a loop).

Furthermore, at least I have been able to peruse the Sony PlayStation market, and boy, is there a market to peruse.

Anyway, I have been able to play the ever-popular game NBA Live 97 with my roommate rather frequently in the last couple of weeks, and I have to say, it is probably one of the best games out there right now.

Besides the usual sports-related features every other sports game boasts, NBA Live has some cool features.

The action is faster than most games, but not so much that it is unbelievable. Every home court is an exact replica of every court in the NBA.

For one, you can create your own players using every aspect you would remotely need to make an NBA superstar. The list offers nine different shades of facial hair to choose from, ranging from pearly white to deep, dark chocolate. The player can also choose from that many hairstyles.

Another cool feature is the public address announcer who gets loopy when the home team starts to play some mad basketball, especially with the Atlanta Hawks' Mookie Blaylock.

Ma-ma-ma-ma-ma-MOOKIE.

To say the least, the PA guy keeps it real.

The best aspect in the list is choosing player statistics. You can choose a player's numbers in every aspect of the game, from shooting range to dunking ability, from height to defensive awareness.

So that means you can create a skinny little white kid from K-State who is deadly from beyond the arc, but can also play inside with the likes of Karl Malone.

Or even create the all-Big 12 team with just a little time and the right numbers.

It's all there. It's all in the numbers.

Once you start a season, which can be up to as many as 90 some-odd games, every statistical category is saved along with the season. Once the season gets down to the grind, playoff brackets are formed, and postseason play starts to heat up.

For all football lovers, the best game out there is NCAA Gamebreaker. The action is super fast as is usually believable.

The game constitutes every NCAA college football team and then some. Like the aforementioned game, this offers a somewhat accurate replica of each team's home field. KU's isn't exactly correct, but it does have one end open.

K-State's field does have a Powercat in the middle but doesn't have the athletic offices on the north end like we have here at Wagner Field.

Also, every team is supposed to come with the original school fight song, but for some teams it's not. Even though K-State is usually ranked high in the preseason polls, its fight song is hardly "The Wabash Cannonball." After a touchdown, either KU's fight song or Michigan's fight song is played.

Another one of its more notable features is the weather in which one wishes to play. You can choose from sunny, rainy, snowy and windy, or you can choose to play inside a dome.

In the rain mode, when a vicious hit is thrust upon a running-back or other player, thunderous sound and bolts of lightning fill the screen, making the scene believable.

When in the season mode, the games get more difficult as the season progresses, dependent upon what skill level you are playing. Again, season stats are kept and a running tally for every individual award.

Recently in my season with K-State, Chris Canty led the nation in interceptions and received the Doak Walker award. Imagine that.

Every big bowl game is rewarded to teams after the regular season is finished, along with the Heisman Trophy and other such honors.

So if you're thinking of spending a few days of your break inside or just want to get in touch with the PlayStation market, try these games.

If that doesn't work, maybe you should look into some hot banana peppers.

K-State to have 1st-ever female vice president

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

Whoever wins today's presidential election will have the first female vice president in K-State's history.

Either Amy Knedlik, Aaron Otto's running mate, or Jennafer Neufeld, Tim Riemann's running mate, will become the fourth woman to occupy either one of the highest student offices.

There have been three female student body presidents. Ethelinda Parrish Amos was elected president of the Student Council in a 1944 special election after male members of the council left to fight in World War II.

In 1981, Angela Scanlan was the first woman to win a regular election for student body president. She said she was told daily that a woman could not win the election, but she won anyway with 60 percent of the vote.

Jackie McClaskey won the office in 1991. During her term, she helped create the office of student body vice president.

Since then, there have been four vice presidents, all male, with Brad Finkeldei serving two terms.

McClaskey, who is now the assistant director of agriculture academic programs, said she encountered some stereotypes while in office.

"I didn't enjoy being told 'You're the first female who's done this or the first who's done that,'" she said. McClaskey said she would rather concentrate on her work as an individual, not as a woman.

Six years later, Neufeld and Knedlik are also running as leaders, not women. They have encountered very little discrimination.

"Maybe because of Jackie and maybe because Amy and I are running with men," Neufeld said, "but I haven't found that as much as I expected to find."

Knedlik said a man probably wouldn't have received e-mail requests for dates like the ones she has received from men who have seen her picture.

Both Knedlik and Neufeld have been leaders in the Student Governing Association for years. SGA is 46 percent female, and many cabinet members and Student Senate leaders are women.

Aubrey Abbott, Senate chair; Jill Hayhurst, Senate vice chair; Nicole Johnson, Faculty Senate representative; and Lisa Dethloff, Senate secretary, are just a few of the women who hold offices in SGA.

Abbott said there might be some stereotyping, but it doesn't interfere with her work.

"I'm sure that it happens," she said. "I don't dwell on it. I'd rather think that if I do my job well, that gender will be put aside."

outdated equipment."

The questions after the initial statements of the candidates concerned the campus parking problem and moving Lafene to Mercy.

Both tickets said they support the expansion of the campus shuttle service and do not favor building a parking garage. Both tickets also said they supported moving Lafene to Mercy.

All of the candidates said student opinions were important to them and would be considered before they began working with either of the issues.

Robin Cates, arts and sciences senator, asked the candidates what their vision was about working with members of Student Senate when they took office.

Otto said during the past year he and Chris Hansen, student body president, worked with Senate on the issue of teacher evaluations. He also said that if elected, he would need the help of Senate with the state Legislature.

"We want to use our experience to work with the student government," Otto said.

Neufeld said there is a separation between the student executive and legislative branches.

"We're not going to work on you but work with you. We are adamant about compromising proactive approaches to working with Student Senate," she said.

In closing statements, both tickets encouraged students to get out and vote and to tell their friends to do the same.

"I want you to get out and vote regardless of who you vote for. Your one vote does matter," Otto said.

"We can and will have a direct impact on your life next year at K-State. Amy and I bring really good balance to the job," he said.

Riemann spoke for himself and Neufeld.

"I want you to vote Riemann-Neufeld," he said. "We are concerned with what goes on with traditional student issues, but we're taking it one step further."

Veterinary clinic serves public

Need to schedule an appointment? For large animals, call 532-5700. For small animals, call 532-5690. Appointment hours are 8 a.m.-5p.m. Monday-Friday and 8-11 a.m. Saturday. The hospital is also open 24 hours for emergencies.

RACHAEL KRUEGER
staff reporter

The KSU Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital offers 185,000 square feet of technology and expertise to pet owners in Manhattan and surrounding areas.

"We'd love to be the veterinary clinic that services every student at K-State and every community member in Manhattan," Roger Fingland, director of the teaching hospital, said.

The hospital serves as a veterinary practice for routine health care as well as a referral center, Fingland said.

"We offer the same services that any clinic does and more," he said.

Referred animals are cases that call for the technology, specialists and controlled environment of K-State's facilities. The veterinary college students benefit from seeing these special cases, said William Fortney, assistant professor of clinical sciences at the teaching hospital.

Senior veterinary students spend all their time in the teaching hospital, learning by direct interaction with clients, he said.

Students begin each appointment discussing the animal's medical problems and history, forming their opinions about the case. A faculty member then consults with the student to review his/her findings before speaking with the client.

The veterinary specialists with whom each case is discussed have advanced training in fields such as clinical nutrition, reproduction, dentistry, dermatology, nuclear medicine and the list continues.

"The specialists are textbooks for our students," Fingland said.

All the services provided are performed or directly supervised by these faculty members.

Since both students and faculty members work on each case, appointments run longer than in a normal clinic, Fortney said.

"We're more methodical," he said.

Prices at the teaching hospital are similar to those at community veterinary hospitals, Fingland said. Use of greater technology means higher cost, he added, but people want the best for their pets.

"It's very similar to the KU Medical Center," Fingland said. When doctors or veterinarians in private practice exhaust all possibilities available, they refer clients to this type of specialized center, he said.

"This is an incredible resource for the people of Manhattan," he said.

Committee abandons legislators' pay increase

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — House leaders, stung by negative publicity statewide, appear to have abandoned a proposal to increase legislators' compensation by 92 percent.

The Calendar and Printing Committee had only a 10-minute hearing Tuesday on a bill that would increase the annual compensation for most House and Senate members from $18,597 to $35,697. The figures include money legislators receive to cover their living and office expenses.

The proposal also would increase legislators' pensions, doubling some, because those pensions are based on compensation.

The committee, whose members include the speaker, speaker pro tem, majority leader and minority leader, did not take action on the bill. And Speaker Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, acknowledged that the committee is not likely to meet again this year.

House leaders are unenthusiastic about the bill and said many representatives have told them they would not support it.

"I don't know. I think it might be dead there," Majority Leader Robin Jennison, R-Healy, said after the meeting. "It lasted through the weekend — we'll say that."

Shallenburger said House members simply were not prepared for front-page headlines listing the size of the proposed increase.

Elections for student body president and vice president are today.

▶ MELVIN VS. THE WORLD

A person's physical and mental health should combine to create a harmonious

Balancing act

STORY BY PORTIA SISCO • ART BY MATT HAWKINS

Fad diets, easy exercise programs and self-help books all have one thing in common — health.

What exactly does health mean?

Health can be defined as soundness of body and mind. If this is true, then health is physical and mental.

So which is more important? What will kill us first?

Is it more important to eat right, exercise or have peace of mind? How do you find a balance?

George Burns' life is proof that many factors go into good health. A smoker, he lived to see his 100th birthday. In a interview with Arsenio Hall, he admitted he had never given his health much thought.

Why did he live so long? Health experts cannot answer this question.

Although eating right, being physically fit and reducing stress factors can make you healthier, there is no definite causation that shows that the healthiest people live the longest.

Physical fitness is an important part of health. It can also have a positive effect on mental health by reducing stress and anxiety levels.

With physical fitness, students should keep in mind that the body has to work more than it is used to before there is any change. How students chose to exercise effects what kinds of changes the body makes to adapt.

Still, when a student stops exercising, the positive effects can be lost. Consistency, intensity and time can all effect the outcome of the workout.

Physical activity will foster a healthful diet. Calorie needs vary by age and activity level.

The Food and Drug Administration reported nearly all Americans needed to be more active.

Are the athletes and health nuts who spend six hours a day working out healthy? Perhaps. But physical fitness is only one aspect of health.

Statistics tell us that 13,000 out of 100,000 people who smoke one pack of cigarettes a day die from heart attacks.

Hypertension, obesity, stress and genetic factors all contribute to overall health.

Each of these can be considered a risk factor.

While one of these aspects might have a mild effect on overall health, several together can increase the risks of having serious health problems, such as cardiovascular diseases.

Eating habits are another aspect of health. Even students who have achieved their ideal weight aren't necessarily healthy. Getting the right amount of vitamins and minerals will determine total health.

Low-calorie diets can give students less energy. By cutting too much, the diet reduces activity levels.

A good diet is also intertwined in the health cycle. Healthy diets promote growth in children, increases health and decreases disease risk factors.

Health problems, such as headaches, insomnia, sinus attacks and high blood pressure are aggravated by stress or distress. So mental health can effect a person's physical health also.

Biofeedback and relaxation exercises are a way of easing tension and distress.

Stress can be defined as the amount of pressure people can sustain before they have problems coping.

For students, stress can vary from the pressure of getting good grades to a significant change or loss. And yet treatment methods for stress include exercise and nutrition, a part of good physical health.

Mental and physical health are intertwined. Without physical well-being, a person cannot achieve mental well-being, and vice-versa.

The FDA suggests that there are genetic, environmental, behavioral and cultural factors that affect health.

With so many elements that go into health, how can anyone determine if they are healthy or not? Do healthy people really exist?

The answer is yes. With sleep, a good diet, an exercise program and stress management, good health is possible.

Is it worth it?

It depends on whether or not students could use more energy, a better self-image and a healthy body.

THE NEED TO GO

A 21-year-old, allegedly intoxicated man was spotted by police on an Austin, Minn., street in January urinating on a car but was let go with a warning when he persuaded police it was his own car. A few minutes later police returned and arrested the man for DUI, having figured out that he was urinating on the car's door lock to melt the ice so that he could get in and drive away.

NOBUKO MIYAMOTO performs "A Grain of Sand" Tuesday night in Forum Hall. The program was a multimedia presentation.

ASIAN AUTOBIOGRAPHY

Review Theater

A giant circular screen and a suitcase overflowing with clothes and shoes graced the stage in Forum Hall Tuesday night as about 75 students and faculty prepared to witness a message of understanding and love for people, regardless of color.

Nobuko Miyamoto, a Japanese American singer and dancer from Los Angeles, presented her stage performance called "A Grain of Sand."

The album for the program is part of the Smithsonian Institute Collection. The production was sponsored by the Asian American Student Union, Ebony Theatre, and Diversity and Dual Career Development.

Nobuko used speech, music, dance and video to show the difficulties of being Japanese American and realizing dreams as a minority in the white majority American society.

She showed the struggles a minority member faces by presenting an autobiography of herself and telling stories about her family.

Nobuko is a storyteller, and her stories were easy to understand. Her narrative was brought to life with video images on the circular screen and her easy, graceful dancing and body movements.

She told stories about her early days in show business and how she played the parts of many different minorities: Chinese, Japanese, Arabic and Latino. Her voice was strong and clear, whether she was singing Salsa or Asian music.

The audience watched as history passed on the screen, and she responded to it. World War II and Japanese concentration camps, the Vietnam War and the battles that absorbed America as minorities fought for desegregation and equality.

She told how she had joined the struggles, attending meetings and using music to help bring minorities together.

"We had to make the kind of music we could relate to," Nobuko said. "We have to sing our own songs. Who cares who else is listening?"

She pulled clothes out of the suitcase to reflect the change in the times and explain their significance. The styles reflected the changes that were going on in the Asian community and the unity between the different Asian cultures.

"We didn't want to be Japanese or Chinese. We wanted to be Asian. There was more power in that," Nobuko said. "We were multicultural before they invented the word."

Nobuko showed the similarities between what the Asians and African Americans and other minorities have gone through in their quest for equality. It was a powerful walk in another person's shoes.

She shared her personal experiences with other minorities to show that although people are different, the similarities in experience are enough to promote unity.

While she was sharing her experiences as an Asian, it became clear that everyone has the same thoughts, feelings and fears.

"Hey — are you just going to sit there and be a silent minority?" she asked the audience. "I think it's up to us to make a difference."

After a standing ovation, she sat down for a question and answer period to allow the audience members a chance to speak their minds. She also made suggestions for more open communication about minority issues at K-State.

"I must be an optimist, because I always think we're elevating somehow," Nobuko said.

Low voter turn-out concerns Otto, Knedlik ticket

ERICA DUNCAN
staff writer

Aaron Otto and Amy Knedlik have visited several clubs, residence halls, sororities and fraternities in the past week to get people out and voting today in the runoff elections for student body president and vice president.

Convincing students their vote will count has been a difficult task for the candidates.

Knedlik said she is worried that a lot of people are not aware of where and when to vote.

"We really hope everyone we have reached will get out and vote," she said.

One of the biggest misconceptions is that students think the Student Governing Association is like student council in high school, Otto said. He said SGA has the ability to raise and lower fees and allocate money to student organizations.

"We have the power to be heard and make a good presentation," Otto said.

Otto and Knedlik are running a grassroots campaign and reaching out to the people, he said.

Otto said he has just been trying to keep himself out in public.

One of Otto and Knedlik's objectives is to increase the accessibility of student officials.

Both candidates have been campaigning to student organizations and said they plan to continue the visits if they are elected.

Improving campus safety is another big concern of Otto and Knedlik's.

Former presidential candidate Bill Burns brought attention to the need for a city-wide designated driver service and chose to endorse Otto and Knedlik.

The voters overwhelmingly supported the service on the plebiscite survey, Otto said.

"We want to do what the students want. If that's what they want, we'll try to include it in our safety spectrum," Knedlik said.

Otto said poor classroom technology is another concern of theirs.

"It's pretty sad we have such poor technology that 1A and 2A high schools have better technology than us," Otto said.

Making teacher evaluations public knowledge will allow students to make better decisions about courses and instructors, a decision Otto said he feels is important, especially with linear tuition.

Riemann, Neufeld push for voter participation

BRANDON ROMBERGER
staff reporter

Tim Riemann and Jennafer Neufeld said they hope students take advantage of the second chance to vote in today's runoff election.

"We are looking forward to giving the students a choice to vote once again," said Riemann, junior in agricultural economics, French and pre-law.

Riemann said he and Neufeld felt the word-of-mouth campaign they ran was a good way to talk about voting in general.

"We have supporters who not only tell other students to vote, they tell the students about our issues," he said. "It's a good way to spread the word about what Jen and I want to do for K-State students."

Neufeld, junior in agricultural economics, said she had possible explanations for the decline in voter turnout.

"If students really had a strong feeling, they would vote. I think it's a combination of accessibility and just getting the students involved," Neufeld said.

Riemann said he had another possible explanation.

"I've said all along that the Student Governing Association has to give the students a reason to vote. Students don't vote because they don't think we can make a difference. I feel that we can show students a reason to vote," Riemann said.

Riemann said he, Neufeld and their supporters have been out in full force this week chalking sidewalks. He also said they visited groups they had talked to before.

Riemann said issues brought up by candidates who didn't make the runoff were important in helping the students.

Colin Rafferty, junior in English, and Trey Hock, junior in English, advocated a pro-active approach seeking student input.

"Jennafer and I have a great deal of respect for the Rafferty-Hock ticket," Riemann said.

Bill Burns, sophomore in business, and Greg Miller, senior in electrical engineering, advocated a service to transport students to and from Aggieville.

Riemann said it was evident from the number of students who voted for the service that it was a good idea.

"Burns and Miller had the right idea with the designated driver and shuttle service to Aggieville," he said.

Riemann said these are important issues that should be addressed at some point, but said quality education was still their focus.

Gulf War bill to assist veterans

▶ Look it up on the World Wide Web. The Gulf War bill is HB2108. It is available on the Kansas government site on the Internet at the following address: (www.ink.org/public/legislative/fulltext-bill.html).

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate gave tentative approval Tuesday to a bill that would require the state to identify Kansas veterans suffering from Gulf War syndrome.

The bill was passed on a voice vote after about 20 minutes of debate.

"It would work to inform veterans of the Gulf War about a number of health problems," said Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, chairwoman of the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee, which held hearings on the bill.

"There is a commitment when you serve your state and country that your medical situation will be taken care of if you go in harm's way," she said.

Sen. Janice Hardenburger, R-Haddam, opposed the bill.

"This plays on our guilt feelings and our allegiance to men in the service," Hardenburger said. "It's the responsibility of the federal government, not the state, to collect information on veterans."

House and Senate committees held extensive hearings on the bill, which would require the state to identify Kansas veterans suffering from Gulf War syndrome and children with birth defects who were born to veterans of that 1991 war.

Symptoms of the Gulf War syndrome include persistent dizziness, chronic fatigue, painful joints, heart problems, rashes, hair loss and night sweats.

The bill was supported during hearings by numerous veterans and by representatives of the American Legion, the Association of the U.S. Army and the American GI Forum.

Ron Trewyn, associate vice provost for research at K-State, also supported the bill. Trewyn developed a survey that was used in Ohio under similar legislation.

There were no opponents during committee hearings.

Rep. Dan Thimesch, D-Cheney, is the principal sponsor of the bill, which had more than 60 co-sponsors in the House. The House passed it last month on a unanimous vote.

The bill also would set up a board to advise the Kansas Commission on Veterans Affairs.

The commission would be responsible for surveying veterans on a wide range of physical, mental, employment and other problems and for making recommendations for legislation.

Parents of children with birth defects who were born to veterans of the war would be able to register their children.

Fone Crisis Center offers options

KARA LOWE
staff reporter

Suicide, sexuality and relationships are some of the issues volunteers face at Fone Crisis Center.

Fone is a hot line individuals can call to have someone listen to their problems. It was started in 1970 by a group of K-State students and is funded by Student Senate. The funds cover the cost of the telephone bill, supplies and three student salaries.

"I like the opportunity to talk to people, calm them down and help them come up with their own solutions by working through their problem," said Jill Kolde, junior in family life and community studies and director of Fone.

Fone is open from 5 p.m. to 8 a.m. every day, including holidays. As many as 10 calls have been answered by volunteers in one night. Callers range from K-State students to individuals living in the surrounding communities.

"Our job is to be an attentive and good listener. We don't try to solve problems or ask the caller for any information. We just listen attentively," said Shawn Peña, junior in life sciences and assistant director of Fone.

Individuals go through a three- to four-hour training session and work one shift with another employee to become a volunteer.

"I think Fone is a very good outlet. The volunteers do some really wonderful work. They all have warm hearts, big ears, and are very honest and open-minded. Some go above and beyond the call of duty. We couldn't have asked for a better group," Peña said.

More than 20 K-State students volunteer for Fone. They work at least one shift a week.

"I like being able to be here and talk to people who feel like they have no one else to talk to. I think a call is successful especially when I am able to give the caller needed information, such as a referral number where they can get additional help," Amy Benson, junior in psychology, said.

The center is equipped with a television, VCR, refrigerator, microwave, computer and bed. A collection of movies and books are available for the volunteers to use when they are not answering a call.

"I can study and get a lot of stuff done. But when the phone rings, that's my top priority," Kolde said.

Peña said that once a caller told her they felt like they had found a friend at the end of a phone call.

"This is probably one of the most rewarding jobs I've ever had. Knowing I'm doing something for someone else makes me feel good inside — that's why I'm doing this," Peña said.

▶ RIEMANN, NEUFELD WIN ELECTION by collecting 55 percent of the student body's vote, prepare to start working toward goals.

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

When Tim Riemann got the word that he had won the race for student body president, his running mate Jennafer Neufeld wasn't there yet.

Riemann and Neufeld expected the results of the election to come in around 9:30 p.m., so when Election Committee Chair Sean Asbury called at 8:25 p.m., Neufeld was still getting ready at home.

"Hey, sweet. Thanks," Riemann said quietly into the phone, then thanked Asbury for his work before hanging up and calmly addressing the small group of supporters that had arrived early. "We did it."

Cheers and whoops erupted, contrasting with Riemann's quiet smile.

Someone suggested acting sad when Neufeld arrived, but when she entered the front door of the Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity house five minutes later, she already knew. She smiled and clapped, then congratulated and hugged Riemann.

There was no room for sadness, but their hearts went out to their defeated opponents.

"We both have a great deal of respect for Aaron Otto, and we consider them our friends," Riemann said. "That's been one of the hardest things about this whole election process, is that we're running against our friends. But we feel very strongly about our issues, and fortunately, the voters felt the same."

> That's been one of the hardest things about this whole election process, is that we're running against our friends. But we feel very strongly about our issues, and fortunately, the voters felt the same.

> student body president-elect

Riemann and Neufeld received 55 percent of the voter turnout, with 1,181 votes out of 2,131.

They will take office after spring break. Riemann and Neufeld hope to make the adjustment process as short as possible, in part by learning from the experience of the previous administration.

Riemann said it wouldn't take long to get started on programs like the grant for student financial assistance, which the two have been promoting during the campaign. But he said they expect such projects to take a lot of time and effort.

For now, they appreciate their moment of rest before getting back to work.

"We're glad to move on from this stage of the game, which is the campaign," Neufeld said. "To be able to make a difference."

AARON OTTO wipes a tear from his eye shortly after receiving the phone call to let him know that Tim Riemann had won the election for student body president. Many of Otto's fraternity brothers, friends and family joined him at 12th Street Pub, including current student body president Chris Hansen, left, and Otto's running mate, Amy Knedlik.

Otto urges supporters to continue to push for campaign plank issues

STEVE WARE
staff reporter

Silence settled over the room as Aaron Otto, student body presidential candidate, answered the phone call his supporters anxiously awaited.

Hearing the news of their defeat to Tim Riemann and Jennafer Neufeld in Wednesday's runoff election, Otto and Amy Knedlik, vice presidential candidate, addressed the crowd at 12th Street Pub.

"We have some good news and some not-so-good news," Otto said. "We achieved one of our goals. Turnout in the runoff did not plummet. Approximately 2,100 people voted today. That's incredible. The not-so-good news — we were a little bit short of having more than them."

Wiping a tear from her eye, Knedlik joined Otto in thanking their supporters.

"To you all, I appreciate your support more than you know," Knedlik said. "Thank you so much for everything you've all done to help us out over the last three months."

Otto thanked the crowd of about 100 people for supporting K-State.

"We were sometimes criticized, but you all kept the faith and believed in our issues," Otto said. "You cared about K-State, and that's what matters. We may not have won, but you all have. The runoff was between two parties that cared enough to try to change things for the better. I know they will continue to get better."

Referring to their supporters' efforts, the candidates urged the crowd to continue pushing their issues.

"We did everything short of bringing the Pacific Ocean to Kansas to make the campus aware of the things that are so important to our issues and platform," Otto said. "They are important to K-State and will hopefully continue into the next Senate."

Mandy Reese, Otto and Knedlik's campaign manager, said she was disappointed with the election results

Justices debate federal restrictions on to sexually explicit online access

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Debating the future of the Internet, several Supreme Court justices raised doubts about a federal law that restricts online access to sexually explicit material to keep it from children.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor suggested in arguments Wednesday that the Internet could be viewed as a public place, much like a street corner or a park, where speech has strong First Amendment protection.

Justice Stephen G. Breyer said the Internet law could make large numbers of high school students across the country guilty of federal crimes for having online conversations about their sexual experiences.

The Clinton administration begin a spirited defense of the 1996 Communications Decency Act, which makes it a crime to put indecent words or pictures online where children can find them.

"The Internet threatens to give every child a free pass into the equivalent of every adult bookstore and every adult video store in the country," Justice Department lawyer Seth P. Waxman told the court.

But the attorney for those who challenged the law said it also would keep indecent material away from adults who have a right to see it.

"The government cannot reduce the adult population to reading or viewing only what is appropriate for children," said lawyer Bruce J. Ennis, representing groups including the American Library Association and the American Civil Liberties Union.

A three-judge federal court in Philadelphia blocked the law from taking effect last year, saying it would unlawfully chill adults' free-speech rights.

Sexually oriented material is protected by the Constitution's First Amendment if it is deemed indecent but not obscene.

The Supreme Court is expected to rule by July in its first case involving the global computer network — a place where Ennis said average citizens can speak to the world for free.

Several justices tried to decide what kind of communication to compare to the rapidly expanding Internet, which is thought to connect as many as 40 million people using more than 9.4 million computers worldwide. Justices' questioning during arguments does not necessarily signal how they will vote on a case.

O'Connor saw an electronic similarity to a park or street corner. Breyer said, "The Internet is rather like the telephone."

Justice David H. Souter said the law could allow a parent to be sent to prison for allowing his or her child to use a computer to view sexually explicit material.

And Justice Anthony M. Kennedy said that under Waxman's analysis, the government could prohibit some conversations in public places.

But Justice Antonin Scalia said that in any context it is lawful for government to require that pornographic material be kept away from children.

"We say 'tough luck, you have to sell it in stores rather than on the street,'" Scalia said.

The law makes it a crime to make indecent or patently offensive words or pictures available online where they can be found by children. Violators could get up to two years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Victims allege government could have stopped bombing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY — Victims of the Oklahoma City bombing filed claims Wednesday against the federal government, contending officials could have prevented the tragedy. Others condemned the claims.

"Anytime there's a tornado and someone's killed, are we going to then sue the National Weather Service?" asked Mike Lenz, whose wife was killed.

The claims were filed by 34 people, including relatives of people who died in the April 19, 1995, bombing. The claims are needed to preserve the right to sue the government, which expires this year on the bombing's second anniversary. Each claim seeks $25 million in damages.

"The United States government neglected to protect persons in and around the Murrah Building despite knowing that terrorists had discussed plans for violence before April 19, 1995," the date the bombing killed 168 people, attorney Richard Bieder said at a news conference.

Simple precautions such as banning parking near the building or blocking off the street could have foiled the plot to bomb the building, Bieder said.

Among those filing claims were Glenn and Kathy Wilburn, whose two grandsons, Chase and Colton, died in the building's day-care center.

"We want the truth. We want every facet of the truth brought out," said Glenn Wilburn, who maintains federal officials had some form of warning.

Federal officials have repeatedly denied any advance knowledge of the bombing. Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols face separate trials on murder and conspiracy charges in the bombing. McVeigh's trial is to begin March 31.

An opposing group of bombing victims condemned the claims.

"I'm very outraged," said Catherine Alanize, whose father, Customs Agent Claude Medearis, was killed in the blast. "Our government is not to blame. The people to blame are right now awaiting trial."

The claims were aimed at the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the FBI, the General Services Administration, the Federal Protective Services and the U.S. Marshal's Service.

▶ 24 HOURS IN REVIEW

These briefs encapsulate the news of the past 24 hours, and they are from staff reports, wire reports and other news services.

▶ NATION AND WORLD

• UNDERCOVER DETECTIVE SHOOTS OFF-DUTY OFFICER IN ARGUMENT.

LOS ANGELES — Two motorists exchanged words, one waved a gun and was fatally shot by the other without either realizing that they were police officers, one off-duty and the other undercover, authorities said.

Undercover Detective Frank Lyga, 40, fired two shots after Officer Kevin Gaines, 31, waved his weapon on a busy street in a commercial neighborhood Tuesday afternoon, Police Chief Willie Williams said.

Neither officer was wearing a uniform and both were driving unmarked cars.

Lyga, who was working a sting operation, pulled Gaines from his car as other undercover officers converged on the scene, police said.

Gaines was identified as an officer from the Pacific Division in West Los Angeles after he arrived at the hospital, where he was pronounced dead an hour and a half after the shooting.

Police did not know why the two men were arguing.

• PROSPECTIVE JURORS SHOW UP FOR OKC BOMBING TRIAL.

GOLDEN, Colo. — Prospective jurors for the Oklahoma City bombing trial gathered Wednesday to answer more questions from the judge and attorneys about what they know of the case.

The jury pool for the Denver trial is so large the closed-door session had to be held in an auditorium at the Jefferson County fairgrounds.

About 1,000 questionnaires were sent out to 23 counties and about 500 people were expected to respond in preparation for the trial of Timothy McVeigh, which begins March 31.

• UNIVERSITY REOPENED AS DIVERS SEARCH CAPSIZED BARGE.

BATON ROUGE, La. — More than 1,000 college students left evacuation shelters Wednesday as divers searched a capsized barge in the flood-swollen Mississippi River for the source of a leaking toxic gas.

The stranded barge was among a string of 25 that struck the U.S. 190 bridge and broke free along the west bank of the river closest to Port Allen.

It was loaded with 400,000 gallons of toluene and benzene, both flammable and toxic.

Before dawn Wednesday, gauges recorded no toxicity in the air near the barge.

State police had been prepared to evacuate downtown Baton Rouge, including the Capitol, other state government buildings and the Governor's Mansion, after the barge overturned Monday and began leaking below the water line.

• CLINTON NOMINATES TENET AS NEW DIRECTOR OF CIA.

WASHINGTON — Playing it safe after his first choice succumbed to bruising attacks, President Clinton nominated acting CIA Director George Tenet on Wednesday to head the nation's spy agency.

Just two days after Republican-led opposition persuaded Anthony Lake to withdraw from consideration, Clinton selected a substitute whose long intelligence career started on the staff of a GOP lawmaker.

"He's well known to the Senate and well-respected by Republicans, as well as Democrats," the president said, sitting in a wheelchair to protect his mending knee.

Tenet, 44, emerged as the quick choice after Lake, Clinton's former national security adviser, bowed out with a bitter letter to Clinton that said, "Washington has gone haywire."

• FORMER TEXACO EXEC SAYS INDICTMENTS UNFAIR.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — A retired Texaco executive whose secret tapes helped force the company to settle a race discrimination lawsuit pleaded innocent Wednesday to an obstruction of justice charge.

Richard Lundwall was the only person charged with trying to destroy documents, although the tapes recorded other executives also discussing the destruction of evidence.

He could face 10 years in jail if convicted.

"Do I think it's unfair? Sure I do. Of course I do," he said outside court.

LUPE ALTAMIRA, freshman in advertising, runs a lawn-mowing business and is involved with Youth Entrepreneurs of Kansas.

lawn mowing business helps student win award

STORY BY HANG NGUYEN • PHOTO BY JILL JARSULIC

When Lupe Altamira pushed his first lawn mower at the age of 6, he said he never imagined that he would own a lawn service.

Today, at the age of 19, Altamira, freshman in advertising, and his partner, Jarrod Bowren, own L & J Lawn Service.

Altamira said he could not have a successful business without the help of Youth Entrepreneurs of Kansas.

"It's a great program. It totally changed my life," Altamira said. "It showed me how to market my services, how to be confident, how to get customers — all the skills to be an entrepreneur."

YEK, a local branch of the National Foundation for Teaching Entrepreneurship, was established in Wichita in 1991 by the Charles Koch Charitable Foundation.

The first class was taught at Wichita North High School. Today, classes are available at six Wichita high schools.

"The class teaches entrepreneurial thinking and concepts with hands-on values through activities such as economic simulations and a wholesale entrepreneurial market," Joanie Malone, program director of YEK, said.

The class, with its own curriculum and specially trained teachers, is offered to students with entrepreneurial interests and at-risk students, Malone said. Originally a semester-long class, it is now a full-year course. It targets sophomores through seniors.

When Altamira took the YEK class his junior year in high school, he said he never dreamed he would win the 1997 NFTE Entrepreneur of the Year Award, a $5,000 educational scholarship from KSNW Channel 3, a $1,000 scholarship from Pizza Hut, where he interned, and $250 from the National Women's Hispanic Network.

Malone said he won the Pizza Hut award by giving a presentation that almost earned him a standing ovation.

"I've watched him grow from not being able to give a presentation in class to giving a creative presentation that won him $1,000 from Pizza Hut in eight months," Malone said.

The $5,000 award was given to a YEK graduate with a successful business. Altamira's L & J Lawn Service has about 25 clients. He charges $20 per lawn, which includes the cost of cutting, bagging the grass and edging the lawn.

YEK graduates were able to apply for an internship with either Pizza Hut Management Training or the Smith Barney Summer Stock Market Program.

"He was the only student to ask to participate in both internships," Malone said.

The Smith Barney internship provided a nine-week summer course, which taught about the brokerage industry and stocks. In the end, there was a competition where participants gave a presentation in front of business owners about what they had learned during the program.

Winners took a trip to New York to visit Smith Barney's headquarters and the New York Stock Exchange. Altamira was a finalist.

"Lupe has been a good finisher," said Paul Attwater III, a financial consultant for Smith Barney and K-State alumnus. "He has a lot of humility and integrity, which keeps him from bragging about himself."

Although he could not go to New York through the internship, Altamira won $1,500 and a trip to New York through the 1997 NFTE Entrepreneur of the Year Award.

The awards banquet was at the Times Square Marriott in Manhattan, N.Y., where Altamira was able to showcase his business to 600 people.

With all the awards and a successful business under his belt, Altamira said he aspires to own his own advertising agency one day.

"I didn't think I'd go to college before. I just though I'd play baseball somewhere," he said.

"When I joined YEK, I found that I wanted to do something different, like advertising."

Through YEK, Altamira has found that he has a love for marketing and advertising, Malone said.

"If it wasn't for me taking a chance and taking that class, I really don't know what I'd be doing," Altamira said.

Student status helps avoid jury duty

TRISHA LANGFORD
staff reporter

Being summoned for jury duty wins the bronze in the certainties of the life race. Death wins the gold, and taxes take home the silver. And unfortunately, students cannot be not disqualified.

Those who check off "student" as their full-time occupations are not automatically excused from reporting. Usually either an excuse or deferral is required.

Riley County is one of the counties that excuses students from jury duty, realizing that students can be penalized for missing classes.

"We are very accommodating as far as calendars go," said Pam Clark, administrative assistant and jury coordinator.

The jury-selection process in Riley County is performed by sending out 1,500 questionnaires three times a year. General questions such as age, residency, employment, disabilities and vacation time are asked.

Ann Giebler, sophomore in elementary education, was summoned to her hometown of Great Bend in Barton County. Because she is attending school away from home, her dad filled out the information form, marking her as a full-time student.

"I talked to the County Clerk in Great Bend and he said that since I was a student, I would more than likely be excused and not even have to attend jury selection," Giebler said.

If a student is not excused, there are other options. If the student is willing to serve but cannot on the requested day, a phone call can be made to the assigned judge to inform him or her of dates when the student would be available.

Another option is deferral. When calling to inform the judge of student status, permission to be excused may not be given. Instead, a deferral to the next available date is assigned.

If a student has come this far in the selection process without being excused, there is still a chance he or she might not be chosen as a juror.

All people summoned for a specific date are required to be at the court house at a scheduled time. Those present will go through the boir dire process, in which attorneys ask questions to the jurors about occupation, family and beliefs. If the attorneys get a response that they believe will not benefit the case, they can release that juror.

Questions about jury duty? Contact Pam Clark at 537-6364.

On the other hand, if a response from a juror is an asset to the case, that juror may be selected.

Jurors are paid $10 per day and 30 cents per mile driven from residences outside the Manhattan city limits to the court house.

"If I'm not excused, then I'll receive my $10 a day, and the county will have to pay my gas mileage. But it's not worth missing class over," Giebler said.

Grad students help hearing, speech impaired

CAMI SOWERS
staff reporter

Hearing, speech and language problems affect a large number of people in the community. K-State is helping those people by offering services through the Speech and Hearing Center on campus.

The center, located in Leasure Hall, is open to the public and also provides graduate students with clinical experience in evaluating and treating communication disorders. The services provided by graduate students and faculty help people with speech and language disorders and hearing loss.

"Where we get most of our patients from include referrals from physicians, speech pathologists, nurses, senior centers and hospitals," Bob Garcia, audiologist and the center's business manager, said.

"Anyone that would see a patient that might have a speech and language disorder or hearing disorder interacts with those kinds of folks would refer to us if they felt the patient needed additional services."

Therapy programs usually last for a semester, and if the patient needs an additional session, another semester is scheduled. The types of patients who are seen at the clinic include K-State students, children and adults from the general public.

On average, the number of clients the clinic deals with is around 30-40 in one semester. Between 10 and 20 speech diagnostics are performed each semester, and five to seven hearing evaluations are done each week.

The age of people affected by speech and language disorders varies, along with hearing loss. Hearing loss can affect a wide range of people, from four months old to senior citizens. Speech and language also affect children from one year of age to the elderly.

When dealing with children, it is hard to sit them down and do an activity. So, you have to get your information on the fly, said Ann Smit, associate professor in the School of Family Studies and Human Services.

The level of disabilities the clinic sees in its clients ranges from not so severe to patients whose communication abilities are so declined they must use alternative communication devices, Smit said.

Speech and language disorders cover a large area. Individuals might have problems with language, articulation, voice, fluency or they might have an acquired disorder, which includes stroke and head injury patients.

Many of the disorders and language problems the clinic deals with include stuttering, child language problems, voice problems, strokes, tumors, neurological diseases, autism, cerebral palsy and they also help people who speak English as a second language, Smit said.

For hearing, individuals are seen who have conductive hearing loss, which might be children who have fluid behind their eardrums. A teacher or physician might refer the child to see how much hearing loss the fluid is causing. Adults are also seen because of the aging process or noise exposure, Garcia said.

Auditory processing evaluations are done on children from age six to 12. These evaluations look at how well the auditory path processes the information.

Because the clinic is a training facility, a faculty member and a graduate student conduct a complete speech and language diagnostic, which is closely supervised. When patients come in, the student is supervised by a faculty member, Garcia said.

If the problem is with hearing, the graduate is again supervised by a member who is a certified audiologist.

Graduate students must complete 350-375 supervised hours of clinical experience during their graduate program to graduate and become a licensed speech and language pathologist or audiologist. Hours are gained at the campus clinic and other sites set up by the department, which include schools, rehabilitation centers and hospitals.

The clinic has a sliding scale for low-income patients. The scale is based on income and the number of people in the patient's family.

"Because we are a training facility, and it is so important for our students to get quality training as a part of the program, we make every effort with the patient to make it work for them financially," Garcia said.

Sound advice helps students to survive spring break journey

Wait – before all you cool college crazies scamper off for a week of sun, fun and reckless abandon, we would like to give you some helpful survival tips for making it back from the quest for relaxation in one piece.

Spring break should be about one thing – forgetting about the daily grind of classes and homework and venting some stress. But having a really good time necessitates that no misfortune befalls you while making merry.

If you're traveling in a more terrestrial manner, make sure your car is road worthy before starting out and give yourself opportunities to pull over and refresh yourself on a long drive.

Also, remember that you're going to be on the road with thousands of other stressed-out, partying, can't-wait-to-forget-that-failed-mid-term college students and enough law-enforcement personnel to keep track of everybody. Watch your driving and the road habits of those sharing the asphalt strip with you.

Leave phone numbers of where you can be reached with people back home and let them know you made it to your destination safely.

Speaking of numbers, it wouldn't be a good idea to write down personal identification numbers of credit cards and automatic teller machine cards. You could wind up footing the bill for someone else's spring-break frolic.

Besides your suntan lotion, you might also take another form of identification. Another ID might come in handy if you lose your driver's license, if someone is really suspicious of who you really are or in case you end up in a jail in Mexico.

And remember – if you and that hot-looking, spring-break stranger start getting really friendly, please be safe.

Finally, if you're not going anywhere special during spring break, make sure you do something special for yourself. Diving back into classes won't be fun or productive if you haven't had a chance to kick back and replenish yourself.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a consensus opinion is reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and students.

DISCOVERING COFFEE ETIQUETTE

VALERI CRENSHAW

VALERI CRENSHAW is a graduate student in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Valeri at (vrc4359@ksu.edu).

Okay, I am at that stage in my life where I can come to terms with my needs. I am not embarrassed by these needs. This is who I am, and I must live with that.

I am an addict. I am not myself without the help of a substance.

I know what you are thinking. No, I am not addicted to alcohol, sex, nicotine or anything that could get me thrown into jail. My drug of choice is a cappuccino.

Boy, do I love my cappuccino. Tall, vanilla. I call it the usual. I realized that I had a real problem when I started drinking alone ... I know, I know. Just a quirk or two away from dementia. I can live with it.

Because of this little addiction my lifestyle has been greatly altered. The Before-Cappuccino Valeri didn't spend much time in any one place. Now I live in those little coffee shops that have rocked every little town from coast to coast.

I am now what is known as a junkie. I even have a place of choice. My life was not complete until I found Java. Home sweet home. I used to wander the streets aimlessly in search of the meaning of life. But now, I am found.

All of the questions of the universe are answered when I sit by the window watching people go by as I hold a tall, vanilla cappuccino in my hand. What could be more rewarding?

Along with my new lifestyle of being a coffee shop junkie comes a set of rules that govern acceptable behaviors. I call them coffee shop norms or scripts.

There is a fine art to coffee shop loitering. Techniques vary from person to person, but everyone has the same goal — unwind with good food and the drink of your choice.

Who could resist hanging around such an inviting atmosphere? The friendly-faced staff. The intriguing background music. The sophisticated menu. The great art that covers the walls. The European feel of such places feeds my insatiable appetite for travel.

It is important to realize that an activity such as coffee shop loitering has unwritten expectations. Like walking on the right side of the street or sidewalk, there is a certain etiquette.

These do's and don'ts are not designed to hamper enjoyment, but rather provide for the greatest enjoyment for everyone. In short, the underlying idea is to respect others.

There are many proper and improper behaviors to be executed in a coffee shop, but there is really only one that gets me annoyed when not followed correctly. (I am, of course, excluding the Miss Manner's advice that coffee shop owners should refuse business to anyone wearing a University of Kansas shirt. I figure that goes without saying.)

One of the most important things to remember while loitering is to monitor your volume. I'll never forget the time I was trying to relax with my newfound frothy friend and a newspaper and all I could hear was this neverending saga about some lady's attempt at buying a couch.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

The yammering was taking place at least five tables away, yet I could, to this day, tell you every little trauma she had to endure with this enormous decision.

I am not saying that you can't talk, laugh and ham it up, but please respect us serious junkies out there.

To me, sitting in a coffee shop is more religious than sitting in a church pew. When the characters on "Seinfeld" say, "Meet you at the coffee shop," I get a little giddy with excitement.

in TOUCH with our INHUMANITY

New proposed legislation could lead to discrimination, alienation

DeRAY GAMBLE/Collegian

No matter what aspirations society might have on the surface regarding nobility, such as the belief that all people have been created as equal, both sides of the human consciousness must be examined to see a true representation of what we as human beings are.

Just as we are human, we are inhuman as well. The admirable traits of our general conception of humanity are those we dream for. The undesirable emotions are tucked away under historic footnotes and given the names of madmen.

JUSTIN WILD

JUSTIN WILD is a senior in English and education. You can your e-mail comments to Justin at (justone@ksu.edu)

Recently, a new footnote might have been added to our ever-expanding reference set on human history. Last Saturday, in Philadelphia, members of AIDS Coalition To Unleash Power and Us Women protested the American Medical Association's backing of a bill which, if approved, would effectively discriminate against those members of our society who are HIV positive.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Tom Coburn (R-Oklahoma), would require mandatory HIV testing for all pregnant women. The bill also calls for a national registry to be created of all HIV-positive people. Finally, the legislation requires all HIV-positive people to register their partners so that said partners can be notified.

This is appalling. To begin with, a national registry of all HIV-positive people seems suspicious. Keeping track of people as if they were deer in a national forest is wrong, besides the fact that if information were to leak from the list, it could mean discrimination against whomever's name was uncovered.

Secondly, just what good is mandatory testing, or some list, going to do with treating or preventing the disease? Sure, notifying a person's partners, should they be registered, might keep contact down; however, what if HIV-positive people choose not to register themselves?

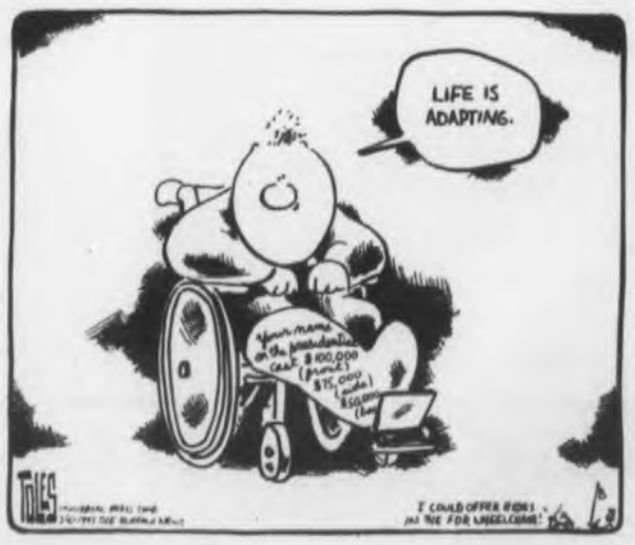
Are we as a society going to come to the point where, to keep individuals with HIV from interacting with others, we put HIV-positive people in special hospitals to monitor their every move?

When dealing with this disease, as with any other, patience and understanding must be used; we aren't going to educate one another by locking up those we fear.

HIV doesn't spread through touching somebody, sharing a cup or breathing the same air; it isn't some crazy retribution from God, and it wasn't manufactured by the government.

This, to me, is the government attempting to cover up a disease it ignored throughout most of the 1980s. HIV and AIDS were disregarded and understudied for years because the majority of the individuals living with it were homosexual; after some time, with people like Ryan White dying from HIV, it moved to the forefront.

If HIV had been paid any real attention when it first appeared, scientists might be farther along in a cure. If my generation had received more sex education regarding sexually transmitted diseases, then perhaps we wouldn't be facing a statistic that says one in 250 college students is HIV positive.



The fact is, this is one more way to categorize a people rather than have compassion for them. This measure is in no way, shape or form going to help us understand the disease, nor really keep track of it.

People can have HIV and not even show any sign of illness. If they never get tested, they can continue to spread the disease unwittingly.

If we, as a society, want to exhibit our humanity, it shouldn't be in the form of a congressional bill; a far better testament to what human faith may achieve would come in the form of a people united to help their kin live with pain and loss.

This measure is a step against a people, and against the concept of humanity.

'Secrets' achieves simple innocence

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Behind the lives of ordinary folks, like ourselves, rests a gaggle of secrets and lies we tell ourselves and our families.

At least, this is the premise that is brought to such gloriously hilarious light in English director Mike Leigh's film "Secrets and Lies."

"Secrets and Lies" might sound like middle-class mediocrity, what with a description as bland as a white woman's family coming to terms with encountering the woman's black daughter she gave up for adoption in the 1960s. Perhaps TV movie fodder at best, but a feature-length movie?

Only a genius like Leigh could craft a film so pulsing with life. There is no script; actors were given rough sketches of characters, put into situations and told to respond. It's an amazing process and one which the film's cast has obviously thrived in doing, although a few have made some comments about rejoicing to have the film completed.

But at the heart of "Secrets and Lies" there rests a simple innocence rarely achieved in less subtle dramatic films — simplicity of lifestyle, of character, of plot and of art direction, yet all infused with an intense level of emotion.

Movie Review

While the hypersensitive mother, Cynthia (Brenda Blethyn), seems to find increasing peace in her developing relationship with her successful, rediscovered daughter, Hortense (Marianne Jean-Baptiste), her live-in daughter, Roxanna (Claire Rushbrook), is driven to the edge at about the same rate.

The easy-going, mellow medium of the film is Hortense, a black, middle-class professional who seems at odds with her mother Cynthia's lower-class lifestyle and attitudes. Somehow Hortense manages stability in the midst of the madness of a supremely dysfunctional family.

A side plot involves Cynthia's photographer brother, Maurice (Timothy Spall), with whom she almost never talks, and his wife, Monica (Phyllis Logan). They are a couple at odds with her inability to become pregnant and to do suburban domestic chores and his uninterested treatment of her worries.

Another sub-plot involves Maurice's ex-boss asking to take back the studio he sold Maurice, but the plot doesn't pan out.

Throw this mix together, and Leigh has created a story about class, race and familial relations much grander than its simplicity would suggest.

Blethyn has fun with Cynthia, giving her an outrageous English vernacular accent and a giddy sense of humor. To think her performance and characterization are originally hers gives her an edge over the other Best Actress nominees at Monday's Academy Awards.

Jean-Baptiste's smooth performance garnered her a Best Supporting Actress nomination, although she's far too subtle and considered to win such an award.

If "Secrets and Lies" can be a bit shaky with its plots, its appeal rests with its cast members and their lives, proving once again that the story of the human condition will never be tireless when told in such thoughtfully clever ways.

Tonight is the last night "Secrets and Lies" is playing in Manhattan.

Tobacco group to settle case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Liggett Group Inc. will publicly acknowledge that cigarettes are addictive and cause cancer under a settlement with all 22 states suing tobacco companies, broadcast reports said Wednesday.

Liggett also is expected to cooperate fully with the states in efforts against other tobacco companies, ABC and NBC News reported.

Liggett, the smallest of the major U.S. tobacco companies, will turn over a treasure trove of incriminating new documents under the settlement, which could be announced as early as Thursday, NBC reported.

Liggett broke with the industry in March 1996 when it settled with five states seeking to recover the public health-care costs of treating sick smokers.

Liggett also settled a federal class-action lawsuit filed by smokers.

Liggett, the Durham, N.C.-based maker of Chesterfield, Lark and L&M cigarettes, has agreed to pay $25 million up front, plus 25 percent of its pre-tax profits over the next 25 years, NBC said.

ABC's "World News Tonight" and the Wall Street Journal reported in January that the documents to be turned over include Liggett's lawyers' notes from about 30 years of meetings with attorneys from other tobacco companies.

Liggett will add a prominent warning to each pack stating that smoking is addictive, and acknowledge that smoking causes health problems, including lung cancer.

It also will agree to government advertising, marketing and sales restrictions, the networks reported.

Tobacco companies have repeatedly denied that smoking is dangerous.

Liggett is owned by the Brooke Group Inc. A spokesman for Brooke, based in Miami, declined comment on the reports.

The states have sued the industry to recoup millions of dollars spent to treat smoking-related health problems. About 46-million Americans smoke and the government says smoking kills 400,000 a year.

Smoking is the major cause of lung cancer and has been linked to cancers of the pancreas, stomach, breast, ovary and throat.

It also causes emphysema, and is a major contributor to cardiovascular disease, impotence, stroke, heart attack and even dental disease.

Tuttle Creek Dam gives flood protection

CHRISTA CAREY
staff reporter

With snow melts causing many problems in other states' rivers and lakes, Manhattan residents must be aware of the potential for flooding.

Since the flood of 1993, the Tuttle Creek State Park Corps of Engineers continues to watch and record water levels.

"Right now we are OK, but that can change awful fast," Dale Forge, project manager at the Corps office, said.

A manmade levee surrounding Manhattan has protected the city from the swelling of the Kansas River.

It all depends on national weather patterns and on what happens upstream. For now, the Big Blue River is at the height the Corps wants it.

"As far as water, our basin is empty," Forge said.

The lake can rise 10-12 feet with minimal flooding downstream. The biggest benefit of the dam is that it gives people time to figure out where to go and get their belongings out of the way before the water has to be released.

"There is always going to be flooding during periods of high precipitation, but hopefully it can remain controlled flooding," said Pat Collins, emergency management coordinator for Riley County.

In 1993, water poured from thunderclouds and tornadoes blew through parts of Kansas for a week.

Tree limbs and trunks covered saturated grounds, lines were down and power was out. Boulders broke loose from Bluemont Hill and 50-plus mph winds blew through the city.

Many residents near Tuttle Creek Reservoir were forced to leave their homes where $3 million in damages occurred later.

Tuttle Creek rose 46 feet above the lake's normal level.

"I was working at the park, and the office closed because there was no electricity. We were flooded out," Pat Spain, office assistant at Tuttle Creek State Park, said.

But Manhattan did not become a total disaster area like other tributaries on the upper Mississippi River.

Thousands of residents helped to sandbag the levee with 1.2-million sandbags.

The Tuttle Creek Dam, built in the early 1960s, held back 1993's Big Blue River water until it had to be released. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers opened all 18 gates four feet, letting water down the spillway.

"As long as the Corps does not let the dam get too full and release the water all at once, the dam is an effective control," George Clark II, professor of geology at K-State, said.

In a 44-22 walloping over the Wogs in intramurals, the defending women's champions are the first CHAMPS TEAM MEMBERS cheer from the sidelines of the women's intramural championship game Wednesday night at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. The Champs won the game 44-22 over the Wogs.

Queen sings the hit song, "We are the Champions." Now, for two intramural basketball teams, they can sing that same sweet song.

Wednesday night concluded the all-University tournaments for two of the three intramural divisions.

The women's and co-recreation leagues ended their season after battling for the bragging rights of the entire campus.

In the women's division, the Champs played the Wogs in the championship game. Both teams had endured a flawless season maintaining a perfect record even through the entire playoff bracket.

In the end however, it was the defending champion, Champs, who prevailed with the tournament victory, blowing out their opponent 44-22.

"We are proud of winning the tournament because we worked together to accomplish our goal," a team member of the Champs said. "We had great team unity and had fun playing the games."

After enduring a competitive season in the women's division, the champions said they were pleased with their efforts.

"We are excited that we won the championship and feel that our hard work paid off," a team member of the Champs said. "We were a competitive team and had our sights set on the championship all season."

> "I think that our team was the underdog the entire season. We were not expected to win, but we came out, played hard and had fun."

Unfortunately, not everyone can always be on the winning team.

"I think that our team was the underdog the entire season," said Abby Pike, sophomore in secondary education and team member of the Wogs. "We were not expected to win, but we came out, played hard and had fun."

In the co-rec division, Opposition battled itsopponent, the Ballers, in the finals. It was a tight game throughout, but Opposition prevailed in the end 61-57.

Scoreboard trounces Back Door in semifinals, prepares to meet Tau Kappa Epsilon in finals

With March Madness taking place hundreds of miles away, how can students get involved with all the hoopla?

The answer is simple. Watch the final four.

No, not the NCAA tournament on television, but the final four of the all-University championship live.

Wednesday night, four divisions of the men's intramural basketball teams competed for the right to play in the finals of the all-University tournament to take place tonight at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

In the finals tonight, Scoreboard, independent and defending tournament champions, squares off against fraternity champions, Tau Kappa Epsilon for all-University bragging rights.

To reach the finals, Scoreboard, which consists of mainly football players, defeated Back Door, 6 foot and under champions, Wednesday night in the semifinals of the all-University tournament by a score of 78-45.

Tau Kappa Epsilon reached the finals by defeating Marlatt 2, residence hall champions, in the other semifinal, 61-28.

"With all the academic stress, it is nice to have a satisfying victory like this, especially since I enjoy playing basketball with these guys," Brandon Balman, junior in dietetics, said about playing for Tau Kappa Epsilon.

On the other hand, Scoreboard members find it fulfilling to get a break from football.

"Intramural basketball is a change of pace for us," Jarrett Grosdidier, senior in dentistry, who plays for Scoreboard, said. "We all play one sport, and it is nice to get involved in something different."

The finals of the all-University championship are set for 7 tonight at the Rec Complex.

Scoreboard is the defending all-University tournament champion, and Grosdidier said that every team gives them their best shot since they won the tournament last year.

"We are glad just to have made it this far," Grosdidier said. "From here on, whatever happens, happens."

Furthermore, Grosdidier said his team's main goal was repeating as champions.

"We would like to win the tournament, but we just play to have fun," Grosdidier said. "The fraternity teams are always very organized, so you never can say what will happen."

Tau Kappa Epsilon said that they are excited about the opportunity to play the defending champions, even though they don't know what to expect.

"I haven't seen the other teams play yet," Balman said, "but if we play to our ability, then we should be OK."

Underexposed rugby team offers unmatched levels of physical play

VIEWPOINT

JON BALMER

JON BALMER is a freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications. You can e-mail your comments to Jon at (jkb2004@ksu.edu).

As the final whistle blows and play comes to a halt, you peel your bruised and bloody structure off the turf.

Surveying your fresh wounds, you notice a reverse Adidas symbol has been embedded into your calf, courtesy of an opponent's cleat. Shaking your leg in an attempt to regain feeling, you review the day's results: Excess wounds, grass stains galore and three ounces less in your personal blood bank. All in all, a successful day. Welcome to the world's most physical sport.

For those of you quick to conjure up images of grid-iron warriors and football-toting superstars, jump back Jack. The sport I'm referring to here is rugby, a sport yet to catch on in the States.

But while football is busy snatching up the headlines, rugby has slowly been building its reputation in the United States.

Rugby's governing board recently decided to develop a program to further the game's development in the United States, and K-State already has a club team that receives little attention from the rest of the campus.

But before diving deeper into the area squad, a brief rundown of rugby history is necessary.

The gentleman's game, as it is known, came into existence around 1823, at the Rugby School of England.

In the middle of a soccer game, one of the players apparently became fed up with all the kicking and decided to just grab the ball and run. With this historic starting point, rugby quickly molded into an iron man's game.

No pads are worn during the contest, resulting in body-to-body contact. With each team focused on scoring a try (similar to football's touchdown), the raw intensity of a rugby contest is unmatched.

After the basics of the game were settled, rugby spread through England quicker than butter on a hot biscuit. Making its way through local prep schools, rugby quickly settled into England and transformed into a significant sporting event.

Now the popularity of rugby in Europe and Australia rivals that of soccer.

Although often overlooked by Americans, the World Cup of rugby is the equivalent to our Super Bowl.

The United States' acceptance of the sport took a while longer. Due to significant interruptions, such as World War I and II, rugby remained in the corners of American sports acceptance.

Nonetheless, the English game caught a foothold stateside in the 1960s, probably due to a decade of open-mindedness. With this break, rugby has continued to expand.

Within our own collegiate confines, the K-State rugby club has been in existence since 1973.

Surviving at club status with the little funding the University provides, the club is based more on love for the game than national exposure.

While K-State does provide the dough for one big trip per semester and the jerseys and balls, everything else comes out of the players' pockets.

While relatively unknown to the collective campus, the K-State club fields 45 members, more than half of which are students.

Even with its current roster, club member Scott Cohorst said any interested individuals are welcome to try out for a position.

The club plays eight games a semester, usually matching up against squads from area universities. The club has already faced KU and Emporia this season.

With no on-campus facility available for games, the rugby club marks its home territory as the fields below the Tuttle Creek Dam.

The next home match is at 1:30 p.m. Saturday against Columbia.

So if you're interested in participating, or just want to witness this display of unrivaled physical combat, drop by the Tuttle Creek Dam and check out the match or contact Cohorst at 776-8348.

It might seem a little different than your typical sporting event, but remember — basketball didn't take shape until some doctor nailed up a peach basket.

May is almost here, which means the end of the school year and, for a lot of students, finding a new place to live. You venture out in search of the perfect apartment, but where do you begin and what should you be looking for?

Meeting the standards

STORY BY PORTIA SISCO • ART BY BILL KRAAI

With leases ending in May and June, the rental season is coming up. What should students expect from their rental properties?

Mary Drake, an associate broker with Ryan and Sons Real Estate, said rental properties would be more expensive in Manhattan than other areas.

"We're going to be higher than some of the places in western Kansas and less than some of the big cities," Drake said. "Places in western Kansas will run a lot less than here because this is a college town."

Students should expect to pay from $400 to $450 for a two-bedroom apartment, Drake said.

A lot of owners advertise their own property.

"Watch the paper," Drake said. "Things rent fast enough that a lot of people rent their own."

Students with pets have a harder time finding a place to rent.

"We have a lot who call wanting something where they can keep a pet," Drake said.

Homeowners don't want to remodel an apartment after the pet owner moves out, so apartments that will allow pets are hard to find, Drake said.

With new apartment complexes, there are more choices for students.

"It seems like there's been a lot built," Drake said. "I think that there's a lot more rental apartments than houses."

Buildings have to meet certain standards and requirements to be rented.

"Most of the property anymore has to be inspected by the city," Drake said.

Apartments have to meet fire and safety codes. The city inspects all rental properties before they can be rented.

"The city has closed down some apartments in basements," Drake said.

Some basement apartments have windows that are too small, or ceilings that are too low, Drake said.

All rental properties must comply with the 1994 Uniform Building, Plumbing, Mechanical and Fire codes, as well as the 1996 National Electrical code.

"Occasionally we run into things that need to be corrected," Mac Campbell, building official, said. "We don't allow construction to progress until they are corrected."

Any renovation or remodeling also has to comply with these standards. Sometimes property owners run into problems achieving compliance, Campbell said.

"Ceiling height is probably the biggest stumbling block," Campbell said.

Ceiling heights are required to stand 7 feet 4 inches tall.

"This is sometimes difficult, if not impossible to obtain," Campbell said.

Emergency escape and rescue is also an issue that comes to the front, Campbell said.

If students have concerns with the safety of their apartments, they should contact the Building Permits and Inspection Office in City Hall to request an inspection.

The occupant of the structure has the right to invite a property maintenance inspection, Campbell said.

Chuck Tannehill, assistant director at Manhattan Fire Department, said that during inspections, the department looks at property maintenance and fire codes.

"We look at fire extinguishers. We also look at different kinds of storage and how they're arranged," Tannehill said.

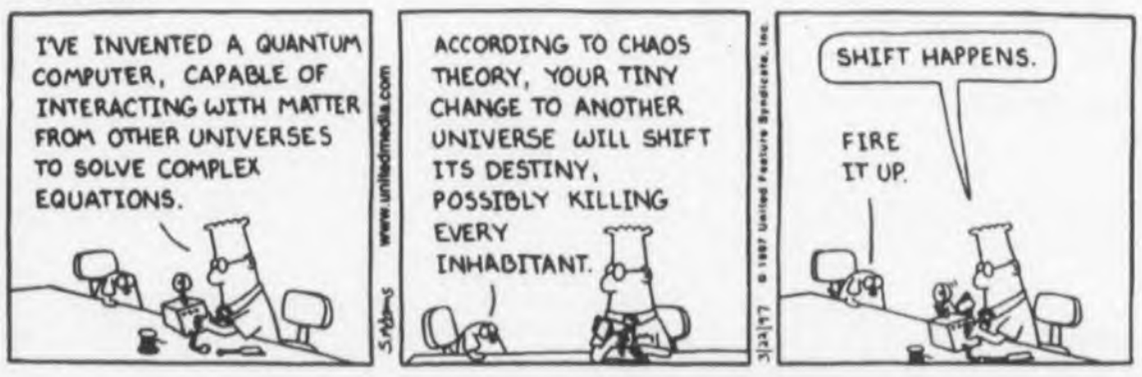
The fire department has developed a sticker program. If an apartment complex meets all the requirements, it is issued a compliance sticker. The department is developing a database with the University, so students can check to see which apartments are in compliance, Tannehill said.

"We're trying to hit every apartment complex at least once a year," Tannehill said. "It's quite a challenge."

Large apartments and small apartments have different compliance problems, Tannehill said. With the large ones, normally there are problems with the fire extinguishers and alarms.

"Sometimes we have to act as an intermediary with the tenants and the landlord," Tannehill said.

rental Rights



Responsibility	Tenant	Landlord
Inventory	Do with landlord within five days of move in.	Keep copy.
Rent	Paid to landlord on date agreed to.	Late fee must be stated and reasonable.
Utilities	Best if in tenant's name or if tenant sees actual bill.	Risk of keeping in client's name — pro-rate share is unfair.
Conditions of Premises	Damage other than normal wear should be assessed.	Everything must be in working order and kept so.
Entry	Reasonable hours and at your convenience (except in emergency).	With permission (except in emergency).
Deposit	Up to one months rent. Extra half can be charged if furnished or have pets. Cannot be used for rent.	Must be used for damage or accrued rent. Must be accounted for in fourteen days, returned in 30 days.
Notices (in writing)	Thirty days prior to the starting of a rental period. Fourteen days to fix something wrong in rental property.	Three days to rent. Thirty days for breach or as in lease. Eviction must be through lawsuit or court order.
Lease	Protects against raise in rent. Tenant sould keep a complete signed copy.	Eviction terminates contracts for period longer than a month.

In Hong Kong, Yuen Sai-wa pleaded guilty to bank robbery but said the only reason he did it was that he felt challenged to keep his girlfriend, who was about to leave him. In San Diego, Calif., Michael William Smith and Danny Mayes were charged with arson for fires they said they set at the behest of Tammy Jo Garcia who they said became sexually aroused by the fires, to their benefit.

CAEDMON'S CALL, a seven-piece acoustic alternative Christian pop band, played to an audience of about 150 in Forum Hall Wednesday night. Band member Cliff Young, who played rhythm guitar and sang lead and background vocals, said Caedmon's Call strives for openness and honesty in its songs.

"The main reason people are sick of Christian music is the lack of openness. Christians need to be more open and vulnerable in their songs, stop preaching and sing about things they struggle with. That's what we try to do," he said.

The group, which is out of Texas, was named to Musician Magazine's Best Unsigned Bands list in 1996. It has now signed with Warner Alliance and a self-titled compact disc is being released March 25. Caedmon's Call also has two other independently released CDs, "I Don't Just Want Coffee" and "My Calm/Your Storm."

FBI refuses to release tapes taken in food industry case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

URBANA, Ill. — The FBI is withholding six tapes secretly recorded by an informant in its investigation of agricultural giant Archer Daniels Midland, a Justice Department official claims.

The tapes are at the heart of a wide-ranging federal investigation into price-fixing in the food additives industry.

Even prosecutors in a price-fixing case against the FBI informant, former senior ADM executive Mark Whitacre, and other former ADM executives have not heard those six tapes, wrote James Griffin, head of the Justice Department's Chicago antitrust office.

Griffin's Jan. 28 letter to Whitacre's lawyer did not elaborate on why the FBI is withholding the audiotapes and videotapes, which are among 237 Whitacre made during an investigation that led to ADM's record $100-million price-fixing fine.

U.S. District Judge Michael Mihm will meet with prosecutors in Peoria next week to review the tapes and decide which should be released.

There was no comment from the FBI. Griffin and the FBI referred calls to Justice Department spokeswoman Gina Talamona in Washington, who did not immediately return a call Wednesday.

ADM fired Whitacre in 1995 after learning he had spent more than two years as an FBI informant investigating price-fixing at the Decatur-based supermarket to the world.

The company pleaded guilty in October to fixing prices of citric acid and the livestock feed additive lysine.

Whitacre later had a public falling-out with prosecutors and now faces price-fixing charges along with former ADM executives Terrance Wilson and Michael Andreas, the son of ADM chairman Dwayne Andreas.

More than two dozen food and beverage companies are suing ADM and several other makers of corn syrup over the price-fixing allegations, and they have asked a federal judge to let them hear Whitacre's tapes.

Parties raise $900 million for elections, have $30 million debt from campaigns

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The national Republican and Democratic parties raised a grand total of $900 million for the 1995-96 election cycle but still ended up more than $30 million in debt.

The parties also leaned more heavily than ever on soft money — the large, unregulated gifts that are central to the ongoing investigations of foreign donations and other alleged fundraising abuses.

Together the parties raised $262.1 million in soft money from corporations, unions and wealthy patrons — three times the 1992 total.

And last year the Republicans, followed grudgingly by the Democrats, embraced a new way to spend party money on behalf of their candidates. The parties spent $11.5 million on these independent expenditures, mostly TV ads, after a Supreme Court ruling in June cleared the way.

The Federal Election Commission outlined the trends Wednesday in a report totaling party fund raising from Jan. 1, 1995, through Dec. 31, 1996. It included money raised by the parties' congressional fundraising arms and by state committees that raise money for federal races.

Republican committees finished the election season with a $15-million debt, the FEC said, while Democratic debt climbed to more than $17 million. That doesn't include millions more owed by the parties' soft-money accounts but not reported to the commission.

Waxman said any child who knows how to click a mouse can go online and find sexually explicit material like that found in Hustler and Penthouse magazines.

"There's nothing in this act that gets in the way of adult-to-adult communication," Waxman said.

Those who want to provide sexually oriented material can limit access to people using a credit card or adult-access code, he said.

Ennis said that would be prohibitively expensive for noncommercial groups and would not work at all for news groups and chat rooms. Ennis said the law would not be effective because a large amount of indecent online material comes from other countries.

But he said parents can use computer blocking devices to keep adult-oriented material away from their children and leave adults free to view it, he said.

Those who challenged the law argue it would restrict access not only to indecent material, but to discussion of issues including safe sex or AIDS.

Donna Rice Hughes of the anti-pornography group Enough is Enough disputed that argument.

"Children deserve a protected space of innocence," said Hughes, whose group filed a friend-of-the-court brief supporting the law.

"They have both worked very hard for the last three months," Reese said. "Of course we're disappointed. They would have done a great job, but there were two excellent sets of candidates."

Reese, also an arts and sciences senator elect, said the prospects of the new Senate looked good.

"We are expecting a very successful Senate next term," she said. "Tim and Jennafer both have some great ideas and will bring a new voice to the Senate. It should be a wonderful year."

Reese said she was pleased with voter turnout.

"I am so incredibly happy with the turnout," she said. "It really shows that students care about their campus and their education. That's what Senate is about. We are liaisons, not delegates. We have to have the support of the students to get anything done."

Arts and Sciences Senator Tracey Mann congratulated Otto's efforts during his Senate tenure.

"SGA is losing a great deal," Mann said. "No one on campus knows more about SGA than Otto. This is, of course, disappointing because he has done so much work in the Senate for the student body."

Mann, also the coordinator of Students for Students, said Senate had important issues to consider in the future.

"There are a lot of issues that we still have to deal with," he said. "The teacher evaluations, safety — they are very important to students. We can't let them die with the end of the election."

Following their defeat, Otto and Knedlik both expressed some uncertainty about what their futures at K-State will bring.

"I'm not sure if I'll get involved again," Knedlik said. "This was a great learning experience and a great opportunity for me, but I'm very tired. It was a lot of work."

Otto said he would still like to get involved and continue the fight against student apathy.

"This is not necessarily the end," he said.

Congress sends victims' rights bill to Clinton

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Senate passed and sent to President Clinton on Wednesday a bill giving victims of the Oklahoma City bombing and other federal crimes the right to both attend the criminal trial and testify at subsequent sentencing hearings.

The legislation, effectively overturning a trial judge's ruling in the Oklahoma City bombing, was passed on a voice vote in the Senate a day after the House passed it 418-9.

Clinton, who departed Wednesday night for Finland for a summit with Russian President Boris Yeltsin, planned to sign the bill, but it was not immediately clear when, White House spokeswoman Mary Ellen Glynn said Wednesday night.

"We received it late today, right before he left for Helsinki," Glynn said. "He does plan to sign it. If he didn't sign it before he left, he'll sign it when he gets back."

The bill would overturn a ruling by U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch, who is presiding over the trail of Oklahoma City bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh. The trial is scheduled to open March 31 in Denver.

Matsch ruled that victims who plan to make statements at sentencing about how the crime has affected them cannot attend other trial proceedings.

He said just seeing the defendants in court could taint their testimony. A federal appeals court has upheld his decision.

Federal evidence rules allow judges to exclude fact witnesses from trial proceedings to keep them from changing their testimony.

▶ CANDIDATES COULD FILE grievance due to Kramer polls closing earlier than posted.

BENJAMIN YODER
city/government editor

Aaron Otto and Amy Knedlik, presidential and vice presidential candidates, have grounds to file a grievance with the Elections Committee, said Sean Asbury, senate elections chair.

Runoff election polls in Kramer dining center closed 20 to 30 minutes earlier than scheduled on Wednesday, election day.

It was the only poll that closed early.

Asbury said the polls closed between 5:30 and 5:40 p.m. because they had no people running the booths.

"It was a decision that had to be made," he said. "We had no choice."

Kathleen Copple, graduate assistant, said volunteers were scheduled to work until 6 p.m., but they did not show to work the tables.

Otto has 21 days from the general election, which is April 2, to file a grievance with the Elections Committee.

If a grievance is filed, the complaint would come before the Tribunal Council.

Tribunal is made up of two faculty members chosen by Faculty Senate and three members chosen by current Student Body President Chris Hansen and Attorney General Amy Knedlik.

Asbury said it was doubtful that Tribunal would overturn the results of the election.

"The runoff probably would not be run again," Asbury said.

On Wednesday, Otto and Knedlik were defeated by presidential and vice presidential candidates Tim Riemann and Jennafer Neufeld.

Student Senate accepts election results, denies approval of deadline violators

BENJAMIN YODER
city/government editor

Student Senate approved election results from the general and runoff elections Thursday night.

However, senator candidates who turned in their election expenditure report after the expenditure deadline were not voted in to office.

Bill Muir, Senate faculty representative; Jason Ross, engineering senator; and Chris Avila, graduate school senator, submitted separate amendments to a bill to change election regulations and allow candidates with election violations to enter Senate but each failed.

Robin Cates, arts and sciences senator, said Senate should follow the rules they set themselves.

"Consistency had been the buzz word all year," she said. "If we're going to say these were the regulations, we should stick to them."

Cates said she was concerned about the level of commitment of these people.

"If they were truly responsible about wanting to be in this body, they would have turned in the report," she said.

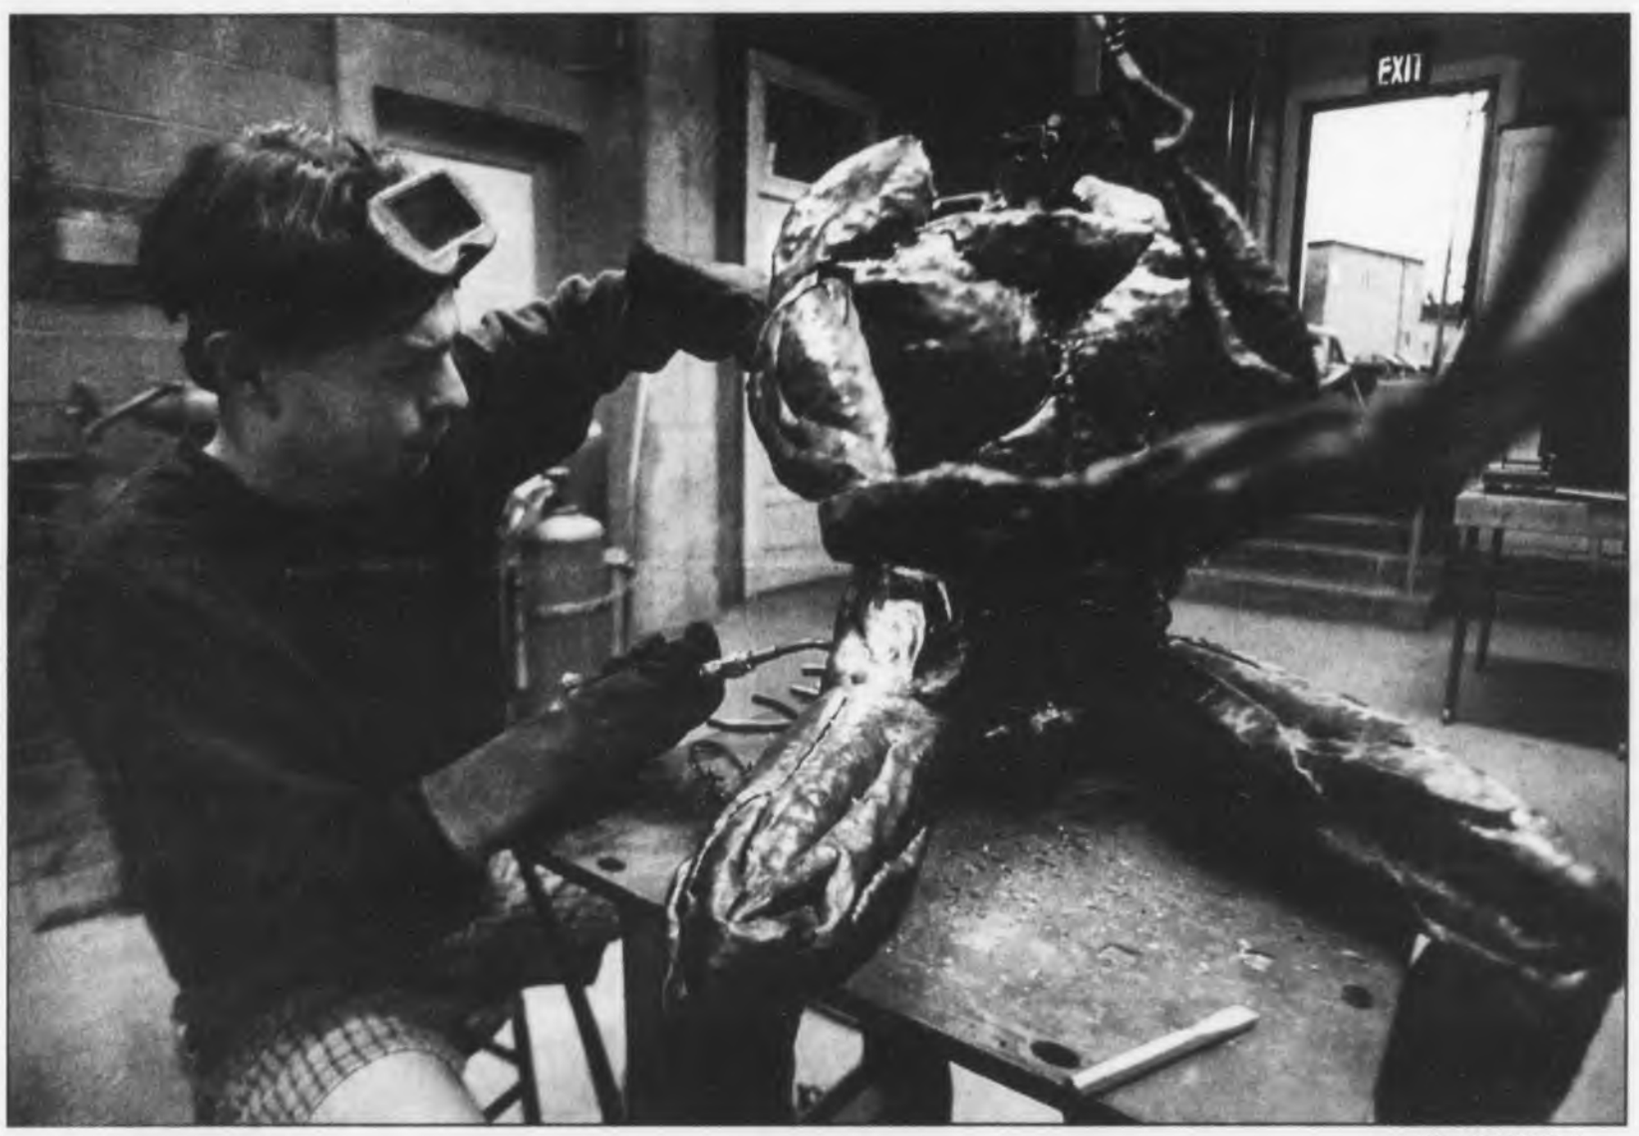
Arts and Sciences Senator Sean Tomb said if a person is caught speeding they can not tell the officer that they did not know what the speed limit was.

"Ignorance of the law is no excuse," he said.

Tomb said these candidates did not deserve to be in Senate.

"Don't seat them," Tomb said. "If they think they got screwed, let them go to Tribunal."

Tribunal is an impartial group consisting of two faculty members selected by Faculty Senate and three students selected by the student body president and the attorney general.



Senate Governmental Relations Chair Tracey Mann said senators should show compassion and have some heart.

"Your purpose is to sentence these people," he said. "Does the punishment fit the crime?"

In other business, Senate changed the number of votes needed for impeachment to two-thirds selected and qualified members instead of two-thirds of all senate seats.

Muir said the rules needed to be changed to become consistent with other legislation.

Senate also approved the ratification of an amendment to the Agricultural Student Council Constitutional to bring it in line with the Student Government Association constitution.

Sidewalks near library may open after spring break

CYNTHIA NEILL
staff reporter

Sidewalks that have been closed for several years due to library construction might be opening after spring break.

Ed Heptig, Division of Facilities, said he hopes to have some of the area open by All-University Open House on April 5.

"We're hoping to install a fence so that the north-south sidewalk on the east side of Mid Campus Drive will be open to pedestrians," Heptig said.

The parking lot north of Dickens Hall may also be opening on April 5.

"The trailers should be removed on April 4, and we hope to have the area cleaned up in time for Open House," Heptig said.

However, Mid Campus Drive will probably not open for a couple of months.

"The street will not be open to through traffic until the curb and sidewalk construction is completed, which will take most of March and April," said Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning.

Area parking lots will have the lines repainted, and the library loading dock will be paved once the curb, sidewalk and street repairs are completed.

The area east of the library has been closed since the demolition of the Art Building in August 1994. Since closing, the area has housed contractor's trailers and equipment. The closure also protected pedestrians.

"We were concerned about student, faculty and staff safety," Carter said. "We didn't want them walking through the construction area."

When Mid Campus Drive does open, the street will be as it was prior to construction.

"Traffic will go back to the old two-way, north and south directions," Heptig said.

House of Representatives pass abortion bill; Clinton threatens to repeat last year's veto

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — In a debate blending emotion and politics, the House voted by a veto-proof majority on Thursday to ban certain late-term abortions.

The 295-136 vote crossed party lines and marked the second time in as many years that the Republican-controlled Congress moved to ban partial-birth abortions except in cases in which the mother's life is in danger.

In the Senate, Majority Leader Trent Lott said he would schedule a springtime debate on the bill, but conceded support does not yet exist to override President Clinton's threatened veto.

In hours of debate on the House floor, abortion foes sought to capitalize on a recent confession by abortion-rights supporter Ron Fitzsimmons that he had lied when he said the procedure was performed rarely and only to save the mother's life or to abort malformed fetuses.

"We need to pass this bill again and give it to the president," said Rep. Gerald Solomon, R-N.Y. "Give him another chance to do the right thing because the only reason he vetoed it was because of those lies."

The White House responded with a veto threat that said the measure contains the same serious flaws as the identical bill Clinton rejected last year.

Supporters of the measure said the abortion procedure was inhumane.

"We are not dealing with the unborn child, we are dealing with the child that is partially delivered, that is in effect four-fifths born," argued Rep. Charles Canady, R-Fla., a leading sponsor of the measure.

Opponents countered that the bill threatened women with a return to the era that preceded the Supreme Court's landmark Roe v. Wade ruling of 1973 that guaranteed the right to abortion. Rep. Nita Lowey, D-N.Y., said the measure's passage would mark the first step on the trip to the back alley.

Clinton vetoed an identical bill last year in an emotional ceremony in which five women who had undergone such abortions spoke tearfully about the experience and the fetal disorders that led to their decisions. Instead, the president said, he wanted a measure that allowed the procedure to protect a mother's health.

The confession by Fitzsimmons, executive director of the National Coalition of Abortion Providers in Alexandria, Va., prompted Republicans to quickly repass the measure and send it to Clinton anew.

So intent were Republicans on repassing last year's bill that they decided Wednesday night to jettison a slightly different version that cleared the House Judiciary Committee, and substituted the old measure in its place.

"The circumstances have changed," said Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., chairman of the Judiciary Committee and an ardent abortion foe. "We don't want the bill to change. We want to say "Hey, Mr. President, we've been lied to, you've been lied to, come on, sign the bill."

In the end, 218 Republicans and 77 Democrats voted for the measure, including Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, the Democratic House leader. Opposed were eight Republicans, 127 Democrats and independent Rep. Bernard Sanders of Vermont. Supporters broke into applause on the House floor when the vote tally reached 290, the two-thirds majority needed to override a veto.

In all, five lawmakers who opposed the measure last year switched their votes: Republicans Christopher Shays of Connecticut; Rodney Frelinghuysen of New Jersey and Sue Kelly of New York; and Democrats Martin Frost of Texas and Peter Visclosky of Indiana.

Lawmakers in both parties expressed their distaste for the procedure, and abortion opponents described it repeatedly in the most minute detail to underscore its gruesomeness.

More complicated than first-trimester abortions, the operation involves partially extracting a fetus, legs first, through the birth canal, cutting an incision in the barely visible skull base and then draining the skull.

"She is four-fifths born," said Hyde, referring to the fetus. "Her tiny arms and legs squirming and struggling to live. Her skull is punctured, and the wound deliberately widened. Her brains are sucked out. The remains of the deceased are extracted."

Added Rep. Linda Smith, R-Wash., "America is too good for infanticide. Babies have to stay protected by our Constitution. If babies go first, who's next?"

Emotion shone through on the other side of the debate, as well. Rep. Steny Hoyer, D-Md., noted that he and his late wife had a family of three daughters. "And if the doctor had told me Judy will not be able to have further children if we do not perform an abortion, I would have said as much as I love my three daughters, perform that abortion."

The Republican leadership labored successfully to deny moderate Republicans and Democrats a vote on an alternative measure. It would have banned all abortions in cases in which the fetus was viable — a broader category than so-called partial birth — but would have permitted exemptions in cases in which doctors determined it was necessary to avert serious health consequences.

That angered some moderate Republicans, as well as Democrats. "This is no longer a debate about abortion," said Rep. Nancy Johnson, R-Conn. "It became simply a debate about politics."

And shortly after the vote on the House floor, Republican National Committee chairman Jim Nicholson issued a statement saying, "The president should have the moral courage to admit he was wrong and sign this measure into law."

Speech team more than doubles number of entries at nationals

DAVID FAIRBANKS
staff reporter

The K-State individual events forensics team will be making Wildcat history on April 4, when they take 64 entries to the national tournament in Arlington, Texas.

Craig Brown, individual events coach, said this year's team has more than doubled the number of entries from last year.

"We'll probably have one of the four largest entries at the tournament, which means we're hoping to finish as one of the top four teams in the nation," Brown said.

Brown said this year, as in years past, the team from Bradley University is favored to win the tournament.

"Bradley has won 17 of the last 19 national championship tournaments, so they're going to be the team to beat," Brown said.

The Wildcats are taking 19 students to compete in Arlington. Eleven of those 19 will be competing in the individual sweepstakes competition. That is also a new K-State record.

The purpose of the individual sweepstakes competition is to determine who is the best overall speaker in the nation.

To be eligible for individual sweepstakes, a student must have qualified for nationals in at least four events. The maximum number of events one can take to nationals is six.

Christina Foust, junior in speech, is a team member who has qualified in six events.

"I'm really excited about not only what I've accomplished individually, but what our team has accomplished," Foust said.

The team has competed in 26 tournaments this year. They finished in the top five at 20 tournaments and took first place at 10. Foust said she thinks the team's chances of placing at nationals are good.

"Knock on wood. I think we have a shot at finishing in the top five, if not the top three, but we're all shooting for first," Foust said.

Of the 19 students K-State is taking to Arlington, Jeni Pruitt, senior in mass communication, is the only member who has made it to the national finals.

"Since I was a freshman I've hoped to someday be a national champion. That's what I'd like to achieve, but anything can happen," Pruitt said.

Pruitt said the team's success is a result of excellent coaching

• LOCAL AUTHOR NOT EXCITED ABOUT MILLION-DOLLAR BID.

A 98-year-old Manhattan woman said the $1 million she will receive for her handwritten memoirs doesn't affect her.

Foveaux

"As far as I'm concerned, I can't seem to get excited about it," Jessie Foveaux said. "Money don't seem to impress me like it does others."

Jessie Foveaux accepted the bid from Warner Books on Wednesday for the rights to her life story, "The Life of Jessie Lee Brown, From Birth Up to 80 Years."

The story became the subject of a bidding war between publishing companies after Jessie Foveaux was profiled in the Wall Street Journal March 14.

Jessie Foveaux will help edit the book, which includes changing the title, Marion, Foveaux's son, said.

"She will be involved in any changes that need to be made," Marion Foveaux said. "But there really is very little to do."

The book will be published in the fall, and it is also being considered for use as a mini-series or a movie, Marion Foveaux said.

Jessie Foveaux said she is satisfied where she is right now.

"I don't care for the glitter of things. I'm just happy as a clam right here," she said.

• CAPTAIN ENTERS PLEAS IN ARMY SEX SCANDAL.

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. — The highest-ranking officer accused in the Aberdeen Army sex scandal pleaded guilty today to adultery, consensual sodomy and other charges for having sex with a female trainee he instructed.

Capt. Derrick Robertson, 31, pleaded innocent to more serious charges of rape, indecent assault and obstruction of justice.

Under questioning from a military judge, Robertson said he had sexual intercourse with the woman at his home Sept. 14, 1996.

He was her company commander at the time.

Robertson said the woman, a private, had come to him for advice earlier that month after she had consensual sex with another instructor at the Ordnance Center and School at Aberdeen Proving Ground.

When she came to his office a second time on Sept. 7, they ended up kissing and he fondled her, Robertson said.

He also pleaded guilty to two counts of conduct unbecoming an officer and one count of failing to obey a lawful general order.

• CASE AGAINST FORMER NAVY ANALYST RAISED TO ESPIONAGE.

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — A former Navy intelligence analyst who was accused of passing classified documents to his native South Korea was indicted on more serious charges of spying.

A federal grand jury returned the indictment Wednesday charging Robert C. Kim with espionage, which could result in a life sentence and a $250,000 fine. Kim was arrested in September for allegedly passing out classified U.S. secrets.

Kim, 57, of Sterling, became a U.S. citizen in 1974 and was a civilian employee with the Office of Naval Intelligence before his arrest.

Prosecutors claim he gave seven documents related to national defense to a South Korean navy captain who was an attache at the Korean Embassy.

They said they have no evidence Kim accepted money from South Korean officials. Arraignment was set for March 31.

State Senate committee endorses informed-consent abortion bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — In what some pro-life activists consider a setback, a Senate committee on Thursday endorsed Gov. Bill Graves' version of an informed-consent measure.

The State and Federal Affairs Committee weakened a measure passed by the House that would have required physicians to provide certain information to women who want abortions.

"I'm disappointed," Jeanne Gawdun, lobbyist for Kansans for Life, said. "The governor is not interested in protecting women. He's interested in protecting abortionists."

The committee amended the woman's-right-to-know bill to allow a woman to waive a requirement that she have a face-to-face meeting with a doctor before having an abortion.

"Both sides of the issue probably aren't happy," Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, said. "Sometimes that makes good legislation."

The bill faces an uncertain future in the Senate.

The committee's action came the day after pro-life legislators in the House, in a parliamentary maneuver, amended the stricter version of the informed-consent measure onto another bill called the Patient Protection Act.

The House voted 80-42 Thursday to pass that bill, sending it to the Senate.

The Senate committee also amended a measure that would have banned all partial-birth abortions except to preserve the life of the mother. The committee endorsed an amended version that would allow such abortions only if the mother's life is in danger.

Sen. Sherman Jones, D-Kansas City, said a provision allowing partial-birth abortions to preserve the health of the mother should be included in the bill.

"If the health of the mother is in danger by the pregnancy, that would have been established long ago," Sen. Laurie Bleeker, R-Hays, said.

"When you said health, it could be a situation that could put the woman in jeopardy of dying, but not necessarily," Jones said.

Graves' woman's-right-to-know measure would require a doctor to meet with the patient at least eight hours before the procedure, where she would be provided with pregnancy and counseling information.

The woman would be able to forgo the meeting, however, and written information would be sent to her.

"She can waive that right," Clyde Graeber, an aide to Graves, said. "At the same time, it protects the woman's right to know."

Sen. Nancey Harrington, R-Clearwater, said she is concerned that a woman could be coerced by a husband or boyfriend into having an abortion.

"If that keeps her from having a face-to-face meeting, she wouldn't be truly informed," she said.

combined with dedicated students who got off to an early start. The team usually starts off slow and progresses throughout the year, but this year they began a week before school started, Pruitt said.

"While most students were catching the last few rays at the pool, we were working day and night on our events," Pruitt said.

After an 11th place finish last year, the team has high hopes for this year's 20th annual national tournament, Pruitt said.

"This year we have something to prove. We want to be one of the top five teams in the nation again."

Give these candidates some kudos for effort

Thanks are in order to all candidates for what was essentially a clean campaign for president and vice president.

Congratulations are also in order to president elect Tim Riemann and vice president elect Jennafer Neufeld.

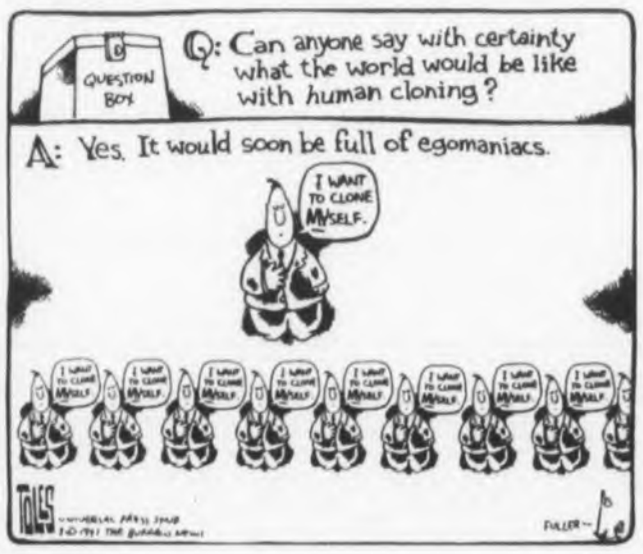
Condolences are also in order to presidential candidate Aaron Otto and vice presidential candidate Amy Knedlik for their campaign effort.

Both sets of candidates kept their campaigns positive and encouraged students to get involved on campus and to vote.

Now that Student Governing Association elections are over, we encourage Riemann and Neufeld to stick to their platform and to listen to student needs.

During the campaign, Riemann and Neufeld promised to work toward implementing a plus grading system on campus, help establish a special grant through the state legislature to help with student's tuition, and a system of teacher evaluations modeled after a program at the University of Chicago.

Students should hold the new president and vice president to their campaign promises. It's unfortunate that such a small percentage of the campus voted in the election, but these offices are still essential to the campus. Riemann and Neufeld deserve all the input and support they can get from the student body.



Contact Riemann at (timr@ksu.edu) and Neufeld at (jennafe@ksu.edu). They can also be reached at the Office of Student Activities and Services at 532-6541.

Small-scale spring break getaways relax stressed-out students

VIEWPOINT

KEN WELLS

KEN WELLS is a graduate student in theatre. You can e-mail comments to Ken at (sigma7@ksu.edu).

First off, let me congratulate you.

By virtue of hanging around campus and reading these words, you've shown a great deal of self-restraint. There's an almost palpable temptation to run screaming for the border (any border) to start the never-ending revelry of spring break early. But by staying put and going to campus today, you're putting faith in your coworkers, colleagues, fellow students or what have you.

Admit it, they tied you down, didn't they?

If, after getting your daily dose of the newspaper and whatever else brought you to campus, you hit the afterburners and go blazing toward some exotic far-away destination (Palm Beach, Albuquerque, Thunder Bay), have a good time and give the locals hell for me.

On the other hand, if you are anchored by studies or projects or other responsibilities to the local area for the duration of break, well, it isn't a completely lost cause.

There are still some diversions around these parts that don't gobble the pocketbook and are more entertaining than being stuck in an airport terminal with a few thousand of your closest friends.

If you have the slightest interest in the stars or the tools used to get there, you need to visit the Kansas Cosmosphere and Space Center in Hutchinson. OK, OK, it's a drive from Manhattan, but it's worth every minute.

The new displays of the history of rocketry take the viewer back to the early 20th century. They dramatically unfold the events winding through Nazi Germany and splitting into distinctly American and Soviet threads, chronicling the triumphs and tragedies of the age.

The exhibits of Soviet re-entry vehicles are amazing, as is the ongoing restoration of the original Apollo 13 command module.

Take in a movie in the IMAX theater in nausea-inducing enormity, or play it safe and feel the contours of the SR-71 aircraft in the lobby (stare down its nose and pretend that you don't feel intimidated).

If you're short of gas and are packing an appetite, head up to Riley and dine at the Calico Inn. Right in the heart of town you'll find an out-of-the-way eatery which, in exchange for some patience, will give you a large, delicious meal.

Be prepared to wait as this quaint eating establishment isn't much on capacity or cooking speed, but it more than makes up for it in atmosphere and serving size. For about as much as will buy a Long John McWendy's Mondo Value Meal, you can pick up an Innkeeper Special, a plate that surrounds the diner in french fries and a hamburger the size of an import car.

It's not eating at home, but it's the next best thing. It's a good date establishment, though if there's only two in your party, you might end up sharing a table. Have your social skills sharpened. The Calico Inn is this area's antidote to fast franchise food.

If you're out of money or your car has exploded, there's still a fun place to frolic in Manhattan during break — the Tuttle Creek spillway.

Even if you're not into geology (and I'm certainly not), you'll get a kick staring at the gaping holes eaten into the rock by rushing water. It's a great Frisbee ground (just watch your step) or picnic place with enough crazy rock piles to make a mountain goat with suction cups nervous.

If you want, feel free to use the "I'm getting back to nature" excuse. Hang out for a bit on a nice, clear, warm day and enjoy yourself. Allow yourself to use spring break for (dare I say it?) relaxing. Nobody else on this campus is going to cut you some slack if you don't.

Should you hear the roar of oncoming water, though, run for the nearest bank.

If, like me, you don't have a spring break agenda, at least take the time to catch up on all the sleep you've missed so far. Then get constructive.

JEFF CHAN

JEFF CHAN is a graduate student in English. You can e-mail comments to Jeff at (defcon1@ksu.edu).

Don't tell me St. Patrick was all that saintly. Don't you think he had to be on something or other when he decided to drive all the snakes out of Ireland?

They say that if you can remember the 1960s, you must not have been there. The same must hold true for holidays such as St. Patrick's Day.

I'm not sure what kind of blarney concoction I had before me this weekend, but I can tell you that I was certainly surprised when I checked my e-mail Monday afternoon.

This message was sitting last in the Sent Mail file. It's addressed to Dr. Ian Wilmut, one of the Scottish scientists who cloned that sheep last month:

"Dear Dr. Wilmut,

"Greetings to you and your colleagues from across the ocean, and all that. First of all, congratulations on that cloning thing. It's been in all the papers here. I hope you enjoyed your 15 minutes ... how is the Pope? Happy Saint Patrick's Day, or do you Scots celebrate that?

"Some friends and I were wondering: Is Dolly the name of the original sheep, too? And, why is it that when it rains on a sheep, it doesn't shrink? My friends have this crazy idea that you and George Lucas are in cahoots, and that he isn't really going to make the long-awaited 'Star Wars' movie chronicling the Clone Wars. Rather, the next 20 years or so of our history will comprise the prequel.

"You'll have to forgive my friends and I, Dr. Wilmut ... or can I call you Mr. Scott? We're from Kansas and are in college.

"To business: Keeping in mind the age-old adage 'if it's not Scottish, it's crap,' I have a proposal to make. If executed correctly, with the proper stealth and secrecy, you and I could stand to make a lot of money. First, a little background.

"Years ago a good friend of mine cleaned rooms at a swank hotel in Topeka, the capital of Kansas. Many famous people, from actors to rock stars to genetic scientists, stayed at this hotel. One week my friend found herself cleaning up after Wil Wheaton, "Star Trek: The Next Generation's" Wesley Crusher. You know, the annoying twerp who ends up saving the galaxy all the time?

"Well, I managed to talk her into saving some of Wil's hair she found in the sink, thinking that it might turn into a galaxy of an investment some day. Foolish at the time, perhaps, but look how the times have caught up with me.

"The proposal: my investment, your investment, together at last. We could create a virtual army of Wil Wheatons, each one better than the last. But why, you ask?

"Star Trek conventions, my friend, Star Trek conventions. I know you have Trekkies in Scotland; yours is a civilized nation, after all.

Wouldn't you want your very own Wil Wheaton clone, in full Star Fleet uniform, to show off to all your Trekkie buddies, or perhaps to taunt and scorn publicly whenever you wish? I can simply smell the dollars (or pounds in your case).

"Please consider this proposal. I had considered contacting your colleagues in Oregon, knowing full well that a rhesus monkey could kick a sheep's ass any day, but I'm still not totally convinced that buying American is always buying quality.

"Doctor, there is more to this proposal, but I wish to discuss the rest with you in person. Suffice it to say, the gross income available to us from this venture would be more than enough, I believe, to fund my plans for universal domination via nanotechnology.

"At this very moment, classified files concerned with micro-technology and subatomic propulsion are being downloaded to me over that Internet thingie by Rebel spies.

"Soon, I will rule the galaxy from my own basement den and TV room. And, anyone brave enough to aid me will certainly reap their reward come the New Order.

Yours sincerely, Jeff (The Wrath of) Chan."

Surprising, you say? Indicative of mental states unconcerned with sobriety, you say?

Perhaps. But the real kicker is this: although addressed to Dr. Wilmut, this message was sent to the National Endowment for the Arts.

I know. I got a call from them yesterday.

I've been awarded a grant for $20,000.

Have a great, safe spring break, everyone, wherever you go. I'll be in New Orleans, hunting down ancient voodoo formulas in order to cure the human race after Comet Hale-Bopp transforms all unprotected citizens into rampaging zombies.

Then, I'll be conferring with Professor Frank Tipler at Tulane, the same physicist who brought you scientific proof of God, on his theory of using rotating black holes for time machines.

Maybe he can send me to a time prior to the writing of this column — to a quieter, happier time, at least.

BRANDON FITZSIMONS, senior in mass communications, lead guitarist and backing vocalist for the band Derailer, entertains a crowd at Bombers.

Derailer finds the right track with live music

REVIEW BY PHIL KELLUM

Picture a train leaving its tracks unintentionally, leaving mass carnage and disaster in its wake.

That is close to what local Manhattan and Lawrence band Derailer sounds like.

Music Review

"We're more droning than grindcore," Allen LeRoy France, drummer, said. "I'd call it death-punk."

Derailer was formed from the ashes of Lawrence punk band Downtrodden after the band broke up two years ago.

Brandon Fitzsimons, senior in mass communications and lead guitarist/backing vocalist; Eric Salsbury, bassist; and vocalist "Laughing Boy" Bill Thrower were the three members of Downtrodden who formed Derailer with France and rhythm guitarist B.J. West.

They formed the band after France moved to Lawrence from Indiana. They all jammed together one day and decided to form the band.

"It was all me. I was like, 'You guys are lazy. Get off your ass, and let's play some music!'" France said.

Whereas Downtrodden openly expressed political statements in the lyrics of its songs, Derailer chooses not to do that.

"You're basically preaching to the converted anyway, or if they're not converted, they're not going to convert," West said.

Fitzsimons and Thrower write the lyrics.

"They're mostly sociopolitical. There's some about being strung out and how much we like having fun. It's a good mixture of everything," Thrower said.

Fitzsimons travels to Lawrence every weekend to practice and play gigs.

"Compared to previous bands, our politics aren't as open with this. We don't talk about what this song is about between each song," Fitzsimons said. "We've gone more to a personal level, relating politics, and the way life works on a personal level, rather than basically shouting, 'Change the system! Stop this, stop that!'

"Like some of our songs are taking a look at the way our society works, and how we disagree with it, while other songs, like one of them I wrote, is just a love song, about your emotions and your feelings. Things everybody deals with," Fitzsimons said.

Fitzsimons and the rest of the band had difficulty describing Derailer's overall sound.

"It's punk rock, but if you notice in the punk rock and the ska-punk movement, it's becoming very commercialized, like with MTV and everything and the whole fashion sense of it. So I think the underground scenes are offering more space for grind bands, like I guess we can call us, to breed," Fitzsimons said.

Derailer gains influences from the heavier and more political side of punk rock.

They count bands like Buzzov*en, Neurosis, The Melvins, Eyehategod, Doom, Logical Nonsense and the Crass Records bands as major influences to their sound and lyrics.

"Logical Nonsense. Now that's a big one," Fitzsimons said. "We got to play with them, and that was just like a dream come true to play with them in Omaha. That was amazing. They're probably one of our biggest influences, because they write lyrics on the same level."

Derailer's live show is nothing short of intense, with Fitzsimons' and Thrower's insane vocals along with the pounding, grinding beat.

"If people get into it and have a good time, and just get into it on the mental scope that we are, because when we're playing, we get into it a whole lot, and we like to project that into the audience," Fitzsimons said.

Derailer wants to move into making their live shows something phenomenal, like Neurosis or Crash Worship's live shows.

"We want to get more into audience participation, and just taking it onto a different thing than just a band playing. We want to grow into maybe like an experience. Neurosis was just an amazing show. They learned to take it beyond playing music.

"We want people to be able to feel our frustration, which the music is all about, is our frustrations, personal or political," Fitzsimons said.

They have played places from Lawrence and Manhattan to Ft. Collins, Colo. and Omaha, Neb.

"Ft. Collins, Colo. was the funniest show ever, with Jiffy Boy," Fitzsimons said.

The band members are planning on a three-week tour of the Midwest in late summer.

Derailer and Manhattan punk band Jiffy Boy are hoping to release a split 7-inch single in the next few months.

And the winner is ...

Picking the Academy Award winners

Hey, Vern, them there Oscars is on Monday on the picture box.

Despite the Associated Press writing on March 18 about movie-starved Manhattan as having "hardly changed since the 1880s" and portraying its citizens as all Tom Arnold fans, there are people in this town who have seen all of the films nominated for Oscars.

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You can e-mail comments to Russell at (rmf@ksu.edu).

Manhattan may lack the 22-plex, corporate coziness of New York City, but if that is a trade-off for high crime, high property rates and a bleak cityscape, that is ok, too.

Local audiences have been given an almost unprecedented opportunity (for the Little Apple) to see all of the Best Picture nominees and most of the others. Try that in Hays.

Without further ado, my picks for Monday night's 69th Annual Academy Awards broadcast:

BEST PICTURE

Nominated: "The English Patient," "Secrets and Lies," "Jerry Maguire," "Shine," and "Fargo."

What will win: "The English Patient" because the Academy just loves big romantic epics loosely-based on history. Besides, this is an excellent film.

What should win: The most original, thought-provoking and honest movie to come along in some time "Fargo," would be a daring move on the part of the Academy. This brilliant murder-thriller is dark and dangerous, everything a long shot should be. Take another look at the movie on video this weekend. You will be surprised.

BEST DIRECTOR

Nominated: Milos Forman, "The People Vs. Larry Flynt;" Mike Leigh, "Secrets and Lies;" Joel Coen, "Fargo;" Anthony Minghella, "The English Patient;" and Scott Hicks, "Shine."

Who will win: This is a hard category since there are so many good contenders, but the Academy will conceivably follow the best picture nods with a nod to Minghella for "The English Patient."

Who should win: Coen did not pad "Fargo" with some token arty scenes like others in this category, but created a dark, stylistic mystery that is coldly real.

BEST ACTOR

Nominated: Woody Harrelson, "The People Vs. Larry Flynt;" Geoffrey Rush, "Shine;" Ralph Fiennes, "The English Patient;" Billy Bob Thornton, "Sling Blade;" and Tom Cruise, "Jerry Maguire."

Who will win: The Academy will probably divide themselves between Cruise and Rush — so it depends on how much they will give to the independents. A win for Cruise might be the only chance Hollywood will have to pat itself on the back, but Rush's performance has won raves.

Who should win: Thornton's self-directed, mentally slow portrayal of a killer is a rare touching performance — and at the other end of the spectrum from Tom Hanks' syrupy Forrest Gump. "Sling Blade" is a truly American film and it is too bad it has not played Manhattan (drive to Kansas City).

BEST ACTRESS

Nominated: Brenda Blethyn, "Secrets and Lies;" Frances McDormand, "Fargo;" Kristin Scott Thomas, "The English Patient;" Emily Watson, "Breaking the Waves;" and Diane Keaton, "Marvin's Room."

Who will win: Handicappers are predicting a win for Blethyn's emotionally-charged performance, but the Academy might find itself taken with McDormand's performance as the pregnant police chief Margie, who was unquestionably the best of the year.

Who should win: McDormand's accent alone could win her this award since most actresses shrivel and die when approaching this delicate art.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR

Nominated: Cuba Gooding, Jr., "Jerry Maguire;" Armin Mueller-Stahl, "Shine;" Edward Norton, "Primal Fear;" William H. Macy, "Fargo;" and James Woods, "Ghosts of Mississippi."

Who will win: The Academy has wrestled with itself over awarding Oscars to African-Americans, so Gooding, Jr. has a deserved chance for winning. The Academy will no doubt remember his performance in "Boyz in the Hood," which was excellent and overlooked.

Who should win: Brilliant acting is the capability of recasting yourself so thoroughly to be almost unrecognizable, as in the case of William H. Macy. His Jerry Lundegaard was crazy, helpless, self-defeating, stupid and mesmerizing.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

Nominated: Juliet Binoche, "The English Patient;" Lauren Bacall, "The Mirror Has Two Faces;" Barbara Hershey, "Portrait of a Lady;" Marianne Jean-Baptiste, "Secrets and Lies;" and Joan Allen, "The Crucible."

Who will win: After more than 50 years in the business and such classics as "The Big Sleep" and "To Have and Have Not" behind her, the never-nominated Bacall will easily sweep this Oscar with her brassy performance as mother-in-law to Barbra Streisand.

Who should win: A Best Supporting nod to Bacall almost seems like a slap-in-the-face because she deserves more. However, her turn in this entertaining movie was spirited and worth the Oscar.

WASTE NOT

The Associated Press uncovered several military construction projects that continued to be fully funded by the Pentagon long after the facilities on which they are housed had been designated for permanent closing. Included were a $5 million Navy chapel in San Diego, a $3 million Army classroom building near Chicago, a $13 million Navy dining hall in Orlando, and a $5 million Air Force fire station and training facility in Indianapolis.

"[The taxpayers] are going to have to pay for it anyway, so why not complete [it]?" said a Navy spokesman in San Diego.

KU's Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity faces suspension for financial problems, hazing activities

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — The charter of a fraternity chapter at the University of Kansas has been suspended for hazing activities and financial problems, officials said.

The board of directors for Pi Kappa Alpha announced the suspension Tuesday.

Kevin Virta, executive director of the fraternity in Memphis, Tenn., said the chapter could be reorganized if conditions set by the international fraternity are met.

"While the fraternity cannot tolerate the recent actions of the chapter, we owe it to these alumni to do everything within our power and resources to help resurrect this chapter," Virta said.

"It is uncertain if that rebuilding process will begin in the near future or at a later date," he said.

Pi Kappa Alpha President Todd Guerrieri said a lengthy suspension could have a chilling effect — causing members to drift away and exacerbating the financial problems.

University officials said the Pike house would remain under interim suspension by the university pending outcome of disciplinary proceedings, which could come in early April.

The Pike house came under investigation after a 19-year-old pledge was taken to a local hospital intoxicated and unconscious Feb. 26.

Virta said pledges were served alcohol by the chapter.

A formal complaint against the chapter has been filed with the University. Officials declined to say who filed the complaint.

The chapter waived its right to a formal hearing and agreed to accept responsibility for allegations in the complaint.

In the past 18 months, four KU fraternities have been disciplined for hazing-related activities.

Prominent Pi Kappa Alpha alumni include U.S. Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., ABC News commentator Ted Koppel and actor Fess Parker. The Pike chapter at KU was formed in 1914.

Pi Kappa Alpha was the first international fraternity to ban hazing. The fraternity has 200 chapters in the United States and Canada.

Registered Riley County voters can cast their ballots before April

BENJAMIN YODER
city/government editor

Riley County is offering an advance voting service for the April 1 elections.

Jolene Campbell, deputy to the county clerk, said registered Riley County voters can come to the county office at 110 Court House Plaza between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m until March 28 to vote.

The office will also be open from 8 a.m. until noon March 29 for all voters and March 31 for disabled and homebound voters.

"We have advance voting going on right now," she said.

Campbell said about 150 people have already voted, and there are 60 to 70 permanent advance voters.

"We do have some good participation in our advance voting," Campbell said.

People who live in Manhattan but are registered in another county can still vote in their county elections, Campbell said. Applications are available in the county clerk's office at 110 Court House Plaza.

"The request has to be in the home county by March 28," she said.

The candidates for the three Manhattan City Commission seats are Breta Bloomberg-Ellis, Ed Klimek, Karen McCulloh, Mary Nichols, Roger Reitz and Edith Stunkel.

The candidates for the three U.S.D 383 school board seats are Sue Boxer, Beverly Eversmeyer, Mike Penrod, Flordie Pettis and Meryl Wilson.

Writer admits closet addiction to KU's winning basketball team

The following is an excerpt from one of my 12-step Big 12 addiction sessions. I am on the eighth step to rid myself of a horrible affliction called — gasp — Jayhawk Appreciation. The following is all true, of course.

"Hi, my name is Tara and I'm addicted to KU basketball," I announced.

In unison: "Hi, Tara."

"Tara, can you tell us how you got here?" the group leader asked.

"Well," I said through tears, "it all started around last Christmas. I was watching K-State play and ... I just couldn't watch anymore. It was too painful. I had to change the channel, and when I did, that's when it happened. I'm so ashamed," I said, hiding my head in my hands.

VIEWPOINT

TARA WRAY

TARA WRAY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Tara at (twray@ksu.edu).

"It's OK, Tara. We're here to help you get better. But before that happens, you have to learn to help yourself."

That may be easier said than done. I cannot seem to shake this addiction, as it goes deeper than an aversion to air balls and bricked shots. I do not know where it stems from. All I know is I wish I could cut the chains that bind.

I have this desire for winning that seems to supersede all other things in life. And frankly, I do not care what team I have to watch to get my fix. That is part of what got me in trouble in the first place.

The team that seems to curb my cravings is, sadly, that other school down the road. I admit it, I like to watch KU basketball. It is true, I go both ways. I am coming out to the world to let you know I like both KU and K-State athletics.

Unless of course we are talking football. In that case, I would rather chew chards of glass than root for the Hawks. But if we are talking basketball, I shamefully call myself a closet KU fan.

It used to be that I would hide my painful secret. I was stuck leading a double life: K-State student by day, KU basketball fan by night.

At my lowest point, I was watching KU play in grimy Sears showrooms. Rock bottom came when, sniff, my 70-year-old grandma caught me chanting "Rock, Chalk, Jayhawk—KU" while watching a game. Her tears that day forced me to find help.

I think, and my group leader agrees, this March Madness silliness is one of the major blocks I am going to have to hurdle on my way to recovery.

Come tipoff Friday night at 6:55 p.m., I will force myself to find something else to be doing. My dog, Woofer, needs a bath and I need to have that filling removed, so I am sure I will be plenty busy.

Despite all my work to get over this addiction, I still have a fondness for winners, and KU is simply that. They chew up and spit out opponents like cheap ball park chili dogs. They are like a car accident: I know I shouldn't stare, but I just cannot look away.

One thing I have learned in my Big 12 program is to see beyond the Jayhawks' powerful front court and All-American ways. In fact, in order to help myself, I am supposed to picture failure for the Hawks. I have yet to try that one. My group leader would say now is as good a time as any. So, here goes.

Jacque Vaughn: For you I see a four for 25 day. No double-doubles for you, pal. No sirree Bob, after a dismal first half you will take a seat for arguing with a referee. You will sit for the remainder of KU's final 1997 NCAA game.

Raef LaFrentz: Mr. All Important all-American, I can picture you, during your goofy gangly trot down the court, tripping on a shoe lace and getting an irreversible case of turf toe. No more game for you. You will sit.

As for Scot Pollard: You will be on the floor painting your nails with the rest of the cheerleaders. Due to a freak lamb chop shaving incident, you will not even suit up. You will be busy painting on new chops with a Sharpie.

With those guys gone, I see KU in a different light. They look a lot like your average basketball team. They look a little like K-State.

Wow, I am starting to feel better. KU is not the almighty impenetrable basketball giants I once revered them as. I can see their faults. My group leader would be proud. I am beginning to see them for what they are.

"I will not watch the game," I told my sponsor. "I don't even know who KU is going to beat ... Oh God, I am sorry! Slight relapse ... I don't even know who KU is going to play," I said. "Frankly, I don't care."

As with anything, admitting you have a problem is the first step to recovery. I urge all you other closet KU fans to face your affliction and overcome it.

It will take a while to get better, but with Willie the Wildcat as my witness, it will happen.

Women's rowing team to compete in regatta during break

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

It is no doubt that rowing has been around college campuses longer than any other sport, including baseball and football, but the sport has somewhat died out as football and other sports have become more predominant.

Recently rowing has been dubbed an official NCAA Division 1 sport on the women's side.

Along with the national resurgence, there has been a resurgence at K-State. After holding club status last semester, the rowing team is now an official varsity sport at K-State (the men's rowing team is still considered a club sport). In the fall of 1997, 20 scholarships will be awarded, which is the number allotted for the rowers.

In recent months, Coach Jenny Hale has acquired 39 athletes and formed what she calls a novice rowing team.

"Every year we generate enough people to form a novice team," Hale said. "We first teach them the basics like how to sit and how to row the boat, and essentially what we have is a novice team."

Even so, the rowing team is not entirely compiled of inexperienced rowers. Hale said there were a few athletes who were a part of the club team who carried over to the varsity team.

"They have been very helpful," Hale said of the club sport participants. "They've had to top up in terms of time commitment and experience."

Hale said the hardest part to teach the newcomers was the proper breathing technique. She said when the body has to endure a seven to eight minute race at such a high heartrate, it causes the body to go into oxygen debt.

"The physiological side of the sport is so incredible," Hale said. "Not only that, but it is extremely painful at times, especially if you're not used to the workouts. What we try to do, though, is raise the level of lactic acid and try to build up the muscles."

Hale said in practice that she and assistant coach Debra Morgan, try to develop the skill level of most of the rowers to where they can progress from that novice level to the varsity level.

"Our skill acquisition is the most important thing right now, and we are really concentrating on getting our fundamentals down," Hale said. "It's like a tight game of basketball. When you have a tight race, you always get better and better."

The K-State rowing team has its second regatta of the year this Saturday and Sunday in Waco, Texas, against Baylor. However, right now the lake in Waco is too high and because of that all the water is being let out of the reservoir.

If the boats are not able to compete on the lake by Friday morning, the teams will row in Austin instead.

TODD FEREDAY safely slides into first base during K-State's game against Chicago State Thursday. The Wildcats won the game 12-7, moving them to 15-6 this season.

Wildcats add to best season record, emerge unscathed from 2-game

Chicago State came into town to tangle K-State on Wednesday and Thursday and paid the price.

The Cougars came into the series without a single win in 10 tries. Would luck change for Chicago State in this series?

Nah!

The Wildcats blasted the Cougars late into the night on Wednesday, 26-2, before finishing off the two-game series Thursday with a 12-7 victory.

Although the Cats offense punished the Cougar pitching, head coach Mike Clark was unhappy with his team's effort on Thursday.

"I didn't think we played that well," he said. "We kind of went through the motions. We relaxed too much after last night."

While the offense on Thursday remained at a high level, knocking in 12 runs on 17 hits, the pitching and fielding, which were dominant in Wednesday's game, struggled Thursday.

"We made some mental errors," said senior shortstop Heath Schesser. "That sometimes happens after a game like last night."

Pat Hertzel got the start Thursday, going five innings, allowing three runs on four hits, while striking out five and walking none.

"Pat threw well as did Brian Thompson," Clark said. "We didn't want to pitch him past the fifth inning because we might need him for this weekend."

K-State jumped out to an early 7-0 lead, but fielding problems, hit batters and walks soon turned a possible blowout into an 8-3 contest when Casey Cook came on in relief in the sixth inning and loaded the bases.

The Cats escaped unscathed, however, after a popout and an inning double play ended the threat from Chicago State.

Eric Sommerhauser went 3-4, with a double, scoring three times while driving in one.

Schesser went 2-4 with a double and Scott Poepard snared his team leading 12th double and two RBIs.

Wednesday's game was a blowout from the start as the Cats scored eight times in the second inning to give senior pitcher Eric Yanz a 10-run lead, as he threw six innings, allowing one run on four hits.

Poepard was 4-6 with four runs and three RBIs, pounding out two doubles and his sixth home run of the season, which ties him with Schesser for the team lead.

The Wildcats took flight after the game for Austin, Texas, where they plan to make a statement to the 21st ranked Longhorns of Texas University.

Texas is in a bit of a slump, losing four of their last five, and comes home looking to make up some ground in the Big 12.

They sit at 18-8 overall and 2-4 in the conference.

K-State, now at 15-6 overall, is playing its best baseball of the season and looks to improve on a 1-5 Big 12 record.

One note from this series is the match up at shortstop.

The preseason all-America pick for short stop is Kip Harkrider from Texas. He is batting .389 with two home runs and 27 RBI's.

Schesser is currently sixth in the Big 12 in batting average at .438 and has six home runs and 37 RBI's.

Schesser, however, is not looking to try and upstage his opponent this weekend.

"I can't wait to get down there," he said. "As long as we win, I don't care.

Boxer arrested on suspicion of driving under influence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT SCOTT — Boxer Tommy Morrison was arrested early Thursday on suspicion of driving under the influence of alcohol and violating the terms of a suspended sentence for carrying a loaded handgun.

He said he had been speaking to a group of high-school students about HIV and AIDS the day before.

"It was a great, great speech that day," Morrison told the Associated Press Thursday evening. "Here I am teaching about responsibility and then I pull something stupid like that. It kind of makes me feel uncomfortable."

Morrison, of Jay, Okla., said that after he spoke to students at Appleton City High School in Missouri, he ate at a friend's house and had a few glasses of wine with dinner.

Morrison was pulled over about 3 a.m. for driving 52 mph in a 30 mph zone, said Police Chief Larry Dixon. Morrison was the only person in the pickup truck near downtown Fort Scott, which is in southeast Kansas near the Missouri border.

"The officer originally observed the vehicle, with radar, speeding," Dixon said. "It weaved across the center line a couple of times and weaved back."

Dixon said the alcohol level in Morrison's blood was 0.16. The legal limit in Kansas is 0.08.

Morrison, who is HIV-positive, said the speech at the high school was about HIV and AIDS and getting those kids starting in the right direction.

"I had three or four drinks and got pulled over driving home. It was one of those things. It was stupid. I hadn't (driven after drinking alcohol) in five years and it was just one of those things. As an athlete, you just can't be perfect all the time."

The 28-year-old fighter pleaded guilty Oct. 28 in Delaware County, Okla., to transporting a loaded firearm. Morrison, who has lived and trained in Kansas City, received a six-month suspended sentence and a $100 fine in that case.

He also was ordered to spend 30 hours of community service talking to schoolchildren about AIDS.

That sentence was to run concurrently with a plea bargain in March, when he pleaded no contest to two counts of assault and battery against a Delaware County woman.

Thursday's arrest is a violation of Morrison's suspended sentence, said Loretta Kirby, a secretary for the Delaware County District Attorney's office. Kirby said prosecuting attorneys would file a motion to revoke the suspension once the office is formerly notified.

Morrison returned to boxing in September after retiring in February 1996, just days after learning he was infected with the AIDS-causing virus.

His retirement announcement was followed by a flurry of new HIV testing regulations by U.S. state licensing boards and a ban on fighters found to be carrying the virus.

Morrison said he decided to return to pro boxing once he became certain the disease could not be spread in the ring.

He also said he wanted to raise money and awareness to fight AIDS.

He knocked out Marcus Rhode in the first round of a fight in Japan in November and donated his estimated $500,000 winnings to an AIDS charity.

Morrison said Thursday he is training a female boxer, and involved in color commentary for various boxing matches.

"Everything's going good and going in the right direction. I'm staying healthy, and that's why it's so annoying for something like this (to happen)," he said.

Morrison was booked into Bourbon County Jail on the DUI accusation and released a few hours later. His arraignment in municipal court is April 17.

"He was very cooperative," Dixon said.

THE OKLAHOMA CITY BOMBING
THE TRIAL TO HEAL THE HEARTLAND

(THE VICTIMS)

During the one-year anniversary last year, three child-care facilitators, who wished to remain unidentified, reflect after reading an inscription beneath a photo of a 10-month-old who died in the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing.

Finally, a beginning

Almost 2 years have passed as a nation waits for the Oklahoma City Bombing trial to start. Today, jury selection begins in Denver.

DENVER — In a barricaded courthouse, Timothy McVeigh goes on trial Monday on charges that he triggered the Oklahoma City bombing, a terrorist act that robbed hundreds of people of their lives and cost the United States its sense of security.

McVeigh, who went from model soldier to, authorities say, a hateful, paranoid man living on the fringe of the fringe, is charged with murder and conspiracy and faces the death penalty if convicted for the April 19, 1995, explosion that killed 168 people and wounded hundreds more.

The trial opens with the search for 12 jurors and six alternates who can assure they will be fair and willing, if necessary, to recommend death by injection for McVeigh.

Jury selection is expected to last at least two weeks, followed by opening statements. McVeigh's lawyers lost three attempts last week to delay the start of the trial.

The drama will be played out in U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch's newly renovated second-floor courtroom, which has been outfitted with a hidden, remote closed-circuit camera so survivors and relatives of bombing victims can watch the trial in Oklahoma City.

Concrete barriers and temporary metal fencing have been built outside, and local and federal law-enforcement officers will be out in force for the trial of the man charged in the worst act of terrorism on U.S. soil.

For the survivors and families of the victims, the trial caps nearly two years of fear, pain, anger and, ultimately, political empowerment.

"All of us are hopeful that, finally, this agony will be over," said Oklahoma Gov. Frank Keating, who lost friends in the blast. "Oklahomans are a patient, hopeful and traditional people. We believe the system should and will work … and that those responsible for this horrific act will never walk the face of this Earth again."

Although emotions run deep, the survivors and families are under no illusions that this trial — or the one that follows for co-defendant Terry Nichols — will bring closure.

Still, for the next several months, many will be following the trial, either trying to score one of the 12 precious courtroom seats in Denver allotted for them, or by sitting in an Oklahoma City auditorium to watch the closed-circuit feed.

Others, like Kathleen Treanor, will just monitor the news — the trial experience being too difficult, yet the desire to see justice served being too strong. Like many, she has conflicting emotions.

"It's not going to make anything different. It's not going to bring my daughter back. It's not going to bring my life back to where it was," said Treanor, whose 4-year-old daughter Ashley Eckles was killed in the explosion at the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building.

"But the human part of me believes that I have to have some vindication. I can't just look the other way. It's too horrifying," she said.

Also watching the trial closely will be America's extremists — the militia members, the conspiracy theorists of all stripes — those who became energized by such previous cases as the sieges on Ruby Ridge and Waco.

And watching them will be the civil rights activists, like Rabbi Abraham Cooper of the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, who intends to keep a close eye on these disenfranchised extremists' forum of choice and necessity: the Internet. Cooper said the cause of the bombing will be widely discussed on the Internet.

"Every single possible theory, anti-government or otherwise, will absolutely flood that subculture," Cooper said.

Cooper's fear is that the Internet chatter could reach, and spur to action, lonely, angry, outsiders with no outlet for their frustrations and no cure for their demons — a person that fits the description prosecutors have offered for McVeigh.

For many, the horror of the Oklahoma City bombing was only magnified by the identities of the top suspects, two small-town Americans — not the sinister foreign terrorists who people initially concluded must have been behind

On April 19, 1995, an explosion rocked the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, killing 168 people. Timothy McVeigh rapidly became the lead suspect after being identified as John Doe 1. The alleged path to Oklahoma City started in Junction City. K-State prof wins Fulbright to Ireland

arts and entertainment editor

She's been to Japan, the Czech Republic, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and England. Now she's taking on Ireland.

Donna Potts, English instructor, received a Fulbright Lecturing Award in Modern American Literature. She will teach at the University College of Galway in Ireland.

Potts had to be recommended by the Fulbright committee. After she was notified, Potts said she was immediately sure she wanted to do it.

The course Potts will teach in Ireland will be an hour-long lecture one day a week.

On weekends, she will go to Dublin to the Trinity College Library for research. Potts and her family will leave for Ireland in mid-August.

Potts has been at K-State since 1991. Her husband, Charles Moore, is an associate professor of mathematics. He will take a sabbatical and spend the year in Ireland with Potts and their two children.

Potts said she has arranged to rent a house close to the university for the year she will spend there.

"I've talked to students here that have come from different countries, and they say that they began to get homesick around three to five weeks," Potts said. "I'll really miss my family. My entire family has promised to come over to Ireland and see us."

After a year in Ireland, Potts and Moore will return to K-State.

Seniors to receive 1st chance to buy football tickets

CORY MORGAN
staff reporter

Student season tickets for the 1997-98 football season will be sold on the basis of credit hours, with upperclassmen having the opportunity to buy tickets first.

A total allotment of 9,200 season tickets for students are available for next fall's football season.

"Right now, we anticipate that the demand for season tickets is going to be more than the allotted amount available," Max Urick, athletic director, said. "If students want tickets, they should make their wishes known this spring during pre-enrollment. If they don't reserve their tickets now, they will be thrown in with new students next fall."

Urick and Carol Adolph, athletic ticket manager, said the fairest way to allocate student tickets would be to use the seniority system.

"We have talked with other universities around the country and this is the best alternative that we have come up with so far," Urick said. "We are still open to suggestions."

The way the seniority system works is that graduate students and seniors returning next fall get the first option to purchase tickets. After the seniors, juniors have the choice, and then it filters down to sophomores and freshmen.

After all the upperclassmen have purchased tickets, the rest of the tickets will be allotted to incoming students. Depending on the demand from incoming students, a split-season ticket could develop.

If the returning students purchase 8,500 of the allotted 9,200 tickets, incoming students will be allotted the remaining 700 tickets. If 1,400 tickets are desired, then students would receive a split-season ticket, which would allow them to attend one non-conference and two conference games each.

Urick said the issue of student season tickets is a dilemma.

"In one sense, the dilemma is good," Urick said. "But in the same sense it is unfortunate. We anticipate that we won't be able to accommodate everyone that wants to come to the games. Under the circumstances, we are trying to find a fair and equitable way to distribute season tickets.

"We are trying to find as many available seats as we can for students. We understand that football is a big part of life in the fall and want students to have the opportunity to experience that."

The price of a season ticket will be $60 and $120 for the combination package of football and basketball. The combination

• 2 K-STATE STUDENTS WIN TRUMAN SCHOLARSHIPS.

Two K-State students have won $30,000 Harry S. Truman scholarships.

Vicki Choitz, senior in political science, political science education, international studies and women's studies, and Justin Kastner, senior in food science, won the scholarships.

Kastner plans to graduate in May and attend graduate school at the University of Texas School of Health in Houston. Choitz plans to graduate in May 1998 and attend graduate school, but she has not decided where.

Truman scholarships can be used the senior year and for graduate studies. Scholars are selected primarily on the basis of leadership potential. They are selected for qualities such as honesty, communications skills, and a commitment to a career in public service.

With 21 recipients, K-State is first in the nation among public universities in the number of Truman Scholars selected since the program began in 1977.

• NEWSPAPER, COLLEGE ASK FOR DISMISSAL OF LIBEL ACTION.

ATLANTA — The Atlanta Journal-Constitution has asked a court to dismiss Richard Jewell's libel lawsuit, saying it accurately reported that the FBI considered him a suspect in the Olympic Park bombing.

The newspaper responded Thursday to a lawsuit filed Jan. 28 by attorneys for Jewell, who found a knapsack containing the pipe bomb that killed one person and injured more than 100 in the park July 27.

He was considered a hero until the newspaper reported three days later that he was the focus of the FBI's investigation. In October, the Justice Department told Jewell, 34, that he was no longer a target of the investigation.

His lawsuit said the newspaper portrayed him as a person with a "bizarre employment history and aberrant personality who was guilty of criminal involvement in the Centennial Olympic Park bombing."

The lawsuit also said officials of his former employer, Piedmont College, slandered him in statements to the newspaper.

In its response, the newspaper described its reporting as fair, accurate and responsible and dismissed Jewell's claims that he was defamed by reports the FBI considered him a suspect as clearly unfounded.

Piedmont College also filed a request for the court to dismiss Jewell's suit.

• DOZENS HURT, 2 DEAD DUE TO TENNESSEE, KENTUCKY TWISTERS.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — A dozen tornadoes raked Tennessee early Saturday, pitching parked cars 300 feet and injuring nearly four dozen people.

Metal utility poles designed to withstand 160 mph winds were bent and snapped.

Trees that were not broken or uprooted were covered with bits of shredded debris.

The same broad weather system produced a half-dozen tornadoes in Kentucky late Friday, killing two people. Violent thunderstorms also caused scattered damage Friday in Indiana and minor injuries Saturday in eastern Florida.

No deaths were reported in the Tennessee tornadoes.

"That's a real miracle when you look at the damage," said Todd Womack, spokesman for Erlanger Medical Center.

• PALESTINIANS DEMONSTRATE AGAINST ISRAEL IN WEST BANK.

NABLUS, West Bank — Thousands of demonstrators shouting, "Vengeance!" filled streets throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip on Sunday, protesting Israeli construction in east Jerusalem and venting their anger over the killing of a demonstrator.

Israel, fearing the spread of violence on Land Day — an annual day of protests against Israeli land confiscations — stationed a half-dozen tanks outside Nablus and beefed up its troop presence at checkpoints and military bases around other Palestinian towns.

But Palestinian police largely succeeded in creating a buffer between their own people and Israeli troops — at times firing into the air, beating protesters with clubs and chasing them.

Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction has acknowledged organizing the riots that have taken place for the past 11 days.

Resignations spring from Senate absences

BENJAMIN YODER
city/government editor

Five Student Senators have resigned from Senate this year because they were absent from three or more meetings.

Slade Deister, former architecture senator; Andy Hanson, former college of education senator; Clayton Huseman, former agriculture senator; Todd Rasmussen, former business administration senator; and Dorian Shager, former graduate school senator, violated standing rules.

Aubrey Abbott, Senate chair, said she writes the standing rules, which include absences, but the Senate can approve or amend them any time during the year.

"At the beginning of the year, the Senate chair introduces the standing rules that senators have to abide by in the Big 12 Room," she said. "We set the rules. They had the chance to change them, and they didn't."

Abbott said involvement with graded class activities, illness and family emergencies were excused, but absences for other reasons were not. She said senators who reach three absences are in violation of the standing rules.

"They need to budget them throughout the year," she said.

Had the senators not resigned, they would have gone through an impeachment process in which they could have stated justification for those absences. None chose to go through the impeachment process.

Deister said he did not want to go through the impeachment process because he thought it would be futile.

"As inefficient and disorganized as the meetings were, I didn't want to go through an impeachment process," he said.

Hanson, who was appointed to Senate Feb. 6, said he wanted to go through the impeachment process, but said it was more involved than he thought.

"I wanted them to impeach me to waste some of their time," he said.

Deister said Senate took too much time from his school work and personal life.

"They expect you to totally commit yourself to Senate," he said. "I didn't know what I was getting into."

Deister said he was tired of Senate and needed to commit more time to school.

"I don't need to be part of this. I'm here for school. I'm here to get an education."

Deister said he voted to amend the rules to provide for three absences each semester, but the measure failed.

Bret Glendening, Senate allocations chair, said he opposed increasing the number of absences to three per semester because it would have been too lenient.

"I think that when students take these Senate seats they should realize there is going to be a time commitment, and they should plan for it. If they're going to skip out of meetings, they should just resign and let someone who is going to represent their college in."

But Glendening said he thought academic competition teams should be excused because it related to their field and helps with future job prospects.

"It's helping them gain experience," he said.

Huseman said he was absent because he was involved with the agriculture academic competition team, and senators directly representing the students in their college should be excused from Senate meetings.

Huseman said he thought absences for academic competition teams would be excused because they had been in the past, but admitted the decision was up to Abbott.

"I hoped and assumed her discretion would be the same," he said.

David Hasemann, graduate school senator, said he agreed that academic competition teams should be excused.

"The key word is academic," he said. "These senators on these teams don't know when these competitions are going to meet."

Hasemann said there was a fine line between what should be excused and what should not, but said absence rules needed to be followed, and it was too late to change them.

"We need to be consistent across the board," he said. "If we voted on them, we should be consistent."

Rasmussen said he thought involvement with college councils and academic teams should be excused absences, but he admitted the rules the Senate chair set at the beginning of the year needed to be followed.

"For me personally, there needs to be more leeway," he said. "I think Gas prices rise substantially during past year

BECKY WINTER
staff reporter

Gas prices have increased 41 percent in the past year, Stacy Kohlmeier, operations manager at KPL Gas Service, said.

"It's a substantial increase, but it happened at a time when usage increases due to the cold weather," she said. "People have seen their bills from one month to the next double or even triple depending on the usage increase they have."

Kohlmeier said the average residential gas bill was about $86 in February 1996, but totaled about $112 in 1997.

One reason for the increase is gas suppliers haven't been able to replenish resources since the harsh winter of 1995, Michelle Phillip, spokeswoman for KPL's main office in Topeka, said.

"This is economics in its simplest form," she said. "One way to look at this is like the K-State vs. Kansas football tickets — a scalper can sell them at a higher price because the market drives them up."

To help curb the rising costs, KPL purchased and stored gas in the summer when costs were low and then passed those savings on to customers when prices increased in the winter.

"We don't make any profit on the gas. When the cost goes down, we pass that on to our customers," Phillips said.

Kohlmeier said another reason for the increase is because KPL's monthly service charge has increased from $5 in 1996 to $6.20 in 1997 to pay for inflated operation costs.

Lee McQueen, K-State's utility systems director, said the increase seems high because prices are being compared to last year.

"A lot of people say the prices went up, but last year we had a mild winter and gas prices fell like a rock," he said.

K-State is trying to compensate for the increase any way it can, McQueen said.

"We've burned fuel oil to try to offset the costs, and we're trying to be as efficient as we can," he said. "I just hope that when you leave your office that you make sure to shut the lights off."

Senators need to realize responsibilities of jobs

How well are student senators doing their jobs?

Each senator represents about 300 students, but are they paying attention to debaters while they are doing homework, talking or passing notes among themselves?

Five senators have resigned because they had three or more absences. They made a decision not to represent the students who voted them into office.

How difficult is it to remember when Senate meets? Every senator knows Senate meets at 7 p.m. Thursday.

Senators not willing to do their job should have resigned long ago. With one week left in this term, it's too late to do anything about those who do not care, but incoming senators should realize the importance of their jobs.

Senate is a time commitment. Students depend on senators and expect them to represent them. Their voice is silent if senators do not pay attention during the meetings or don't even bother to show up.

They should realize that meetings might last until the early hours of the morning, and it is important to stay until the meeting is adjourned.

If they are not willing to take the responsibility of office, they never should have run for office.

the heroes

Strength of father, Jesus provides inspiration

He is my hero.
He is my friend.
He is my dad.
And he has cancer.

Now, mind you, this man is not scared. He has faced down this opponent before. In June 1994 he was diagnosed with cancer in his kidney. The kidney was the size of two softballs, and the doctors thought it rather miraculous there was no evidence of spreading.

We knew it was miraculous.

We stood in the strength of Jesus Christ, knowing our heavenly father's will was not that my father die of cancer.

But on March 19 we found that there was a 2-inch by 2-inch mass of cancer in my father's lungs.

The battle begins again.

The doctors have said the only thing that will help at all is to basically destroy good cells with the bad. Translation: there is no hope, but chemotherapy or radiation might help.

I don't think so.

My family and I know the very creator who, in his wisdom, knit my father together in his mother's womb. We know the man who walked the Earth healing people's diseases — releasing them from the power of Satan — giving them hope in this life and the next.

We know Jesus.

There is none greater than he.

And as much as I love my dad, I love Jesus more. He has been so good to my family and me. I simply cannot be angry with him.

I see Jesus every time I look at my dad. The Bible proclaims that our attitude should be that of Christ Jesus. My dad has lived that every day that I have been alive.

From high-school basketball to Little League baseball, first prom to first kiss, first loves (and second, third and fourth loves, for that matter) to meeting Jesus for myself — my dad has been a sterling example of all that Jesus was, is and could be in my life.

I have learned from him, laughed at him and cried for him when he got sick. He is both the funniest man and the wisest man I have ever known.

But I do not wish to portray him as a blessing to his family only, because his Godly influence has reached far beyond the walls of our old farmhouse. I just recently spoke with a young man upon whom my dad's life has had a profound effect.

My adopted brother John Ramirez talked about the example that my father has set for him. John told me that my dad had shown him — through his love for him, my brother and me — what it meant to be a man, a father and a friend. My dad gave John the love of a father where there had been no love before.

But most of all Dad was instrumental in showing my friend John the love of Jesus. John came to know Jesus personally more than a year ago.

In addition, my pastor, Mark Hornbaker, talked of how the Lord had used my father to build Pastor Mark's faith. Pastor Mark also spoke of the ripple effect of my dad's deep faith. He referred to the dynamic effect that my dad's faith through his battles with cancer has had on all those around him.

People in our little community of Lewis, Kan., (population 450) have watched with respect as my father stood strong with his God. And he did so in the face of probably the most deadly disease of today.

Cancer.

That brings me full circle to the beginning of this column.

My dad has cancer, but he is not dying.

He is living.

As he fights this disease, neither it nor the cause of it overcomes him. He stands in strength not his own. Rather, he stands in strength that was bought and paid for by the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ almost 2,000 years ago. He stands in a strength that was sealed when that same Jesus rose up from among the dead on the third day.

Yes, there is a 2-inch by 2-inch growth in my dad's lungs. But there is a wonderful deposit that was put inside my father 24 years ago that overcomes all else.

That deposit is Jesus, and he will never be overcome.

They are my heroes.

They are my friends.

They are my dad and my Jesus.

vegetarianism

Lifestyle option more than what's for dinner

I know what I'm about to do is a dangerous thing at a school where fresh meat is readily available, but today I'm coming out of the refrigerator.

I am a vegetarian.

Wait, wait, I implore you to wait, oh gentle reader! Don't wad up the paper and reach for a side of beef in spite.

I can't remember how I started on this less-beaten path (the road to hell, some might say), but I'm stuck here and have been for about three years.

VIEWPOINT
BRANDI HERTIG

BRANDI HERTIG is a sophomore in print journalism and English/creative writing. You can e-mail your comments to Brandi at (blh0377@ksu.edu).

No more cheese-filled hot dogs for me, tasty as they are.

Eventually this darker side of me emerges to others and when it does, I can see them taking a mental toll of all the times they either a.) ate meat in from of me, b.) wore meat in front of me, or c.) spoke of meat or meat-related products in front of me. And then, after their moment of quiet embarrassment, they wrinkle their noses at me and say, "So, like, what do you eat?"

As if all they do is gnaw on chicken-fried beef sticks all damn day whilst I nibble on a nice gummy slab of Tofu.

So, loyal Slim Jim fans of K-State, I invite you to take a peek into this magical, mysterious world (filled with gnomes and trolls) of vegetarianism.

At first, for some odd reason, I thought that becoming a vegetarian would make my life easier, more rural and carefree. No longer would I have to deal with the greasy bologna stains on my shirts, no more ham hocks lodged in my trachea.

And then the brutal reality set in.

One day, as I settled down with a nice bowl of gelatin product, I heard the lonesome mooing of phantom cattle grazing in the pastures of my mind. "Braaaaaandi," they mooed to me. "You can't eaaaaat thaaaaat. It's made of us, your friends. You know, the coooows."

That's when I realized that really large chunks of meat aren't the only things vegetarians avoid.

I started reading the ingredient labels on everything, including bath products.

No longer could I eat Jiffy brand corn muffins while washing my leather bra with Caress bath soap, thanks to the added beef fat.

Then there were those arduous Hardees stops on the way back from college bowl meets in high school.

At first, I would complain that if we went there, surely I would perish from hunger before we hit Newton. The carnivorous ones would look at me and blithely say, "Jeez, Brandi. Just eat some french fries and shut up." And then they would hurl ketchup packets at me and say, "Here's dessert, you genetically incorrect freak."

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

So, I ate the french fries, squeezed the ketchup into my mouth and shut my hole while they gnawed on their beefy feasts.

Besides being denied the convenience of fast food, I have come to grips with the fact that I will never own a really nice pair of shoes.

Rather, each spring I can be found in Payless Shoe Source, rummaging through the wares looking for that perfect pair of vinyl kicks.

I'll admit something else, which might shock other vegetarians and cause everyone else to look at each other, smiling knowingly.

Sometimes I miss meat. The reality is, meat is so easily accessible in these parts that it's difficult to curb my dining activities to avoid accidentally eating something that had parents.

Don't cry for me, America. I enjoy this alternative lifestyle of mine, however sinful it might be.

I think my whole situation can be summed up in this dramatic scene from "The Simpsons":

"Homer, why don't you take Lisa hunting? Turn her into a man," asked Moe, local bartender.

"She wouldn't go. She's a vegetarian."

"Jeez, Homer. You and Marge ain't cousins or something, are you?"

Pssst ... looking for a job or internship? These insider tips might help

Seniors, it's that time of year. Time to send out those résumés and begin interviewing for that great first job. Your job search should fill you with excitement about the future, not foreboding.

After spending the past few years hiring interns and entry-level personnel, I decided to write 10 common-sense tips to help graduates land a solid first job. These tips aren't salvation, but they might improve your chances of finding what you want.

1.) Experience is a separator of résumés.

The professional world is changing. Many entry-level positions are disappearing as the computer makes the modern office more efficient and productive. Businesses need employees to hit the ground running when hired, with only some training and down time involved. If you have internship experience, your chances are exponentially greater than someone with the same bachelor of arts degree and no experience.

2.) Don't view your senior year as an extended vacation.

Send those résumés out early. Some companies make hiring decisions months before they begin interviewing for positions. This means they are narrowing down the list of candidates in January for an entry-level position available in May. You want to be at the top of their list when they start considering candidates.

3.) Take advantage of informational interviews and on-campus club presentations.

These presentations are conducted by personnel who are on campus to talk to you and answer your questions. Carefully listen to what they say, then drill them with questions.

The more you learn about their experiences, the more knowledge you bring to the table at an interview. Don't kid yourself. Knowing the lingo and work environment at companies can be very influential.

4.) Network with your parents' acquaintances.

Want to begin a career in marketing communications? Talk to your dad's golfing buddy about what his company looks for in entry-level marketing communications hires. Want to find out what it takes to be in outplacement consulting? Ask your mom's friend about her firm and when she thinks a young professional has enough seasoning to get into this specialized niche.

These conversations are extremely informative and are a launching point for networking with experienced professionals. They might even know of companies with hiring needs.

5.) Think your grades don't matter? Think again.

Entry-level candidates are judged on experience and accomplishments to date, just like any mid- or senior-management hire. If you haven't attempted to excel in college, you've shown you won't attempt to excel in a work environment. Period. Sorry folks, a 2.1 grade point average doesn't show quality management for four years in school.

6.) Use the on-campus job placement center.

The job placement center is far reaching and full of interesting and different job opportunities. I remember actually finding an opportunity in Alaska, and the company was interviewing candidates in Kansas City for positions. I promise, if you look hard enough, you'll find hidden jewels of jobs.

Many opportunities aren't mainstream, and all students should consider expanding their horizons with their first jobs.

7.) Find a way to shine above and beyond the other job candidates.

Depending on the limitations or expectations of the niche you are entering, you should do something in your cover letter or résumé to stand out among other candidates. Creativity grabs attention.

Here is an example of what I mean. A friend of mine received a bachelor of science degree in economics but wanted to become an art director at an ad agency when he graduated. So he created a restaurant menu as a résumé. His daily special included the ingredients (job skills) that would make him such a tasty choice for the interested agency.

Needless to say, in a creative field, this résumé stood out above and beyond, and he received the position with a great starting salary.

8.) Research the agency or company you're interviewing with.

Find out as much information as possible about the company you are interviewing with. Companies have corporate profiles, annual reports, World Wide Web sites and press kits you can get your hands on quickly.

Nothing impresses an interviewer more than you quoting the company's client list or published billings in conversation. It shows your commitment. It doesn't hurt to know about the person you are interviewing with either.

Many times, employee profiles are included with the materials. Knowing this will definitely make an impression. It shows that you not only know about the company but are savvy enough to know about the people who make the company what it is.

9.) Be sure your wardrobe is in line with your career choice.

I can only tell you what I learned as a man, but if you interview in an Armani suit and alligator-skin Italian loafers, you will be sending the wrong message. You aren't a millionaire, so don't dress like one. This outfit doesn't say hungry and willing to learn.

But a white T-shirt with a denim vest doesn't translate well, either. Know what a person at your level should look like. You want to look the part you want to play. Don't miscommunicate with an interviewer because you don't look right.

10.) Remember this statement — when you sit down in that chair for your first interview, and you are nervous and start to unravel, remember this tidbit, and you will begin to relax. The people across the table interviewing you also once had a first interview, and they felt the same way you do.

There you have it, 10 tips that could help you land that all-important first job. Good luck, and remember these tips. I hope they help you land on your feet right in the middle of your dream job.

Worshippers remember Heaven's Gate tragedy

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RANCHO SANTA FE, Calif. — As dawn peeked through the clouds, 300 Easter worshippers gathered in a high school stadium and praised God as the only keeper of heaven's gate.

The group gathered near the site where 39 Heaven's Gate cult members committed suicide last week, seeking redemption in a spaceship trailing the Hale-Bopp comet.

"Jesus Christ is the gate, he's the only way. There's no UFO waiting behind a comet," Pastor Bob Botsford told his non-denominational flock, wearing straw Easter hats while shivering in the early morning chill.

His sermon was titled "The Key to Heaven's Gate." In it, he warned the entrance was narrow. "Only one person can pass through at a time. You can't get in because you belong to some group."

Meanwhile, CNN and Newsweek magazine reported that cult members killed themselves because leader Marshall Herff Applewhite convinced them he was dying. CNN said Applewhite convinced members he was dying of cancer; Newsweek reported in its April 7 issue that Applewhite told followers his body was "disintegrating."

Computer disks sent to the former cult member identified in news reports as Rio D'Angelo contain a message from an unidentified female cult member: "Once he is gone ... there is nothing left here on the face of the Earth for me ... no reason to stay a moment longer." The disks were reviewed by CNN and Time magazine.

With all of the autopsies completed, the coroner said that Applewhite, 65, did not suffer from terminal cancer.

"Marshall Applewhite has no gross physical evidence and no visual evidence of cancer in his liver or any other organs," Dr. Brian Blackbourne told The Associated Press.

Also Sunday, former cult member Nick Cooke told interviewers he wished he had joined his wife, Suzanne Sylvia Cooke, in committing suicide. He belonged to the cult off and on for 23 years and left three years ago.

"I wish I had the strength to have remained ... to have stuck it out and gotten stronger and continued to be a part of that group," he told CBS' "60 Minutes."

"I believe they are on a craft somewhere, whether it's behind the comet or not, I really don't know," Cooke told San Francisco's KQED-FM.

Cooke and his wife left their daughter Kelly behind 20 years ago to join the cult. "It was the toughest thing that I had to do at that point in my life," he told "60 Minutes."

Kelly said, "My understanding was, it was to go to the next level, to be with God."

While Easter worshipers expressed sympathy to the families left behind, they were joyous in celebrating the Biblical story of Jesus Christ's resurrection.

"It's still very difficult to get (the suicides) out of your mind. I feel really sorry for the families," said Linda Wood, a 23-year Rancho Santa Fe resident.

Like many in this affluent community of big estates on even bigger tracts of land, Wood is tired of the media barrage. Nonstop coverage since last week's gruesome discovery has "really hardened us," she said.

While Christians gave praise, families of the suicide cult members continued to make last arrangements for their loves ones.

Many had been lost to them for 20 years or more, having ended all communication after joining the group founded Applewhite, a k a "Do," and Bonnie Lu Trusdale Nettles, a k a "Ti."

Ms. Nettles died of cancer in 1985 at age 57.

Applewhite will be buried in a San Antonio plot next to his father, a Presbyterian minister, sister Louise Winant said.

Only a handful of families have journeyed here to claim bodies, which the medical examiner began releasing to funeral homes Sunday.

Back at the stadium sunrise service, Wood felt a sense of relief and renewed faith.

"God created us. He didn't create us to take our lives," Wood said.

After foregoing his final season at K-State to enter professional basketball world, Mark Young's college days have all

Faded away

STORY BY JEREMY KELLEY • PHOTO BY STEVE HEBERT

To any close follower of K-State basketball it might not have come as such a huge surprise.

On March 27, K-State guard Mark Young announced that he would forego his final season at K-State and pursue a career in professional basketball.

Young withdrew from the University and shortly after the Big 12 Tournament and went home to Baton Rouge, La., with his wife, Peggy, and his son, Mark Jr. At that time Young said he wasn't certain of his future at K-State but said he was just weighing his options.

While in Baton Rouge, Young signed with agent and local attorney, Oscar Schoenfelt, who also represents Stanley Roberts of the Los Angeles Clippers, Mark Davis and a select number of Contnental Basketball Association players.

Neither Coach Tom Asbury nor any other members of the K-State coaching staff could be reached. They are attending the National Association of Basketball Coaches conventions in Indianapolis. Young could not be reached at his home in Louisiana.

> The league is dominated by 6'6" Scottie Pippen guys. he is what the NBA is looking for. I think he's good enough to play. He has good fundamentals, and he has the talent.
> • Oscar Schoenfelt
> Young's agent

Young earned honorable mention all-Big 12 honors this past season.

In his three years with K-State, Young averaged 9.4 points per game and grabbed five rebounds in his campaign. His last season with the Cats was arguably his best as he averaged nearly 13 points a game, led the team in steals with 42 and finished second in assists with 63.

Schoenfelt said Young's decision was simply one that had issues dealing with his family and said Young did not show a negative attitude about the K-State basketball program.

"What he told me was that his decision was a personal one based on family needs," Schoenfelt said. "The bottom line is, no matter what his decision is, you try to support him in whatever way you can."

Schoenfelt said he thought Young was good enough to play in the NBA and that he had the skills to succeed at the next level.

"The league is dominated by 6'6" Scottie Pippen guys. He is what the NBA is looking for," Schoenfelt said. "I think he's good enough to play. He has good fundamentals, and he has the talent."

Schoenfelt compared Young's prospect in the NBA to the likes of another player of his caliber, Darvin Ham. Ham gained notoriety after shattering a backboard in the NCAA Tournament last year in Texas Tech's upset of North Carolina.

Schoenfelt said no one thought Ham would go anywhere in the NBA, but he proved everyone wrong. Ham landed himself a spot in the Nestle Crunch Slam Dunk at the NBA all-Star weekend in February with the Denver Nuggets. After that he was traded to the Indiana Pacers and was placed on the injured list with patellar tendinitis in his left knee.

"Just look at Darvin Ham," Schoenfelt said. "Nobody thought he would go anywhere in the NBA, but look at where he's at now. In that league, it's whoever wants to work, and Mark wants to work."

There are three main NBA scouting camps where players go to display their talents. Young and his agent plan to go to the biggest camp in Chicago, the camp that is allotted for mostly underclassman.

K-STATE'S MARK YOUNG, right, puts up a shot over Colorado's Martice Moore, left, during an early season match-up at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State lost the game 69-60.

Cramps aside, Mercer says he'll be prepared for championship game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Ron Mercer has been a marked man in Kentucky's quest to repeat as national champion. And although he has taken his share of hits, he's not complaining about the price of the bumps and bruises.

The sophomore all-American will be playing his last game as a Wildcat tonight in the national championship game against Arizona. He announced in February that he would enter the NBA draft after this season.

Mercer took an elbow to the head and had leg cramps, both of which forced him to the bench during the 78-69 semifinal victory over Minnesota on Saturday night.

"Ron's been playing a lot of minutes, and people have been hitting him, banging him, and he was physically a little whipped last night," Kentucky coach Rick Pitino said Sunday.

Mercer said he'll be OK for the title game.

"Right now I'm fine," he said. "Come Monday, I don't think we really have time to be tired. We have one more game left for the national championship, and I don't think anybody is going to feel tired, because we know we have to go out and do it. So I have to go out and deal with it."

He said the leg cramps stemmed from the West Regional, when he had to play 39 minutes against St. Joseph's and 38 against Utah. He is averaging 32.7 minutes for the season, including 31.2 in the NCAA tournament.

"That's when I started feeling my legs tighten up a little," said Mercer, who has scored 1,000 points in his career. "I didn't have any cramps, but they were a little tight then."

The wear and tear on his body from the West Regional may have affected Mercer's game against Minnesota. He made just 7 of 21 shots and grabbed only three rebounds.

Mercer has said several times this season he doesn't have to be on top of his game for the Wildcats to win. Although he leads the team in scoring with 18.3 points a game, he has led the Wildcats in scoring in only two of five NCAA games.

"I believe a lot in my teammates," he said. "They always respond to a challenge. I don't think they're going to give up because of injuries or cramps."

And his teammates know they have to produce for Mercer to excel.

"Kentucky is more than Ron Mercer," teammate Anthony Epps said. "We have a lot of talent. We need four or five guys to score in double figures to take the pressure off of Ron Mercer."

It was in last year's title game against Syracuse that Mercer displayed his star quality as a freshman. He came off the bench to score a team-high 20 points in the 76-67 victory.

Pitino said he believes Mercer will give fans something to remember in his last game in a Kentucky uniform.

"Ron Mercer right now knows that tomorrow he has to play great," he said. "So that pressure makes him run faster, jump higher, focus in better and showcase his skills, as well as the other players."

While Mercer leaves Kentucky as an all-American, it's not the individual recognition that gives him the most satisfaction.

"As far as the Kentucky program, I want to be remembered as 'He was on the teams that won back-to-back national championships,' " he said. "A lot of people will remember that."

NCAA Tournament seems to be nothing but big party for Arizona

INDIANAPOLIS — Miles Simon tilted his chair back, looked slyly to his left and chucked a piece of ice at Michael Dickerson.

The two dissolved in giggles, and that got Mike Bibby going. A.J. Bramlett and Bennett Davison joined in, and Arizona's starting lineup was convulsed in laughter as Coach Lute Olson tried to answer questions during a team news conference Sunday.

This is the team that's one game away from being national champion?

"We came here just to have fun," Simon said. "It's a business trip, but we're going to enjoy it, also. This might be the only time we get here."

Staying loose has gotten the Wildcats (24-9) this far, and a little thing like playing Kentucky (35-4) on Monday for the NCAA title isn't about to get them uptight.

They're playing pranks, making each other laugh and, in general, acting more like a bunch of goofballs than one of the country's best basketball teams. And the typically straight-laced Olson wouldn't have it any other way.

"I want them to go to the Fan Jam. I want them to do the things that are part of this experience that you don't get a chance to do very often," he said. "We've controlled their time to a large extent, but we've also let them enjoy the experience.

"Besides that, these guys are so wacky that they can find a lot of fun just being in their rooms around their teammates."

No matter how loose a team is during the season, players usually tighten up around tournament time. Not the Wildcats, who act like anything but a team ready to play its biggest game ever.

On Friday night — the day before beating North Carolina in the semifinals — the Wildcats had a food fight at a local restaurant. This isn't the first time this season the Wildcats have sent food flying, and Simon said it's the fault of Bramlett and Jason Terry.

"They get Eugene Edgerson involved. It's like he's their third stooge," Simon said. "You'll be sitting there trying to eat, and they'll flick at you. You look up, and they're just looking at you, so you end up throwing at all three of them. It just breaks loose."

On Sunday, it was tough to get a straight answer out of anyone from Arizona — including Olson. He was cracking jokes, making fun of himself and poking fun at his players.

His players were too busy laughing to hear many of the things he said. They tuned in when one of them spoke, but only so they would know what to make fun of.

When Davison tried to explain why he plays better when he's guarding someone like all-America Ron Mercer, Simon interrupted him.

"What are you talking about?" he said, then leaned back in his chair and laughed.

Nobody got it worse than Bibby. Olson made fun of the point guard's brief, to-the-point answers, cutting him off and having someone else respond if he didn't like what Bibby said.

His teammates weren't nearly as gentle. When Olson asked what it was like to play with the freshman phenom, a smirk crossed Simon's face before he answered.

"This guy, he acts up here, he's putting on a big show for everyone. He's the most cocky — walks around wearing his McDonald's all-American shorts," Simon said, starting to laugh. "No, I'm just kidding. I'm just kidding. He's cool to be around."

When someone asked Bibby later if he was cocky, his eyes grew wide, and he started shaking his head.

"I'm not cocky at all. He said he was kidding," he said, and then hesitated. "I think he was kidding."

K-State upsets Texas, wins 4 games over break

BRIAN SMOLLER
staff reporter

The K-State baseball team didn't understand the intention of spring break.

The break is intended to give relief from the daily routine of college life.

But the Wildcats didn't break routine. They kept on winning.

K-State continued to storm its way through the Big 12 season, recording four victories during the break.

Saturday, the Cats finished up a series with Texas A&M, dropping the last two games of the series, 9-8 and 9-7.

Although the last two games were losses, head coach Mike Clark wasn't displeased with the team's effort dating back to the Oklahoma State series.

"The kids played well today. We just didn't play as well as we have in the last 14-game stretch," he said.

K-State has blown away the competition since the win two weeks ago at OSU, on average outscoring its opponents by five runs a game. The Cats' offense is producing nearly 11 runs per contest.

Before the Texas A&M series, the Cats had a warm-up series with Cleveland State. The Vikings came into the series with a record of 1-8.

After a bit of a ruckus in the first game, when the benches cleared after a disputed foul-tip, K-State treated them to a 13-7 and 15-3 blasting.

The Cats scored early and often to send the Vikings packing.

The Wildcats went into the spring break weekend facing the No. 21 team in the country, the Texas Longhorns.

K-State dropped the opener, 11-6, but came back and shocked the Big 12 baseball world by capturing the last two games of the series in Austin, 5-4 and 14-11.

Junior shortstop Heath Schesser led the Cats to victory in the final game of the series, going 4-5 with two triples.

Schesser was part of the much-anticipated match-up between himself and Kip Harkrider, the preseason all-America pick at shortstop.

Although Schesser is leading Harkrider in every offensive category, Harkrider and the Longhorns receive the accolades, which K-State used to its advantage.

Despite not receiving the all-America status, Schesser's teammates support his candidacy.

"He's got my vote, that's for sure," senior outfielder Scott Poepard said.

K-State is in action Tuesday against the Creighton Blue Jays in a 3 p.m. start. The game will be aired on KSDB-FM 91.9.

After revamping K-State program Moore goes to Texas

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

After revitalizing the K-State women's volleyball team in the past three years, head coach Jim Moore has decided to move south to the University of Texas.

On March 24, Moore was named the new head coach at Texas after former coach Mick Haley resigned after 17 years with the Longhorns. Haley has accepted a coaching job as the head of the U.S. Olympic team.

Moore guided K-State to a 26-9 record last year, the school's best in 17 years and led the Cats to their first NCAA Tournament appearance.

K-State beat Cal State Northridge in the first round but fell in the second round to No. 9 Washington State. The Cats finished the 1996 season ranked No. 24 in the USA Today/AVCA poll.

"Jim is one of the most exciting young coaches in collegiate volleyball," Jody Conradt, director of women's athletics at Texas, said. "He is an innovator when it comes to a fast-paced, creative style of play, which will be fun for our players and popular with our fans.

"The University of Texas has established itself among the national leaders in athletics, and I have no doubt that Jim will continue the great tradition and history that has been established here."

Moore, who turned down an Olympic assistant coaching job with Haley earlier this year, completely revamped the K-State volleyball program, luring it from the depths of the Big 8 and transforming the Wildcats into one of the upper-echelon team's in NCAA volleyball.

Before Moore came to K-State, the Cats had compiled an 0-36 record in the Big 8 along with a 24-68 mark overall in the three years before he arrived.

Moore slowly chiseled a Wildcat team into one of the top teams in the Big 12 Conference. He has tallied an overall record at K-State of 61-34 (.642) including a 21-12 mark in 1995 and a 14-13 record in 1994.

"Jim has basically built two different programs from the ground up," Conradt said. "He has been very successful at each stop while also generating tremendous spectator interest. Texas volleyball has a large and supportive following, and I know our fans will be as excited as I am about Jim joining our program."

Moore has reportedly been offered a healthy pay increase as well. Moore will receive somewhere in the upwards of $200,000 at Texas, an increase from his $50,000 paycheck at K-State.

The Univeristy of Texas Atheltic Media Relations office contributed to this story.

JIM MOORE, former head coach of the K-State volleyball team, has been named the new head coach for the University of Texas. Moore compiled a 61-34 record in his three years at K-State.

Security beefed up as trial nears

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — Security officials for the Oklahoma City bombing trial say they are prepared for everything from crowd control to disruptions when Timothy McVeigh's trial gets under way Monday.

Construction crews have set up concrete barriers around the federal courthouse, officers are patrolling the sunlit courtyard and SWAT teams have been assigned to nearby buildings.

"This is all part of a plan for the Oklahoma City bombing trial," Court Clerk Jim Manspeaker, said.

Manspeaker said the security plan includes Denver police and federal marshals.

The city expects to spend $500,000 on trial security, mostly for police overtime, Mayor Wellington Webb said.

Butch Montoya, Denver's manager of public safety, said police have been preparing since Feb. 20, 1996, when U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch decided to move the trial from Oklahoma to Colorado because of extensive pretrial publicity.

"We've been conducting tabletop exercises, scenario games to validate our resources and to point out where we needed to address problems," Montoya said.

Months ago, federal officials installed TV cameras on nearby buildings, giving a panoramic view for blocks around the federal building and nearby 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Chief Deputy Marshal Larry Homenick said the courthouse has been under a high alert for two years, after President Clinton ordered a review of security in the wake of the Oklahoma City bombing.

"We're confident, and we're ready," he said.

such a heinous, cowardly act.

McVeigh, a tall, slender 28-year-old from a family that can trace its history back to 19th-century Irish immigrants, grew up in working-class Pendleton, N.Y., near the Niagara Falls, and served with distinction in the Gulf War.

Prosecutors intend to show evidence that after the war McVeigh embraced a culture of hate, racism and anti-government fervor, as spelled out in a book he was said to have devoured.

In a circumstantial case, lead prosecutor Joseph Hartzler intends to link McVeigh to bomb-making materials and a yellow Ryder rental truck used in the explosion.

McVeigh's defense, led by Enid, Okla., attorney Stephen Jones, will attack the integrity of the evidence — a task made much easier by troubles in the FBI crime lab. He also will assault the character of the prosecution's key witness, Michael Fortier, who, in a plea arrangement, will testify his former friend McVeigh was at the center of the bomb plot.

The defense might also suggest McVeigh was made a patsy in a complicated conspiracy involving Iraq, the Irish Republican Army and American white supremacists — a theory belittled by the prosecution.

"We are prepared," Hartzler wrote last week, "to rebut McVeigh's pulp fiction with provable facts."

FULBRIGHT

"I should return just in time to teach next fall," she said.

When she returns to K-State, Potts said she hopes to teach courses on Irish literature.

Although she has never been to Ireland, Potts has corresponded with members of the University College of Galway. She has also spoken to a former Fulbright teacher from the University of Missouri-Kansas City who taught in Galway.

She will attend the American Conference for Irish Studies in 1998 in Cork, Ireland, during her stay.

"I've been told over and over about the natural beauty of Ireland as well as the friendliness of the people," Potts said.

In Ireland, the universities have different grading policies.

"The professor assigns whatever grades he or she wants based on test scores," Potts said.

At the University College of Galway, the entire semester's grade is based on one test score. Although the professors assign the grades, if more than 2 percent of the class receives an A, adjudicators will decide which students will receive the A.

"For me, in some ways it will be easier," she said.

Sometimes students get grades they are not happy with, Potts said.

"It takes the pressure off me," she said.

Large lecture classes and one exam a semester are other differences in Irish college courses. Students also have a different kind of relationship with their professors.

"There's not as much of an opportunity to interact with students," Potts said.

Typically, Potts said her classes were smaller, and she was able to divide the class into small groups.

"I've never taught a big lecture class," she said.

Potts said she thought she might have a different perspective to share with the students.

"I'll be teaching modern American literature," Potts said. "There's a chance I also might teach film."

Besides her research and teaching, she also writes poetry.

After reading the works of Irish poets, Potts said she thought it affected her own work.

"I think I feel freer to write about my own background," she said. "I grew up in southwest Missouri in a fairly rural area."

Potts' favorite Irish poet is Seamus Heaney, winner of the Nobel Prize in Literature.

"One thing that appealed to me very strongly about Seamus Heaney's literature was that they were about nature. He grew up on a farm," she said.

Potts said she hoped to learn more about Irish literature and the culture.

"I've thought about collecting poems for an anthology of Irish nature poetry," Potts said.

Potts also has personal goals to fulfill along with academic goals.

"I'd like to finally have time to write poetry," Potts said. "So far I've spent a lot of time trying to get my articles published and my book published, and I'd like to spend more time on poetry."

Potts has written "Howard Nemerov Objective Idealism: The Influence of Owen Barfield."

package is $20 less than last year but includes fewer games.

The combination package includes six football games and 12 basketball games. The games during winter break are not included in the combination package but can be purchased separately at the ticket office.

The process of purchasing season tickets will be the same as last year. During pre-enrollment, students need to fill out an application and order their season tickets. Payments for the tickets could then be added to the tuition payment for next fall.

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can avoid with SRAs—tax-deferred annuities from TIAA-CREF. SRAs not only ease your current tax bite, they offer an easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less in taxes now. And since earnings on your SRAs are tax deferred, your money works even harder for you.

What else do SRAs offer? The investment choice, flexibility, and expertise of TIAA-CREF—America's foremost retirement organization.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Stop by your benefits office or call us at 1 800 842-2888 and find out how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

EVERY BODY MUST BE TAXED

The town of Colma, Calif., just south of San Francisco, has a population of 1,000 in an area of about 2.2 square miles, but three-fourths of the land consists of cemeteries in which a million people are buried. In October citizen Robert Simcox announced he would gather signatures to secure a ballot referendum for 1997 that would impose a municipal tax on the dead, in the form of a levy on cemetery owners of $5 per grave per year.

LIVE AND LET LIVE

Dick Shields made the Pittsburgh, Pa., newspapers on his 75th birthday on January 11 for his remarkable recuperative powers.

Among the medical traumas from which he has recovered: in a coma near death for a week after a burst appendix; three times a broken neck (once while falling out of bed during recuperation from a previous broken neck); a broken back; triple-bypass heart surgery; a grapefruit-sized blockage of a blood vessel; a fungus that ate the skin off his feet; and duty during World War II that included hand-marking of active mines. Said Shields, apparently without irony: "I'd have to say I've been truly blessed."

Latest exhibit at the Beach Museum of Art spans the entire gamut of 20th-century art while revealing contrasts

REVIEW BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Art Review

▶ More info? The Beach Museum of Art is open 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and 1 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Admission is free. Call 532-7718 for more information.

For the first time at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, an exhibition spans the gamut of 20th-century art, offering a variety of work by a stunning array of important American artists.

The exhibition "20th-Century American Drawings from the Arkansas Arts Center Foundation Collection," which continues through May 18, takes a successfully epic-scaled look at American artists' drawings through the century. It's a mini-course for those of use who confuse our pop artists with our illustrators, and our abstract expressionists with, well, whatever one could confuse moreso.

However, those who are represented include Robert Motherwell, the late abstract expressionist Willem De Kooning, pop master Roy Lichtenstein, Larry Rivers and minimalist/color field artist Ellsworth Kelly. Even a sculptural artist like Claes Oldenburg is represented with a drawing of his proposed "Colossal Structure in the Form of a Clothespin," a pencil on paper from 1972-74.

What is most evident is the startling differences with which these artists approach their blank sheets of paper.

While some drawings might appear to be almost paintings on canvas, others have the spontaneity that sometimes only paper can provide.

As Townsend Wolfe, executive director of the Arkansas Arts Center when this show was mounted in 1984, states in an essay accompaniment to the exhibition catalog, a work on paper or drawing "not only shows us the search, but can often be the promised land as well, giving insights and visions not always reachable in other mediums."

A drawing doesn't always have to be a sketchpad or study of an artist's final work, but can in and of itself be finished. It's hard to imagine Robert Arneson's "Pic," contemporary crayon and pencil on paper, 1978, being any more confrontational and direct in another medium. In fact, the somewhat brutal line and finishing of Arneson's oversized drawing serves to increase its effect.

Bill North, curator at the Beach museum, said most artists who work seriously on paper do so because they are attracted to the material.

"Probably, none of these artists were selecting paper for financial reasons. Paper is much more intimate," North said. "A lot of these works are ways for artists to work out and formulate new ideas. So, in that sense you might view them as being related to other work, but not in the sense of being a study of another work."

"The wonderful thing about this is there is such a wide range of materials used in handling," North said.

Everything from tempera to pencil to watercolor to crayon is employed, but each work seems to conform to the elemental necessities of the paper. The exhibition was curated in the early 1980s, so very contemporary work is not included.

Gallery manager Lindsey Smith's clever installation, which takes up the greater part of the Beach galleries, is unseemingly crucial to a better appreciation of the drawings — with special attention given to interesting juxtapositions: Motherwell's "Elegy Drawing No. 17," acrylic and ink on mylar, 1977, eerily follows the rhythm of Sidney Goodman's "Interview," watercolor and pencil on paper, 1973, albeit in a more abstracted way.

It is these subtle connections that glue the exhibition together and provide visual links, which clarify the purposes and frames of vision, for each artist. After all, what fine line does separate artists who are contemporaries? But you won't find too much work that is too similar to each other.

Perhaps one could assume the most talked-about piece might be Roy DeForest's "K-9 Cops," pastel, pencil and colored pencil on paper, 1974. The work's childish nature and naive technique will surely elicit "I can do that" comments.

"It's challenging the prevailing notions of the establishment," North said.

"It's meant to provoke that kind of response. It poses a number of questions, what is art, and that whole can of worms."

While that question might have been more urgent in the 1970s when DeForest completed the work, it still rings true in Kansas. It makes an almost purely educational show like this one important for a university campus.

▶ AURASCOPE BY C. ERA SAILER

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Don't let yourself be dismissed. You might be feeling like a bit of a wallflower lately, and it isn't you. It might be a sign that you are unappreciated. Seek change whenever possible, and if you find a good real estate deal on a remote island somewhere less populated than the Arctic, that is the place for you.

ARIES (March 20-April 19) Be gentle and especially receptive to those in the supporting roles of your life. Don't let a bad case of self-absorption leave others feeling neglected and resenting your still-warped sense of empowerment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Use a much-needed rest for perspective. Seek balance rather than perfection, or set yourself up for failure. Expectations set too high might sabotage your good intentions. Give yourself a little patience.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) For someone so withdrawn, you've inadvertently made a lot more friends than you realize. Keep an open mind about all friendships. Love is lurking all around you. It's just a matter of taking the chance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be confrontational whenever the opportunity arises. Try to get in the habit of defending yourself. You might be doubting your intuition too much and giving lovers power they don't know what to do with.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Take all new information with at least a tablespoon of salt. Your introspective calm might be taken for snobbery and judgment. It might be a more accurate read than you would like to believe about yourself.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Put the gun down.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) If spring break was more traumatic than midterms, you might need to cut yourself more of a break than you feel you deserve. Do it anyway. Keep your ego in check or martyrdom is at hand.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Don't let spring fever devour academic momentum. You've always been able to dodge responsibility, but there is nowhere left to hide. You're going to have to start taking the long way, whether you do it gracefully or bitching all the way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Try not to forget that most of the stress in your life you volunteer for. If you had the option you would always hand pick the hassles. You thrive on it. Admit it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) The paradox that is you is going to get a little disorienting. Your extremes are choking your attempts at order. Stop intimidating yourself with unrealistic standards that don't motivate you but diminish your accomplishments.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Your legend-in-your-own-mirror routine is getting really old with those around you. You might be alienating those you're trying to impress — or conquer might be a better choice of words.

STUMBLING BLOCKS

Amy Howe, 25, was the victim of a hit-and-run driver in Washington, D. C., and suffered a broken leg. Three witnesses immediately supplied police with the car's tag number, and shortly afterward Howe's husband used public records to identify for police the car that was assigned that tag.

In September 1996, upon inquiry by the Washington Post, a police spokesman said that despite having the pertinent information virtually handed to it, the department was only then almost ready to begin its investigation.

Lawyers ascertain Kaczynski received unfair attention

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The FBI ignored other Unabomber suspects in its attempt to build a case against former mathematics professor Theodore Kaczynski, his lawyers claim.

Kaczynski's lawyers said in court papers filed Friday that at least 12 other suspects were being investigated at the time the FBI searched Kaczynski's cabin in the hinterlands of Montana.

While the FBI claims it eliminated all other suspects through the gathering of evidence, the lawyers disagree and have asked for more information on other suspects.

"The defense identified at least 12 serious Unabom suspects where the FBI apparently neither conducted further investigation nor obtained additional evidence that indicated the person should no longer be considered a priority suspect when the search warrant was issued," according a brief in support of their request.

Kaczynski's lawyers want files on more than 2,400 suspects examined by the FBI's Unabom task force during its many years of investigation.

Federal prosecutors oppose the request, saying hundreds of documents that include information on potential suspects have already been made available to the defense.

A hearing on the request is scheduled for Tuesday in federal court.

Kaczynski, 54, was arrested April 3 at his cabin near Lincoln, Mont., and is being kept in the Sacramento County jail.

He is accused of four bombings that left two people dead a decade apart and two others maimed. He also has been indicted in New Jersey in the bombing death of an advertising executive.

Prosecutors believe Kaczynski is responsible for all 16 of the Unabomber explosions since 1978 that injured 23 people. Investigators dubbed the case Unabom because early targets were universities and airlines.

A place to call home

STORIES BY CORY MORGAN

Apartment fair to offer students chance to shop for housing

Imagine living in an apartment that has a sauna, swimming pool, large bedrooms and numerous bathrooms. It is close to campus and rents for a low price.

OK, so this is a fantasy.

There are still living arrangements available out there. One of the best ways to find a place to live next year is the apartment fair.

The apartment fair will be Tuesday and Wednesday in the K-State Student Union, and it will consist of a variety of activities and speakers.

"I think that the fair will be beneficial to both the students and the owners of the complexes," Todd O'Donnell, senior in family consumer economics, said.

"Students will have the opportunity to look at different complexes at a very convenient spot and learn information about them there. It will save students the hassle of looking around."

On Tuesday, the apartment fair will be from 2 to 4 p.m. in the Big 12 room.

The agenda is set to discuss the basic information about renting an apartment and the different aspects of living off campus.

Featured speakers will talk about the regulations of renting apartments and the legal problems that arise between tenants, landlords and roommates.

Pat Ball, city code inspector, will speak about the regulations of renting apartments, and Dianne Urban, student attorney, will speak about the legal issues of renting apartments.

Wednesday, the apartment fair will move to the Union alcove. It will be from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Representatives from property management companies will be at the fair to present their living arrangements to students.

"To my knowledge, this is the first time that the apartment fair will be visible to the student population," O'Donnell said.

Directory provides information about apartments, management agencies

The perfect apartment is out there somewhere. Finding it is the problem. The Apartment Directory might help.

Todd O'Donnell, senior in family consumer economics, is director of the Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs for the Office of Student Activities and Services.

He put together a booklet about available apartments and has been working on this project since last May.

"My long-term goal is to make the apartment directory a yearly publication," O'Donnell said.

The apartment directory is a booklet of local apartment complexes and property management companies, such as McCullough Development Inc. and the Curtin Company, that are available for rent.

The booklet contains photographs of the complexes and gives a description of what each one has to offer.

"This is the first year that the apartment directory has been published," O'Donnell said.

"In the past, a sheet with the phone numbers of complexes was distributed. This year, the directory is more visual and convenient. All a student needs to do is call and find out if openings are still available."

The directory has been out since the beginning of February and is available at the OSAS.

It is also available at Dillons and Food-4-Less and is sent to incoming students who request access to living arrangements off campus.

O'Donnell said the apartments are in a variety of locations, ranging from close to campus to the west side of town.

As for the demand for apartments, O'Donnell said he thought that the demand was pretty high.

Most students who come in at mid-semester rent an apartment, O'Donnell said. He also said other students just rent apartments on the basis of convenience and luxury.

The Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs offers a variety of services to students.

It handles information on landlord/tenant rights and responsibilities, mediates roommate disputes and offers a roommate-matching service.

The office also conducts an off-campus housing search and can help resolve consumer complaints on products and services.

Manhattan to assist residents during annual clean-up program

CORI HERBERS
staff reporter

Manhattan residents will be able to do some outdoor cleaning during the 1997 annual Manhattan Spring Clean-Up program.

"The clean-up program is a two-fold program," said Chuck Williams, assistant director of public works and transportation for Manhattan. "The city will pick up all the yard waste like grass clippings, leaves, tree limbs and branches."

The city will only pick up trash if the waste is paper bags that can be purchased at a variety of retail stores in Manhattan.

"The reason the waste must be in those specific bags is because we can put the bags directly in the compost pile at the Riley County transfer station. We will not pick them up in regular plastic bags or boxes," Williams said.

Last year during the program, the city picked up more than 230 loads of yard waste material.

"We had a very successful program last year, and it was a large project," he said.

The second part of the program is a public-private partnership with the seven local refuse companies.

"The refuse haulers will pick up the remainder of the stuff the city used to pick up, items like old chairs, lawn mowers and junk in the yard," Williams said.

The refuse haulers will collect all trash and debris for their respective customers, and will pick up the debris at the normal location where trash is picked up.

"The city will pay them for the extra loads that they will haul during the week. It saves us a considerable amount of money because we don't have to pay for the labor. Last year the refuse contractors picked up a total of 100 tons of material," Williams said.

If citizens do not have a contract for refuse services with one of the firms, they will be responsible for their own disposal.

The spring clean-up will run from today to Friday.

For more information call the Manhattan Public Works Department at 537-4540.

SENATE

when you're representing K-State, they should be excused."

Jill Hayhurst, Senate vice chair, said senators should realize when they are elected that Senate is a responsibility.

"To represent your students, you know what you have to do. Senate is a time commitment," she said.

Hayhurst said the definition of what is excused changes every year, but they are straightforward.

"Every senator knows the rules, and it's up to you to use your discretion."

Shager said he did not understand the attendance policy.

"I thought you could have three. It was just a simple mistake," he said. "I misinterpreted it."

THE OKLAHOMA CITY BOMBING
THE TRIAL TO HEAL THE HEARTLAND

Jury selection begins for McVeigh trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — In a courtroom protected by barricades and armed guards, Oklahoma City bombing defendant Timothy McVeigh gazed intently at potential jurors Monday as they spoke of their willingness to impose the death penalty for the deadliest terrorist attack ever on U.S. soil.

McVeigh, wearing a buzz haircut, an open-collared blue shirt and khakis, smiled and shook his attorney's hand as he was brought into the courtroom from a basement holding cell for the start of jury selection. He nodded and mouthed "Good morning" through a grin when the judge introduced him to potential jurors.

But during detailed and excruciatingly slow questioning, McVeigh's stare tightened over his folded hands as prospective jurors discussed how they could recommend execution if he is convicted in the April 19, 1995, blast that killed 168 people and injured hundreds more.

McVeigh

"It's hard to place yourself in the role of deciding the fate of another human being on these terms," said a middle-aged man identified only as No. 858. "Yet there has to be some ultimate price to pay."

The self-employed financial adviser said he has not formed an opinion about McVeigh but believes there might be other suspects who have not been arrested.

"There are elements, potentially people out there that are ancillary to this case, that might want to make their strength and presence felt," he said.

The man, who once lived in Tulsa, Okla., said he visited the bombing site before the gutted shell of the building was demolished, feeling "I guess all the things a normal human being would feel. I think I cried a little."

The second prospective juror questioned, a churchgoing woman in her 60s, said she too cried and prayed for the victims as she watched television coverage of the bombing. Her dominant memory of McVeigh was the footage of him in an orange jail jumpsuit being led out of a county jail in Oklahoma.

"I felt very sorry for him," she said. "For such a young man to waste his life."

McVeigh attorney Stephen Jones then asked: "You didn't feel sorry because they arrested the wrong man?"

"I didn't know," she said.

As the prospective jurors took the stand to talk about everything from their view of the justice system to their opinions on the O.J. Simpson case, they were hidden behind a partial wall from nearly everyone in the audience section of the courtroom. U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch has promised the prospective jurors that their privacy will be protected during the questioning.

Given the slow pace — only four potential jurors were questioned by midafternoon — it could take two weeks or more for lawyers to choose 12 jurors and six alter-

Practicing for the finals of the National Cheerleading Association, Classy Cats take spring break a week later as they are

DAYTONA BOUND

THE CLASSY CATS dance team will be competing in the National Cheerleading Association finals this week in Florida. This is the first year the squad has advanced to the finals.

Spring break might be over for most students, but 13 K-State athletes will soon be Daytona bound.

The Classy Cats dance team is competing in the finals of the National Cheerleading Association in Florida this week.

This will be the team's first time at the national competition. It has been working since October on the routine that it hopes will bring K-State a good reputation.

"We really don't know what we're up against," Kelli Sweeney, junior in kinesiology, said "but we've all worked so hard to get this far. At the least we will make K-State known."

The Cats will compete for top honors against 19 other squads in the Florida competition.

"Inexperience is probably our biggest problem," Hope Encinias, junior in kinesiology, said. "We haven't been this far before, but I really think that we'll be in the top 10."

To make it to the finals the dance team had to compete for bids at an NCA camp in Nebraska last summer the Cats' coach, Barbara Leiker said.

"Twenty-four girls went to camp," she said. "We brought home the bid. Two girls were asked to teach there, and we brought home some other trophies. That shows what these girls have accomplished."

Since then the Cats have worked non-stop to perfect their routine and fund their trip.

"We have sacrificed a lot to get this far," Gina Spilker, junior in public health nutrition, said. "We gave up spring break for pain and bruises. We have given up all of our free time since October. We're very proud of what we've done."

The team's routine is more difficult than the dances they usually perform, Dena Fox, junior in dance therapy and gerontology, said.

HOPE ENCINIAS, junior in kinesiology, and the rest of the Classy Cats dance team practice the routine they will perform in the national competition in Florida this week.

"This is a very hard routine," she said. "It's very technical and really fast. We're doing some steps that we just can't do on a football field."

To pay for the Daytona trip, the team has done a variety of fundraisers around Manhattan.

"We've done clinics at the mall," Spilker said. "We had car washes, a silent auction at the fraternity houses, and we have to thank all of the people and businesses that have made donations to help us."

The squad faces other challenges besides the other teams in the competition.

"Sometimes it's hard just to work together," Spilker said. "We each have our different dance styles and our own personalities. We argue and fight about things constantly, but in the end it's teamwork all the way."

Everything seems to be coming together as the competition draws closer, Leiker said.

"The girls are putting a lot of energy and time into this," she said. "They've come a very long way since the beginning. We will let everyone know that there is another dance team in Kansas besides KU."

Final election decides future of 6 local seats

DAVID FAIRBANKS
staff reporter

Manhattan residents can cast their votes today in the final election for City Commission and Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board positions.

Jolene Campbell, deputy county clerk, said the polls will open at 7 a.m. and stay open until 7 p.m.

There are three spots available for both the City Commission and the school board.

The six candidates running for City Commission are Breta Bloomberg-Ellis, Ed Klimek, Karen McCulloh, Mary Nichols, Roger Reitz and Edith Stunkel.

Running for the three available school board positions are Sue Boxer, Beverly Eversmeyer, Jeffrey Johnson, Michael Penrod, Flordie Pettis and Meryl Wilson.

Manhattan residents are eligible to vote for both school board and City Commission spots. Those who live outside the city limits will only be able to vote for the school board positions, Campbell said.

Edith Stunkel, city commissioner, said the newly elected commissioners will receive different terms.

"In the City Commission election, the top two vote-getters will receive four-year terms. The third highest vote getter will get a two-year term," she said.

Candidates elected to the three school board positions will receive four-year terms, Campbell said.

There are 31 polls within the city limits where Manhattan residents can cast their votes for both the City Commission and school board.

There is also a poll in Derby Food Center for registered K-State students and faculty.

Four polls at Woodrow Wilson School, Northview School, Roosevelt School and St. Thomas More Church are open to out-of-town voters.

▶ Time to vote. Don't forget to vote today for City Commission and Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board positions. Polls are open 7 a.m.-7 p.m. with 31 poll locations within Manhattan city limits.

SGA office wins national award

BENJAMIN YODER
city government editor

The Student Governing Association was chosen as best in the nation for the second time in three years by the National Association of Campus Activities.

Kathleen Copple, graduate assistant, said winning the award shows that K-State has more than football and academics to bring attention to the University.

Copple said SGA involves more than Student Senate and the Office of Student Activities and Services. She said the definition of SGA includes all students.

"There are so many students involved in SGA," she said. "It affects every member of this campus."

Copple said the 200-page applications and hours of work by the OSAS workers and herself was worth it.

"For me, winning is the icing on the cake," she said. "It's great to give something back to the University."

Copple said the University gives a lot of decision-making power to SGA, and it deals with millions of dollars every year.

"Our SGA deals with things that others don't," she said. "We pretty much overwhelmed them."

Student Body President Chris Hansen said SGA is heavily involved with the state legislature and the Kansas Board of Regents. He also said SGA advocates for students in city affairs.

"It's depth and breadth," he said.

Aaron Otto, student body vice president, agreed SGA dealt with a variety of things.

"We do a lot of everything," he said.

Senate narrowly passes concealed handgun bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate argued all afternoon Monday, then narrowly passed a bill that would allow Kansans to carry concealed handguns.

"What right do we have to deny people the right to defend themselves in the manner they choose?" asked Sen. Janice Hardenburger, R-Haddam, a principal supporter of the bill.

The bill was passed on a 22-18 vote after being advanced to final action on a voice vote. It went back to the House, which has passed it, to consider Senate amendments.

Senate president Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, opposed the bill.

"I vote no because my concern is when Mom and Dad come home and open up their purse or take off their gun," Bond said. "I cry for the children of Kansas who will die."

Sen. Sherman Jones, D-Kansas City, also opposed the bill.

"I believe this bill systematically excludes the poor," Jones said.

• HOUSE APPROVES MILITARY VETERANS LICENSE PLATES.

TOPEKA — The House has passed a bill that would allow military veterans to buy distinctive Kansas license plates.

The bill, approved on a 123-0 vote Monday, would make the plates available to all honorably discharged veterans. The plates would be issued for the same period and at the same cost as regular license plates.

The bill passed the Senate last week and went to Gov. Bill Graves for his signature.

The bill also has a provision that would simplify the marketing of distinctive license plates by universities. It eliminates the requirement that universities provide the state Division of Motor Vehicles a list of people who have paid the royalty fee for the plates.

Under current law, only K-State has met the requirements to issue a license plate. About 900 have been made.

Applicants would receive a statement of authorization from the university and apply at the county treasurer's office for the plates.

• NETANYAHU OPTIMISTIC ABOUT PEACE TALKS WITH PALESTINIANS.

ZURIF, West Bank — Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said Monday that peace talks with the Palestinians could resume soon, his most optimistic comments since two weeks of violent protests in the West Bank and a suicide bombing in Israel.

Peace talks stalled this month after the Palestinians became angered by a series of decisions by Netanyahu — a smaller than hoped-for West Bank pullout and the construction of a new Jewish neighborhood in disputed east Jerusalem, the sector Palestinians claim as a future capital.

Scores of Palestinians have been wounded and one killed in the West Bank riots, which Israel says have been largely orchestrated by Arafat's Fatah group.
In the village of Zurif on Monday, Israel's army destroyed the home of the suicide bomber who killed three Israelis this month in an attack in a Tel Aviv cafe. Near the West Bank city of Jenin, Palestinian teen-agers stoned Israeli jeeps and Israeli soldiers responded with rubber bullets, injuring at least six.

• SURVIVORS, HEIRS SEEK BILLIONS IN UNPAID INSURANCE CLAIMS.

NEW YORK — A $7-billion lawsuit was filed Monday accusing numerous European insurance companies of cheating Holocaust survivors and their heirs by refusing to honor policies sold before and during World War II.

Some of the assets were instead released to Nazis who remained in Germany or fled to other lands, the class-action lawsuit filed in federal court alleged.

Recent disclosures of archived documents referring to bank deposits of Holocaust victims provided the basis for the case, the lawsuit said.

It said families of people later victimized in the Holocaust had purchased life, disability and property policies from companies based in Austria, Germany, France and Italy.

The companies later explained that they could not pay claims because they could not locate policies, or because policies were canceled after policyholders stopped paying premiums, the lawsuit alleged.

The lawsuit was filed on behalf of anyone who bought life, property or casualty insurance policies between 1920 and 1945 and whose policy proceeds were wrongfully withheld. The suit estimated that the plaintiffs number more than 10,000.

• MAN KILLS ESTRANGED WIFE, SELF BEFORE EASTER BREAKFAST.

ROYALTON, N.Y. — A man told his three children to wait in the family room. Then, he fatally shot his estranged wife and killed himself after she arrived at his house for Easter breakfast.

Alan Foster, 45, told the children he needed to speak with their mother in an upstairs dining room. The children, ages 15, 9 and 7, heard three loud noises Sunday and the slamming of a door, police said.

Lynn Foster, 44, was shot three times in the chest with a 12-gauge shotgun at the home about 30 miles northeast of Buffalo, Niagara County sheriff's Inspector Edward Stefik said.

Arizona crowned champion after upsetting Kentucky

INDIANAPOLIS — Now there's only one No. 1 left for the Arizona Wildcats — themselves.

Arizona, the team that was supposed to be a year away, just needed an extra five minutes to win its first NCAA basketball championship.

Led by the backcourt of junior Miles Simon and freshman Mike Bibby, Arizona kept Kentucky from repeating as national champion with an 84-79 overtime victory Monday night.

With three juniors, a sophomore and a freshman in the starting lineup, next year was supposed to be the one for Arizona. Instead, the Wildcats (25-9) made their first championship appearance a thrilling one in a game featuring 20 ties and 18 lead changes.

Fourth-seeded Arizona became the first team in tournament history to knock off three No. 1 seeds — Kansas, North Carolina and now Kentucky, the winningest programs in college basketball history.

"We just wanted it more than them," Simon, the game's MVP, said. "Their legs were dragging, they were in foul trouble. We just wanted it more."

Kentucky was trying to become the second repeat champion since UCLA's stretch of seven straight titles ended in 1973. Duke repeated as champion in 1992.

"It's been the most fun I've ever had as a coach," Kentucky's Rick Pitino said. "I walked off the court feeling very proud."

Instead, Arizona won the first overtime championship game since Michigan beat Seton Hall 80-79 in 1989. Arizona reached the Final Four with an overtime win against Providence in the Southeast regional.

"The thing that I'm so pleased about is this is a tough group of Cats," Arizona coach Lute Olson said. "At halftime, we talked about the toughest team mentally and physically would win the basketball game."

Simon, who missed the first 11 games of the season because of academic problems, finished with 30 points. Bibby, the son of former UCLA star Henry Bibby, who won three college championships himself as a player, had 14 of his 19 points in the second half.

Arizona became the losingest team to win it all since Kansas was 27-11 in 1988.

One of the wildest final minutes of regulation in NCAA Tournament history set up the overtime.

Bibby made two free throws with 1:01 left to give Arizona a 72-68 lead. Ron Mercer, Kentucky's hero in last season's championship game, then hit a three-pointer with 51 seconds left to bring Kentucky within one.

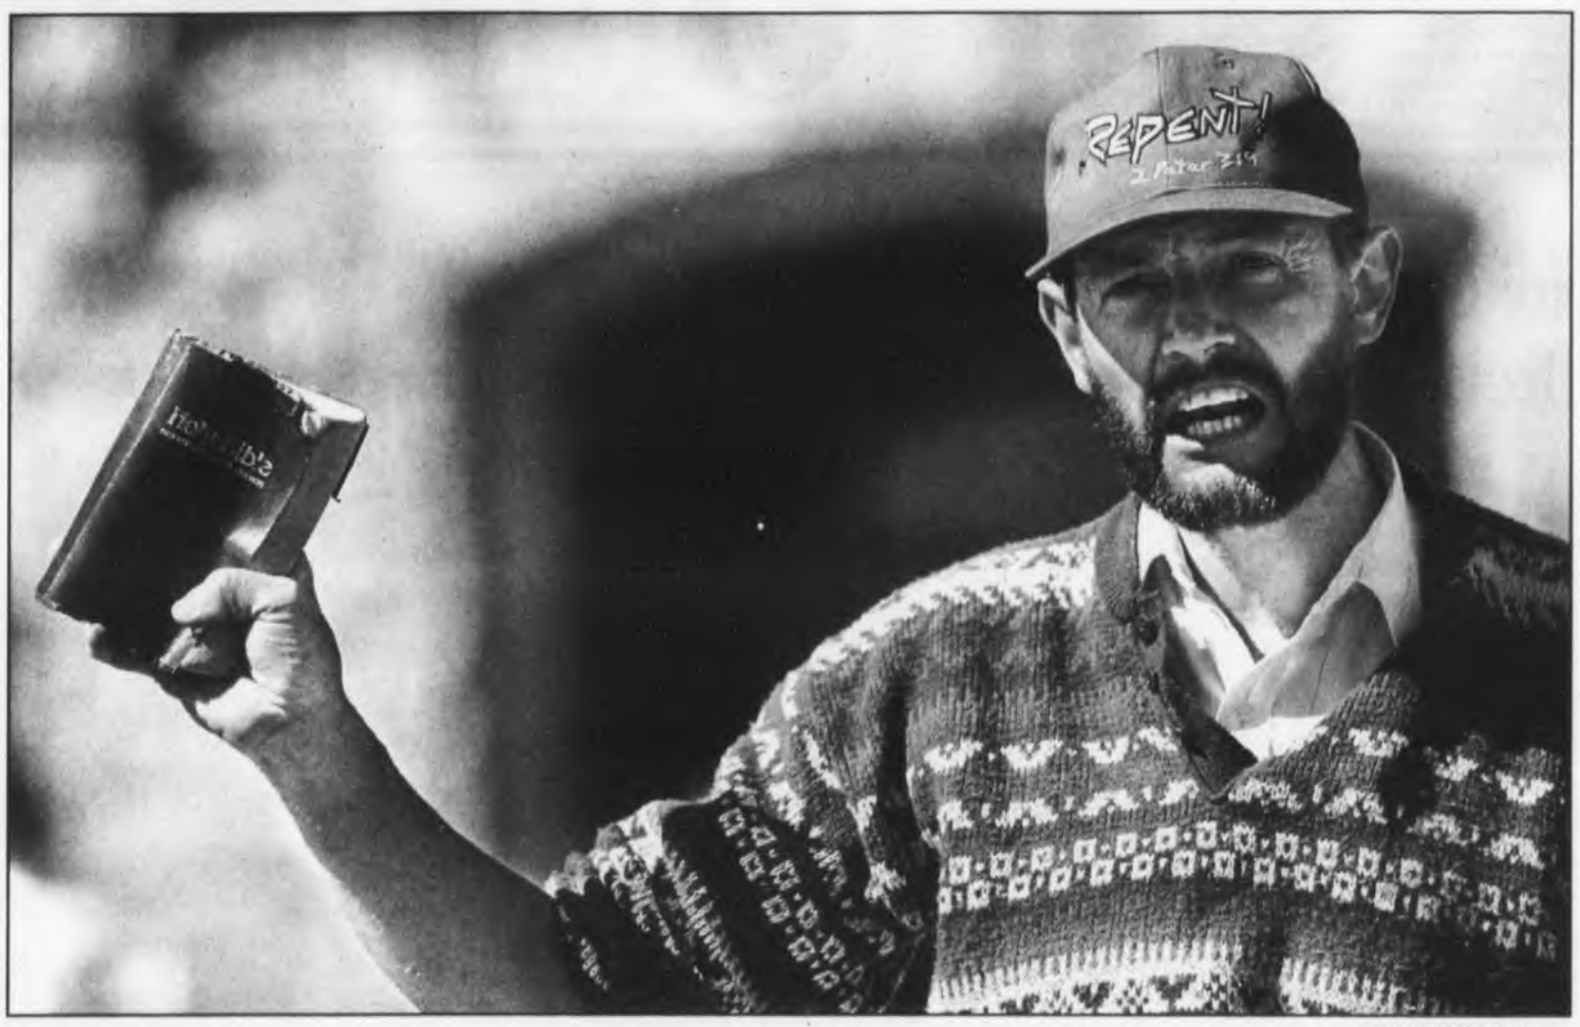
Bibby stood out near halfcourt dribbling the ball as the shot clock wound down. He finally made a move with seven seconds left on it and found Bennett Davison for a layup that made it 74-71 with 18 seconds left.

Anthony Epps wasted no time in tying it, hitting a three-pointer with 12 seconds to play.

Arizona's final chance to win in regulation ended when Simon turned over a drive with two seconds left.

The overtime was a free-throw shooting contest for Arizona, which scored all 10 of its points from the foul line. Davison hit the first two with 25 seconds gone to give Arizona the lead for good.

Kentucky (35-5) made just two field goals in the overtime, a basket by Epps with 1:46 left and a three-pointer by Cameron Mills with 6.4 seconds remaining that just made it close.



Simon, who scored 24 points in the semifinals, was named the tournament's outstanding player. He finished 14-for-17 from the free-throw line.

Arizona finished 34-for-41 from the line, compared to Kentucky's 9-for-17.

Scott Padgett led Kentucky with 17 points, 10 in the final five minutes of regulation.

Mercer, who struggled by shooting 7-for-21 and scoring 19 points in the semifinal win over Minnesota, finished with 13 on 5-for-9 shooting and had nine rebounds. Mills and Nazr Mohammed each had 12 points for Kentucky and Mohammed grabbed 11 rebounds.

The lightning-quick pace everyone expected wasn't there, but both teams played solid defense throughout. The game was decided by one of the backcourts, Bibby and Simon, even though they had 11 turnovers compared to two by the Kentucky guards.

This was Carlisle's third visit to K-State, and he is planning to stop at the University of Kansas today.

3 K-State students named Goldwater scholars

SHAWN T. DENTON
staff reporter

Three K-State students have carried on the tradition of academic excellence by being awarded Barry M. Goldwater Scholarships.

John Carpenter, junior in physics, chemistry and math; Wendy Reeves, junior in microbiology; and Lance Davidson, senior in biochemistry, were each awarded $14,000 in scholarship money for their junior and senior years.

"It was a mild shock," Reeves said. "I knew I had a good chance of getting it because of our record, but it was still a mild surprise."

K-State ranks first in the nation for public universities in producing Goldwater scholars.

Beth Powers, scholarship adviser, said the combination of determined students and faculty was one reason K-State produced this number of Goldwater winners.

"I'm extremely proud of them and excited for them," she said.

"They have worked extremely hard to work on their academic records and also in their research work. They are being justly rewarded for their efforts," Powers said.

Congress formed the Goldwater Scholarship for students who are in the fields of science, math and engineering.

"It promotes exposure in the fields to give students the potential to increase the understanding of the fields and funding from their work," Carpenter said.

Powers said students had to go through an application process in which they were asked questions about their reasons for applying, their job histories and their motivation for entering math, science and engineering fields.

Students had a second part of the application process that required them to write an essay about a specific problem in their field of study.

"Each of them has done significant research in their studies and taken demanding courses, and they are doing well in them," Powers said.

Court questions Mississippi's motor voter registration rules

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Ruling in a Motor Voter law dispute, the Supreme Court today jeopardized Mississippi's effort to remain the nation's only state with separate registration procedures for federal and state elections.

The justices, by a unanimous vote, said the state must get Justice Department approval for how it implemented the federal law that took effect in 1995.

The Motor Voter law, formally named the National Voter Registration Act, allows voters to register when getting driver's licenses or applying for welfare benefits.

The law has been extremely successful. More than 5 million people were added to registration rolls in the first eight months, what some experts called the most massive short-term registration surge in the country's history.

An estimated 10,000 Mississippians registered under the federal law, but some of them might not be aware that the process entitled them to vote in federal elections only, not elections for state and local political offices.

The state still maintains a unified system in which voters can register for federal, state and local elections at the same time, but not at motor vehicle or welfare offices.

All 49 other states have adopted the Motor Voter law's procedures for state and local elections as well.

Four Mississippians challenged the state's dual-registration system, contending that any confusion it causes might result in discrimination against black voters.

A GUIDE TO SECTIONS OF THE COLLEGIAN OPINION PAGE

COLUMNS are opinions expressed by the columnists. The opinions are not necessarily the opinions of the Collegian.

City Commission race affects students, so vote

We at the Collegian think today's race for City Commission makes no difference. The commission has no effect on student's lives and regardless of who wins, K-State will get the same treatment.

So don't worry about voting today.

April Fools.

More than 700 on-campus residents are registered to vote, but only seven of them dragged themselves to the polls in Derby Food Complex for the primary. You would think the commission made no difference in students' lives.

Students might be temporary residents of Manhattan, but even as short-term citizens ,they are affected by commission decisions.

Since the city annexed the University, the 20,000 students on campus have been subject to city sales taxes and benefited by programs funded by those taxes.

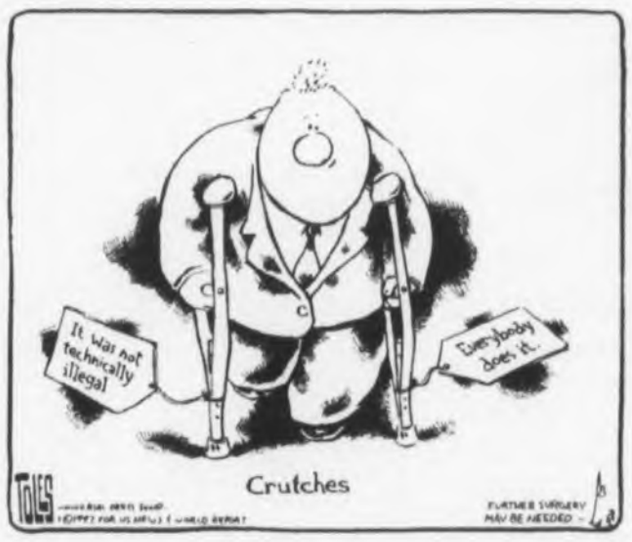
The City/University Projects Fund has paid for bicycle parking and paths, campus lighting, a K-State/Manhattan Public Library project, student escort services, University gardens and a traffic signal at College and Kimball avenues.

Commissioners affect utility bills, sales taxes, rent, businesses, bars, parks, development and roads, just for starters.

Some of the candidates even have ties to the University. Karen McCulloh works at the library, Mary Nichols works in the speech department and Edith Stunkel works part-time in the Center for Aging.

If you don't know where to vote, contact the Riley County Clerk at 537-6300 for your precinct's voting location.

And for the campus residents who should have voted last time, now's your chance to make up for your mistake. Six hundred and ninety-three votes is more than enough to change the course of the election.



You've got the power — use it.

VIVA LA$ VEGA$

Arid Atlantic City breeds gambling bugs

Thank the Almighty that Manhattan doesn't have a casino.

I've rolled across the great American desert to the city of sin and returned to tell the tale.

I didn't see any gangsters, hookers, pimps or abusive cops. What I saw was vermin and thieves going by the names of MGM Grand Hotel and Casino; Treasure Island Hotel and Casino; Circus Circus Hotel, Casino and Theme Park and all the rest.

All these casinos have been constructed for one purpose — to take our money. They rest in the sleaziest city I have ever had the privilege to visit--Las Vegas.

If you have any addictive tendencies, I would suggest you do not venture out to Vegas anytime soon. However, if you can maintain some hint of self control, by all means meander on out there and take it in for yourself.

I've always held the fundamental belief that humans are for the most part thinking people;therefore, they should be allowed to make their own decisions. If a motorcyclist does not want to wear a helmet, it is that person's choice. If a person doesn't want to wear a seat belt, the same rationale applies.

As long as the person is not harming anyone else, let him destroy himself — it is, after all, his choice. Vegas has began to make me question that once fundamental philosophy.

Gambling, or gaming, as the vermin prefer to call it, is a more potent drug than either nicotine or crack. People in Vegas sit at tables all hours of the night in the silly hopes that they will somehow win their personal fortune.

They keep giving their money to the casinos, and the casinos keep building and building, throwing up more and more casinos all across this nation.

Coming soon to a city near you ...

Drive to Kansas City, Mo., or Des Moines, Iowa, and you'll find casinos with their neon lights shimmering off the river waters. As if placing the casinos on the water justifies them somehow.

Along with the rivers, it seems like it has become a federal law that all Indian reservations must have a casino on the premises.

At least Native Americans are finally making some money off the desolate land the federal government forced them to live on.

Would it not reek with irony if their casinos made enough money for them to buy some of the land back? Then they could force us to live on the filthiest earth this country offers.

The Station Casino in Kansas City, Mo., offers a play facility for all the youngsters. Their parents come in and roll the dice, spin the wheel and throw away their weekly grocery money. Who needs to eat, anyway, when you can play blackjack?

I know it sounds as if I'm against gambling. I'm not. It just nauseates me to watch some haggard middled-aged man gamble when he can't afford it.

Go to Vegas and gamble for fun.

Take a set amount, lose it and quit.

If you expect to win, you are definitely going home broker than a college student with a drug habit.

I tried it both ways over break. I went to Vegas intending to lose $100. After some epic battles at the blackjack table, I managed to accomplish my goal.

A hundred bucks didn't break me. I can still pay rent this month.

However, when I was in back in Kansas City, Mo., a few fellow K-Staters and I moseyed out to the boats.

The majority of us had previously tasted the heart thumping exhilaration of being up on the casinos only to squander our minuscule fortune.

This taste gave us the intention of winning, no matter how much money we had to give them to do it.

Within 20 minutes, the majority of us had lost the amount we had planned to lose and were already digging into our pockets for more cash.

I learned my lesson — no more gambling for me.

Logic of Manhattan traffic lights flickers under scrutiny

VIEWPOINT

JONATHAN WINKLER

JONATHAN WINKLER is a senior in mathematics, physics and English. You can e-mail your comments to Jonathan at (winkler@phys.ksu.edu).

Street design and traffic management in Manhattan is a felonious embarrassment.

The city engineers' crimes are varied and many. But stoplight synchronization presents by far the most serious problem and offers the most productive opportunities for improvement.

At this writing ,there are no fewer than eight stoplights on Tuttle Creek Boulevard between the interchange with Kansas Highway 177 and the Kimball Avenue intersection, inclusive.

In that interval, the speed limit on northbound Tuttle Creek begins at 35 mph near the interchange, drops to 30 mph before the Leavenworth Road intersection and finally rises to 50 mph en route to the Bluemont Avenue light. But on southbound Tuttle Creek, the limit drops to 40 mph right after Bluemont.

It is therefore impossible to synchronize the traffic signals on Tuttle Creek so as to obtain satisfactory traffic flow in both directions.

Consequently, most northbound drivers, once they have cleared the Poyntz Avenue and Leavenworth lights, ignore the speed limit and make a mad dash to Bluemont in hopes that the Bluemont and McCall Road lights will be green at the same time.

If the Bluemont light happens to be red on arrival, more often than not, the McCall light a few hundred yards beyond is a maddening green.

Worse yet, there comes a point in their respective cycles when both lights are green at the same time (the traffic light version of "beats").

Too often, another mad dash results in which motorists fly through the fresh green at Bluemont to make the elderly green at McCall before it turns yellow, and in so doing put themselves at risk of colliding with slower-moving traffic turning onto Tuttle Creek from McCall.

A similar situation exists on Bluemont, where the closely spaced Third Street and Tuttle Creek lights operate on different cycles, so that one of three things happens — (a.) motorists speed to get through both lights before one changes to yellow; (b.) cars accumulate in a mass behind the Third Street light; or (c.) a similar queue forms on the other side of the Third Street light, which jams traffic both on Bluemont and Third.

Circumstance (c.) is gridlock in the original and purest sense of the term. It's not an alien event confined to Boston and New York, but rather something that happens here every day owing to stupid street design.

These Eastern cities must cope with streets laid out centuries before the invention of the automobile and the emergence of the commuter culture, but Manhattan has no similar excuse.

Synchronization becomes possible not only on Tuttle Creek but also on Bluemont and Fort Riley Boulevard if the speed limit is made uniform in both directions on the strip of Tuttle Creek between Bluemont and Leavenworth.

Forty-five mph is a good compromise that enables drivers to begin speeding up as they approach the hill from the south or slowing down as they approach Manhattan Town Center from the north.

Under such an arrangement, a person could drive all the way from Rosencutter Avenue and around the curve to the most northerly light on Tuttle Creek, at Kimball Avenue, without encountering a single red.

Similarly, another motorist could go down Anderson/Bluemont all the way from Frank Anneberg Park and Sports Complex to Tuttle Creek, hitting green at every light on the way.

A number of problems would simply vanish.

Auto emissions, which spike through the roof when engines idle or accelerate (in so-called open-loop operation), would drop radically.

Synchronization itself would discourage speeding because speeders would reach traffic signals too soon, before the lights turned green.

Traffic on Tuttle Creek would organize itself into more loosely spaced platoons of cars rather than clots of tailgaters, and so mitigate the hazards of the Ehlers and Holiday roads intersections.

Circumstance (c.) is gridlock in the original and purest sense of the term. It's not an alien event confined to Boston and New York, but rather something that happens here every day owing to stupid

Synchronization would also force Manhattan to abandon arrows-only turn signals because requiring motorists to wait for the arrow, rather than permitting them to turn with green when the oncoming lanes are clear, unnecessarily congests the turn lanes.

Manhattan should look to other communities in Kansas as models for improvement.

Wichita, which synchronizes traffic signals on most of its streets and uses arrows-optional rather than arrows-only turn signals, has several times the population of Manhattan but fewer traffic problems now that McLean Boulevard has been realigned.

Women's golf team finishes 3rd at tourney in Springfield

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

Right after the final round of the Southwest Missouri State Women's Golf Invitational March 25 in Springfield, Mo., sophomore Jane Yi and junior Ann Slater were bowling over with laughter.

Yi tallied a 9-over-par 81 in the final 18 of a total 54 holes at the Millwood Golf and Racquet Club. Yi finished the tournament tied for second place with Slater, who hit a 12-over-par 84.

"I think it's a ridiculous score to get second place," Yi said. "I guess it was the conditions of the course and the weather, but everyone shot really high. I mean I was winning in junior golf with an 81."

Yi

Slater on the other hand found it suprising considering the conditions: wet, rainy and windy at times.

"It was wet, and I had a hard time getting started," she said. "It was funny because everyone was shooting bad because of the weather, but I guess Jane and I played well."

Give Yi and Slater credit. They finished higher than they have ever finished at K-State. Both Yi and Slater finished the tournament with a 30-over-par 246. The squad as a whole finished a 146-over-par 1010, just five strokes behind the winner of the three round tournament, KU.

As a whole, the women's team finished the tournament in third, behind Oral Roberts and KU. Despite the high finish, K-State head coach Kristi Knight said her squad had not been playing up to potential as of late.

Slater

"We had the best fall ever and had a lot of confidence after the season was over, but the spring has been somewhat of a disappointment, and that's the truth," Knight said. "We have not played up to our potential, and we have yet to get four good rounds of golf in."

Knight attributed the lack of low strokes to a weakness in the short game.

"Everybody's hitting the ball really well off the tee, but the short game is suffering," Knight said. "We drive well, but when we get close, we have trouble chipping it up there on the green and that's why we can't put those four good rounds together. We still have a real positive outlook, though."

Knight

With just two tournaments left in the season, the K-State golf team is out trying to develop its short game for before the Susie Maxwell Bering Classic in Norman, Okla., April 13.

"We all know we have to shoot better," Yi said. "We have to shoot in the 70s to be able to compete, particularly the low 70s."

Slater affirmed Knight's criticism when she said it was the short shots that weren't falling when the Cats needed those easy approach shots.

"I think putting is a major factor, especially at this time of the year," Slater said. "We all want to shave one or to strokes off our game on the green. That's what everyone is talking about. Once everyone leaves the green, they're saying they wish they could have stopped those three-puts."

To cut down on the poor short game, Slater said they continue to concentrate on just that in practice.

"We all know we have to get our shots down," Slater said.

Knight said she had been pleased with Yi's consistency, and said she had been the most consistent golfer to date. With the addition of Slater, sophomore Mitzi Taylor and freshman Carrie Chambers, Knight said she had secured her top four players.

"I consider them my best four players because they are usually the strongest and hit the best on the course," she said.

Knight said she saw few weaknesses so far this spring besides the short game and said she liked the fact that this year's squad is so young.

"A lot of them are really young and aren't playing under a lot of pressure," she said. "They can look at a fall and take experience for the next time."

One senior is on the squad, Danielle Hernandez, and one junior, Slater, while the other members of the squad are sophomores and a few freshman. Knight said the younger players can compete for spots on the travelling team.

After dropping 3 matches during break, the women's tennis team feels a Little remorse

YANA DORODNOVA, No. 1 singles player for the K-State tennis team, takes a break before being defeated by Wichita State. Dorodnova forced a tie-breaker set in K-State's match last week against BYU but the Cats lost the match 9-0 to the 19th-ranked Cougars.

There was no rest for the K-State women's tennis team during spring break. It lost three duals on the road during the week.

The first loss for the Cats came against conference foe Rice. The Cats dropped a narrow 5-4 decision to the 42nd-ranked Owls.

After sitting out of the Cats previous loss to Baylor, sophomore Yana Dorodnova returned after recovering from an ankle injury. Dorodnova improved her record to 8-2 with a 6-3, 6-3 win over No. 74 Paula Myslivecek.

"Yes, that was a big win for her against a ranked opponent and coming back from the injury," Cat coach Steve Bietau said. "I really thought she played pretty well."

The Cats and the Owls split the six singles matches, with the Cats picking up wins at No. 1, 3 and 4 spots.

The Owls took two of the three doubles matches to seal the win.

At No. 1 doubles, Dorodnova and senior Lena Piliptchak had their eight-match winning streak snapped with an 8-5 loss to Myslivecek and Charlotte Feasby.

Junior Chris Schulte and senior Karen Nicholson picked up a win at No. 2 doubles, 8-5, over Elie Lewis and Jessica Gagnon. Junior Dinah Watson and senior Nikki Lagerstrom fell in the deciding match, 8-6.

"This was a match that I think we could have definitely won," Bietau said. "Whether we should have or not, I don't have the answer for that."

The level of competition did not lessen for the Cats in their next dual, as they faced the 19th-ranked Brigham Young Cougars. The Cougars never let up, blanking the Cats 9-0.

The Cats didn't pick up a win in the dual, but many of the matches were close. Two singles matches went to three sets, and Dorodnova forced an epic tie-breaker set.

"An hour and a half into the dual, all of our matches were extremely close," Bietau said. "It was really up in the air who would pull out the wins.

"But two hours into the match, it was reversed. We weren't in it."

Playing against No. 29 Eline Chiew, Dorodnova forced a tie-breaker in the first set. The tie-breaker lasted 20 points before Chiew prevailed, 11-9. Chiew would go on to win the second set, 6-2.

"Yana fought real hard in the first set," Bietau said. She just didn't step up and hit the ground strokes the way she needed to. There was a little shot to her confidence after losing a tough, close tie-breaker and with her ankle not being at 100 percent."

Perhaps the closest match of the day came at the No. 5 singles spot where Schulte faced Shari Smith. After being down 2-5 in the first set, Schulte fought back and won the set in a tie-breaker.

After dropping the second set, Schulte was able to force another tie-breaker in the third set. Smith finally pulled out the close tie-breaker, 6-4, and won the match.

The Cats wrapped up their week with a 8-1 loss to the Utah Utes. In last year's NCAA's, the Cats beat the Utes 5-0.

But Bietau said this was a different Utes squad.

"They lost their No. 1 player, but they added some quality players at three and four," he said. "They are generally better in the lower end of their lineup than they were last season."

Dorodnova picked up the only win of the dual at the No. 1 singles spot. Dorodnova improved her record to 9-3 with a 6-4, 6-3 win over Linda Englblom.

In doubles action, Dorodnova and Piliptchak dropped their third consecutive match, 8-5, to Megan Payne and Kim Kelly.

Bietau said Dorodnova's injury was a factor in the duo's losing stretch.

"Because of her injury, Yana wasn't able to move much. She wasn't very active at the net," he said. "That put more pressure on Lena's serve.

It made it not as easy to hold serve. Their strength has been that they have been able to fight back in some matches. They are not at that level of play right now."

Despite the string of losses, the Cats know they still have a lot of play left in the season.

"We've just tried to tell them that we can still achieve our goals we set at the beginning of the season," restrictive earnings coach Jack Oxler said. "We still have plenty of time to help ourselves out."

Women's crew succesful in regattas during spring break

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

The K-State women's rowing team returned to Manhattan early Sunday morning after what head coach Jenny Hale called a great week of training.

"It was very successful, particularly for our coxswains who steer the boat," she said. "We had a great race against Texas, and it was good practice for the end of the week."

The women's crew had a double-dual meet against Texas and Minnesota, both club teams, at the beginning of the week. All in all, K-State competed in six races as the varsity eights beat Texas in every race but one.

In the varsity eights race, Texas beat K-State but was penalized after it changed lanes during the course of the race. The crew also rowed past Texas in the A race in varsity fours by nearly seven seconds.

The K-State novice boat finished second in all three of its races just behind Texas. In the B race of eights, K-State was inched out by Texas at the end by just 1.31 seconds.

"Every time we send them off the dock we are shoving them up against some tough competition," Hale said. "They really performed well, and I hope they continue to."

Hale said she was proud of the crew.

"Essentially what we have is a novice group because we have a lot of newcomers," Hale said. "It's not uncommon for them to be a little jittery at times, but it doesn't seem to affect their performance any."

Hale said she was continually trying to develop better rowers as far as breathing techniques and production of lactic acid in the body. Hale said the hardest thing about the sport was maintaining a good fitness level while rowing.

"Basically it's really who has a good engine," she said. "Even more so, it's whoever can maintain that high fitness level and use the body's oxygen effectively."

The women's crew is back in action this weekend as K-State travels to Lawrence for a pair of regattas against KU on Saturday and against KU and Iowa on Sunday.

With new trade, Atlanta Braves will contend for World Series Championship

VIEWPOINT

SHANE McCORMICK
SHANE McCORMICK is a senior in radio/TV journalism. You can e-mail comments to Shane at (shanem@ksu.edu)

Baseball season finally gets under way today. And in case you missed it during spring break, the Atlanta Braves continued to progress and excel while other teams stood in mediocrity.

Last week, the Braves traded outfielders David Justice and Marquis Grissom to the Cleveland Indians for outfielder Kenny Lofton and pitcher Alan Embree.

Some feel the Braves got the short end of this deal. Two All-Star outfielders for just one?

But keep two things in mind. One, the Braves were already going to get rid of Justice. They simply could not afford his salary for the next two years.

The Braves avoided paying the $12.5 million Justice would receive in the next two seasons. Getting rid of Justice cut $6 million off of the Braves' payroll. This is extremely important for the Braves' immediate future.

After the end of this season, pitchers Tom Glavine and Greg Maddux become free agents. The money the Braves saved should allow them to keep both pitchers. The team has already signed John Smoltz and Denny Neagle to long-term contracts. Now that it will be able to re-sign Glavine and Maddux, it will solidify the best four-man rotation in the league for many years to come.

With that part of the deal justified for the Braves, the other component is Grissom for Lofton.

There is no doubt that I would take Lofton rather than Grissom any day.

Lofton has established himself as the best lead-off hitter since Ricky Henderson's glory days in the 1980s.

Lofton put up some huge numbers last season in the American League. He batted .317 and set career highs with 210 hits, 14 homers and 67 RBIs. His on-base percentage was .372. Grissom hit .308 last season and had an on-base percentage of .349.

Perhaps the biggest element Lofton brings to the Braves is a legitimate speedster, something the team hasn't had in a while.

While Grissom swiped only 28 stolen bases last season, Lofton set a career-high with 75. Lofton has won five straight AL stolen-base titles. If Lofton leads off an inning with a walk or a single, you might as well just advance him to third automatically. He will steal second, then it just takes a hit to the right side to advance him to third.

The Braves are not going to lose out defensively on this deal either. While in Cleveland, Lofton has won four straight Gold Gloves.

Don't be surprised to see Embree make a contribution to this team also this season. While the Braves have the best starting rotation, their bullpen is suspect at best.

Embree brings a solid, young left-handed pitcher to the team's bull pen. At 27, many say Embree has one of the hardest fastballs in the game now. While he is unproven with a 4-5 career record, the up-swing potential is tremendous for this south paw.

Not only have the Braves continued to reload with star players, but they are also reloading with young star players.

The Braves continued their trading campaign by acquiring Michael Tucker from the Royals. Tucker, a former first-round draft pick, is just another young addition that should provide excellent speed and defense to the team.

While other teams have stood still and timid, the Braves have not been afraid to make the bold moves despite all of their recent success.

The Braves have built a pattern and formula that will equal success next fall — a World Series Championship.

Heaven's Gate

Book describes 1950s UFO cult from Minnesota

TANYA NISLY
staff reporter

Last week's mass suicide north of San Diego was not the first time a cult group in the United States fell prey to hopes of alien intervention.

About 40 years ago in Minnesota, events similar to what recently took place in California ended with the less dramatic breakup of a cult.

The similarity between this group and Marshall Applewhite's followers was that they both expected to be picked up by a spaceship, but the first group did not commit suicide.

Published in 1956, "When Prophecy Fails" was written about two factions of the cult that lived about 100 miles apart in northern Minnesota, but worked together.

The book was written by three professors, Leon Festinger, Henry Riecken and Stanley Schachter.

The detailed study in "When Prophecy Fails" was accumulated through participant observation. Five individuals became a part of the cult to accurately reveal what happened within it.

The cult was led by a woman who is referred to in the book as Marian Keech.

Keech, who had studied Scientology, claimed to receive messages from "the Guardians," supernatural beings from other planets. Keech's followers gave up their possessions and quit their jobs in support of what she told them.

"They sold all of their worldly goods and were going to be picked up by flying saucers," Harold Orbach, K-State associate professor of sociology, said.

Although those who followed Applewhite into mass suicide last week took a lethal cocktail of alcohol and phenobarbital in hopes of being picked up by an alien craft, the cult members in Minnesota in 1955 didn't kill themselves.

Followers of Keech waited in the street, singing Christmas carols because they had supposedly been sent a message that they would be picked up at 6 p.m. on Christmas Eve.

After the prophecy failed, the cult members didn't lose their faith. They rationalized that there had been a mistake, and many kept their beliefs.

Orbach said Keech and Applewhite had a similar appeal to evangelists like Oral Roberts.

"They are able to convince other people," Orbach said.

Leon Rappoport, professor of psychology at K-State, said people have always had the need to believe in some sort of supernatural powers and that cults are way of achieving this.

"All involve people developing beliefs and whatever you want to call it, supernatural, metaphysical beliefs that cannot be substantiated. This is why we tend to call them irrational," Rappoport said. "Many people believe that Jesus rose after death. Why shouldn't they believe something else? That sort of thing will always be around."

Rappoport said he thinks the predictions of more false prophecies tied to the millennium are correct.

Orbach said he thinks calling Applewhite's followers intelligent is a mistake. He said he thinks they were technologically intelligent, but not sensible.

"Their reasoning abilities are impaired," he said.

Investigators do not expect copycat suicides

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — There's no evidence that more members of the Heaven's Gate cult are planning to kill themselves, although such reports are being investigated, authorities said Monday.

Such fears of copycat suicides by far-flung cult cells are real. In 1994, 48 members of the Order of the Solar Temple killed themselves in Switzerland. Later that year, five more members committed suicide in Canada, followed by 16 in the French Alps in 1995 and five in Canada on March 22.

Nonetheless, sheriff's Lt. Jerry Lipscomb said authorities have found absolutely nothing to suggest that anyone other than the 39 members of the high-tech UFO cult planned to commit suicide.

One member who left the group about a month ago because he didn't want to kill himself received two farewell videotapes on March 25 from cult members describing their death plans. The next day, he and his employer drove to the hilltop mansion, found the bodies and called police.

As for reports that members might have killed themselves because leader Marshall Applewhite had convinced them he was dying of cancer, medical examiner Brian Blackbourne said Applewhite did not have cancer. In fact, none of the victims had a terminal illness, he said.

The bodies were being tested for HIV, at the request of relatives, he said.

Thirty-nine members of the nomadic group, which made its living lately developing Internet sites, were found dead March 26 in a rented mansion in exclusive Rancho Santa Fe. They were dressed alike and covered in purple shrouds, their bags neatly packed in anticipation of a trip to outer space.

Authorities say the cult members died in groups, consuming a mixture of phenobarbital and alcohol and then placing plastic bags over their heads.

Blackbourne also said two Vicodin vials were found near the bodies of the last two cult members alive inside the mansion — and traces of the painkiller were found in their bodies in addition to the drugs that helped kill the other 37.

Blackbourne said all autopsies were complete and toxicological tests would be finished by Friday.

Lipscomb said Monday that investigators still believe it was a mass suicide, and although they're trying to determine where the cultists got so much phenobarbital, it's unlikely the answer will lead to criminal charges.

"We're not going to charge anyone with anything, and who would we charge?" Lipscomb said.

The cult members believed they would be picked up by a spaceship trailing the Hale-Bopp comet after they shed their earthly "containers." Monday, a forklift operator moved the body bags from a refrigerated trailer to unmarked vans for delivery to mortuaries.

Relatives had been located for all but two of the victims. Officials released these names and other details in hope relatives could be found:

• Alphonzo Ricardo Foster, born in Detroit on Nov. 3, 1952. He is believed to have at least three siblings, sisters Juanita and Felicia, and a brother, Ramon.

• Lindley Ayerhart Pease, 41, of Exeter, N.H. His father is named Lindley also and he had a sister, Sylvia, in Palm Springs.

GUNS

Jones sponsored an unsuccessful amendment that would have allowed the poor to be reimbursed for the cost of buying a gun and receiving a concealed handgun license.

The bill would set up a system for the Kansas Bureau of Investigation to license citizens with clean criminal records and trained in the use of firearms to carry concealed handguns. They could not carry them into government buildings, bars, schools or businesses that post "no carry" signs.

Senators considered 15 amendments in the course of a nearly five-hour debate, rejecting most of them.

The Senate approved an amendment that would delete the Legislature and city and county governing bodies from the locations where concealed handguns were banned.

"We set up rules we expect other people to live by, but don't apply them to ourselves," said Sen. Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson, who offered the amendment.

The effect of the amendment is limited, because other statutes forbid weapons from being brought onto state-owned grounds, including the Statehouse.

The Senate also passed an amendment that would permit a $1,000 fine to be levied against anyone who brought a concealed handgun onto the premises of a business with a posted "no carry" sign.

Senators defeated an amendment that would have allowed a county-by-county vote on the issue.

The bill bars cities and counties from enacting ordinances prohibiting concealed carry, and the lack of that local control provision in the bill is likely to doom it.

Gov. Bill Graves left little doubt last week that he would veto a bill allowing Kansans to carry concealed handguns if it reaches his desk.

He didn't flatly declare he would veto it during his weekly news conference, but he did say, "It's still going to be a pretty tough sell if it gets to my desk."

He said that adding a local option provision might help convince him, however.

The Senate last week rejected a proposed constitutional amendment that would have given the people the right to decide whether to allow licensed Kansans to carry concealed handguns. Graves favored that approach.

The bill passed the House on a 78-44 vote, with 84 votes required in the 125-member House to overturn a veto.

TRIAL

nates from a pool of hundreds, and all those picked must be willing to consider the death penalty as punishment.

Heightened security was evident at the stone-and-glass courthouse, which is ringed by concrete barriers, huge stone planters and temporary metal fences. Police officers on foot, on horseback and in cruisers made regular passes around the complex, and at least one sharpshooter, wearing military fatigues, was stationed at the top of a parking structure across the street.

Reporters and observers were screened by two sets of metal detectors before being allowed into the second-floor courtroom.

Only a few victims' families showed up to watch, and an auxiliary courtroom set up to handle an overflow crowd was filled mostly with reporters.

And fewer than 75 people showed up to watch the telecast 600 miles away in a 320-seat auditorium set up under tight security at Oklahoma City's Federal Aviation Administration complex.

Congress created the closed-circuit hookup to accommodate the survivors and the victims after the trial was moved from Oklahoma City because of the intense publicity.

"Whether there's one person or none, this closed-circuit television needed to be held," said Dr. Paul Heath, a survivor of the bombing. "The opportunity is here, and that is the real point of the closed-circuit feed."

Jones focused much of his questions on the media, because only last week he said the jury pool was poisoned by the purported confessions of his client in stories by the Dallas Morning News and Playboy.

McVeigh, a tall, slender 28-year-old who grew up in working-class Pendleton, N.Y., served with distinction in the Gulf War.

Prosecutors intend to show that after the war McVeigh embraced a culture of hate, racism and anti-government fervor, as spelled out in a book he was said to have devoured — "The Turner Diaries," a fictional, racist tract that describes a scene eerily similar to the Oklahoma bombing.

Chief prosecutor Joseph Hartzler intends to link McVeigh to bomb-making materials and a yellow Ryder rental truck used in the explosion.

The defense will attack the integrity of the evidence, focusing on allegations that results from the FBI crime lab were botched or altered to suit prosecutors.

move in, move out

Students examine options for moving, again

PORTIA SISCO
arts and entertainment editor

With leasing and rental signs up all over Manhattan, moving time is approaching.

Money, transportation and a security deposit refund can all be critical for a successful move.

There are several different ways to organize a move. Students can pack and move themselves, use a moving company or store furniture and appliances in self-storage over the summer months.

Cindy Kramer, general manager at King's North American Van Lines, said the company does a lot of moves at the end of the season.

Students can have their apartments moved or they can store their furniture.

"We can pick up an apartment and keep it until next fall," Kramer said.

Students should expect to pay around $200 for a local move to a different apartment, and between $100 and $300 for a move to a storage unit for the summer, based on the weight.

New and used boxes are available from local moving services. Some grocery and discount stores also have free boxes available upon request.

Items such as packing tape, boxes and other materials can make the move easier.

Students can make it easier by having everything organized when the movers get there, Kramer said.

"A lot of them will call me with a list ,and I'll quote a figure over the phone," Kramer said.

Tony Hamam, terminal manager for Coleman American Moving Services Inc., said the beginning and the end of the semesters are a big moving time for students.

"If they're ready when we get there, it takes less time," Hamam said.

Making sure washers and dryers, refrigerators and other big appliances are unhooked can also save time and money when the movers get there.

Jay Johnson, director of public housing, said one of the biggest moving issues for students is getting a full security deposit back on rental property.

If students don't receive a full refund of their security deposit at move-out time, they can take legal action.

"It can be through a small-claims court," Johnson said.

The Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act gives the requirements landlords and tenants are expected to meet.

Cornell Mayfield, director of human resources, said the office receives five to ten complaints a day from tenants who are dissatisfied. Mayfield said there is recourse for students.

"Run, don't walk over to the student attorney or consumer relations board and get a copy of the 'Tenant Rights and Responsibilities Handbook,'" Mayfield said. "Get a hold of that thing, and read it all the way through."

Students should obtain a copy of the lease. A copy of a lease agreement that meets the standards set by the Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act is available at the Manhattan Department of Human Resources.

In the residence halls, the moving process is a little different.

Bob Burgess, assistant director of business operations in Housing and Dining Services, said students can pay a reduced rate and buy out their contracts before the end of the semester.

Very few students choose to leave the dorms in the middle of the semester. This year, the numbers were higher than last year because of the opening of a sorority house in the middle of the year, Burgess said.

"We had 3,300 contracts this year, and we're talking about 3 percent, 100 contract buyouts out of 3,300," Burgess said.

Students who study abroad, graduate early or leave for internships do not have to buyout their contract if they leave the residence halls early.

At the beginning of the year, students residing in the residence halls fill out room condition cards.

"The room must meet the same standards with normal wear and tear," Burgess said.

Students are billed for any cleaning expenses or damages that occurred during the year.

"I know that our total damage costs are very low compared to institutions our size," Burgess said. "Damages money-wise are minimal in comparison."

Students can make moving easier by making plans.

"If a student has a specific time to move out, the student should contact the Residence Life Coordinator," Burgess said. "The sooner they make those contacts, the smoother the process will be. Prior planning: that's the best recommendation."

Finding the perfect swimsuit takes patience, work

Itsy bitsy.

Teenie weenie.

Yellow polka-dot bikini. Or trunks.

That's right darlings, put the twinkies down because spring is nearing, and it's time to squeeze our bods into a new swimsuit.

VIEWPOINT

LINDSEY FORTMEYER

LINDSEY FORTMEYER is a freshman in speech. She will review the latest in fashion trends in her weekly column. She can reached by email at (lkf8410@ksu.edu).

I don't know about you, but I'm sporting a new, sexy tie-died bikini — a funky little duo I bought in Los Angeles last season.

Yes, I find fashion to be equally important on land as it is in water. Just like there are no-nos on campus, there are no-nos near the hot spots (depending on where you vacation). But regardless, swimsuit fashion is important when you travel.

You'd be amazed at how much information you can collect about people from just one glance at their swimsuit. A woman wading in the water, wearing a navy blue one-piece suit with little anchor buttons is most likely very conservative.

On the other hand, a diva surfing with the dudes in a G-string would probably be more agreeable to a late-night stroll on the beach.

The trouble with swimsuit season is scoring the perfect suit. Small or large, man or woman — anyone is capable of finding an adequate swimsuit. It just takes time and patience.

Swimsuit shopping is the same for me every year — depressing. I search several stores, enter poorly lighted dressing rooms and finally come to accept the fact that I have gained an extra few inches of holiday cheer.

I recommend making a few rounds on the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex track before trying on or purchasing a suit. The thought of tanning more body that needs to be tanned can be discouraging.

Don't settle on wearing a scraggly T-shirt over your suit — this fashion is sure to scare off the beach babes. There are swimsuit solutions without getting a tummy tuck.

Swimsuits are changing with the times. For the fuller woman, try the new bikinis that come with spandex shorts. These type of suits are great for those of you who feel bottom heavy but at the same time creates a comfortable, fun-in-the-sun type of suit.

There will always remain the ever-so-famous, one-piece suit, but now bikinis can specifically focus to fit your body for the stomach, thighs, hips and other problem areas. Tops come in tanks, strings or even with padded inserts to give the bosom an illusional boost. For some women, tops with one-inch triangles will do the job.

Maybe you don't have any problem areas and want to proceed straight to a thong bikini. Hey, for a cheap substitute, skip a day of dental flossing and and create your own. I hear spaghetti noodles are great for skin. The possibilities are endless.

So guys, you've outgrown your Speedo — that's OK. I view Speedos with about the same respect as a pair of swim trunks made out of cut-off jeans — mmm, what class. Perhaps for a soda commercial.

Women should stay simple. Popular colors are silver, black, green, yellow and orange. Bright colors tend to bring out a tan and draw attention to a strikingly glamorous appearance.

Men should cling to natural, earthy tones. These colors include navy blue, green, gray, black or tan. Try to shy away from fluorescent colors — they tend to look cheap and worn.

No matter what color or style you decide on for this spring, remember to pick the suit that suits you best.

If you're still confounded, continue checking out swimsuit shops and magazines until you find your perfect fit.

Still clueless? I suggest you try a nude beach.

FATAL KISS

Lavelle Davis, 23, was convicted of murder in Geneva, Ill., in February. Prosecutors showed how Davis and an accomplice rehearsed the murder at the scene just beforehand, including how the accomplice placed duct tape over Davis's mouth just as they would later do to the victim. Davis was linked to the crime scene when his lip prints were found on the piece of tape.

In October, welfare workers found a 50-year-old man living alone in a cave in Ifsahan province in Iran. According to the workers, he had moved there 30 years ago when his wife dumped him.

JUST CAUSE?

In January, the wife of Dr. Michael Baden—he is the head of the New York State Police's forensics unit—filed papers in her divorce action against him in New York City. (Baden testified on behalf of O. J. Simpson that the victims' knife wounds probably were caused by more than one assailant.) According to his wife's papers, Baden once performed a pair of autopsies on the couple's dining room table, once asked her permission to impregnate his girlfriend, and once told her he could kill her and make it look like a natural death.

Expansion of Seth Child Road set for completion by fall 1997

HANG NGUYEN
staff reporter

The expansion project on Seth Child Road will be completed by this fall. It involves total reconstruction of the existing two lanes, construction of two new lanes and bridge work.

The Seth Child Boulevard Project, which began March 29, 1996, will widen K-133 to four lanes between Fort Riley Boulevard and Marlatt Avenue.

"Seth Child Road has one of the highest traffic count for any two-lane road and highway in the state," said Sandra Tommer, area engineer for the Wamego Area Five Office of the Kansas Department of Transportation.

The decision to widen Seth Child was possible because of the System Enhancement Program, a highway bill that was passed eight years ago, Tommer said.

Although the City of Manhattan and Riley County submitted this project to the KDOT when the bill was passed, it was not approved until last year, Tommer said.

Tommer said the majority of the funding for the $9.9-million project came from the KDOT. The remainder came from Manhattan and Riley County. The addition of a pedestrian interpass will add an extra $385,000 to the total.

Bayer Construction Co. Inc., which is in charge of the construction, has about 20 workers, including some from the 13 different subcontractors, working at peak times.

Tommer said all work has gone according to plan so far.

"It's gone pretty well," Tommer said. "The project is done in such a way that it's broken up into little pieces so that we can keep traffic moving. It's not an easy project."

To help the flow of traffic, a new bridge has been constructed adjacent to the existing bridge over Kimball Avenue and the bridge over Anderson has been widened.

Neil Horton, vice president of Bayer, said construction will make Seth Child Road safer.

"It will make traffic less congested during peak use hours," said Horton. "It will be safer because we're building left turn lanes and the originally uncontrolled intersections will be controlled with stop lights."

Access to surrounding businesses will remain open at all times, although some side roads will be closed periodically. The speed has also been reduced to 35 mph throughout much of this project.

Drivers are advised to use Scenic Drive/Kimball extension route in order to avoid the Seth Child congestion.

PETR BURIAN, junior in electrical engineering, relaxes on the lawn north of the K-State Student Union after a long morning of classes Monday. Burian said spring break was tiring, so he was taking a little time between classes to catch up on some rest.

They said the state had an obligation under the federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 to win Justice Department preclearance for the registration system.

A three-judge federal court in Jackson, Miss., ruled that the state had not brought about any election-law change that required such Justice Department approval.

Today, the Supreme Court said the lower court was wrong.

"The new system contains numerous examples of new, significantly different administrative practices — practices that are not purely ministerial but reflect the exercise of policy choice and discretion by Mississippi officials," Justice Stephen G. Breyer wrote for the court.

"Insofar as they embody discretionary decisions that have a potential for discriminatory impact, they are appropriate matters for review under (the) preclearance process," he said.

The ruling does not necessarily mean Mississippi will have to scrap its dual-registration system.

But the state now will have to get Justice Department permission to continue using it.

When the case was argued in January, a government lawyer told the justices, "All we want is an opportunity to view the submission and determine whether or not there might be any discriminatory consequences."

Selection of jury members to begin in racial murder trial of ex-soldier

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. — Now that an ex-paratrooper has been sentenced to life in prison for the hate killings of two blacks, attention turns to the trial of the man prosecutors claim was his accomplice.

Former Fort Bragg soldier Malcolm Wright will be tried on charges that he killed a black couple in Fayetteville, with jury selection scheduled to begin this week.

Wright, 22, could face the death penalty if convicted of first-degree murder and conspiracy to commit murder in the 1995 slayings of Jackie Burden, 27, and Michael James, 36. Prosecutors claim Wright was a racist skinhead who chose his victims at random.

James Burmeister II was convicted in the slayings earlier this month and sentenced to life in prison.

The deaths prompted an Army-wide investigation of white supremacy in the ranks. The probe found 22 soldiers at Fort Bragg, including Wright and Burmeister, with extremist sympathies.

Wright's lawyer asked for and received a change of venue after arguing that Burmeister's trial and the publicity surrounding it would taint any jury pool selected in Cumberland County.

Publication Practice MC 360

If you are interested in working in newspaper ad design/production you can earn one hour of journalism credit during fall semester 1997. Attend class one day a week from 8:30-11:30 a.m. You pick the day but only one student will be accepted for each day so first-come, first-served. The instructor's permission is required. No prerequisites required.

If you are a graphic design major and can work at least 12 hours per week, you can earn three hours of credit in graphic design. Prerequisites must be met and instructor's permission is required.

The experience you earn in the fall could qualify you to apply for a paid, part-time position in the spring.

Come to 113 Kedzie from 8 a.m.-3 p.m for more information and syllabus.

Tune in to our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services events!

WHO'Swho at the REC

Salina native Jenny Krumwiede, senior in nutrition/exercise science, has been a weight room supervisor here at the Rec for over a year. In the future, Jenny hopes to work in the same field as she is in now, so she feels that working at the Rec Complex is a great experience! She enjoys the one-on-one clientele, the atmosphere with those who work out and the employees. This summer, Jenny will intern at Health Strategies in Wichita, followed with graduation in December. By fall 1998, Jenny will have completed the required number of hours to become a registered dietician. Eventually, she wants to pursue cardiac rehabilitation. Working in a hospital, Jenny will be giving nutrition counseling for cardiac rehabilitation patients.

Senior in biology and secondary education, Jessica Lange has been working at the Rec Complex for three years. To begin, she was an assistant building supervisor, but after a year was promoted to building supervisor. One aspect that Jessica particularly likes about her job is the friends she has made. Jessica is confident that these friendships will last after graduation, especially since one is her fiancé! She and James Shurts are high school sweethearts. He saw how much Jessica enjoyed being in an athletic and fitness-oriented environment and decided to work at the Rec also. Another close tie Jessica has with the Rec Complex concerns her brother, Nathan Lange, who works at Outdoor Rental. Jessica will be graduating in December with a degree in biology. She will remain at K-State to receive another degree in secondary education and will graduate in May 1998. Shortly after her second graduation, Jessica will be marrying James on May 30. She plans on teaching secondary education and coaching basketball and track.

my FAVORITE workOUT

Senior Kristy Jantz is a dance and early childhood education major from Wichita. Because she is a dance major, the majority of the dancing she does is technique. Therefore, she enjoys taking the funk aerobics classes offered by the Rec Complex. Kristy said these classes give her the opportunity to do a different style of dancing — one she is not able to do in the dance department. Another aspect Kristy likes is the cardiovascular workout funk aerobics gives her. For Kristy, dance has taught her discipline through practice, timing and dress codes. It has also helped her become organized in thought and in the movement of her body. Kristy has been dancing for more than 15 years, and in the future wants to work with people and teach them how to use movement as a way of communicaiton.

You Asked It!

The speed bag needs to be replaced. It is deformed!

Sorry for the inconvenience. It is hard to keep up with the use and abuse the speed bag takes. We have tried new bladders and new covers. Unfortunately, just like the racquetball rackets, so many people misuse them that somehow we have a hard time keeping up with the demand. Thanks!

Working It Out

Often our actions lead to better things in the future. Your exercise today may mean a burst of energy when the next big project is due. Or it could give you unexpected creativity to solve a problem. A workout today is the building block for tomorrow's success.

If you don't like to fight the evening crowd, don't forget we offer exercise sessions at 6:30 a.m. every week on Monday, Wednesday and Friday!

ATTENTION designers and artists!

The Intramural T-Shirt Design Contest is coming up. The winner of the contest will be awarded $75. Only K-State students may submit a design. Contest rules are available in the Recreational Services office located on the main floor of the Recreation Complex.

Entries are being accepted in the office now through Thursday, April 4.

Nutrition Notes

Many athletes and weight lifters feel that a diet high in protein will allow them to achieve greater strength and muscle mass gains. Although althletes do have a slightly higher requirement for protein, excess amounts of protein will be discarded as waste. Protein supplementation is not necessary for most athletes as they receive enough in their daily diet. Too much protein increases the body's water requirement and may contribute to dehydration. Protein is not a primary source of energy. An athlete needs between 0.8 and 2.0 grams of protein per kilogram of body weight, depending on the type of physical activity. This can be provided in a diet that contains 12-15 percent of its calories from protein.

FitnessFacts

Alternating high intensity and low intensity aerobic cycles three to four times a week added with a moderate weight training program may encourage the body to burn fat more efficiently than straight aerobics alone.

Former student reported missing from NY home

▶ Bennett's disappearance surprises her K-State friends, leaves many questions.

DANEDRI THOMPSON
staff reporter

Michelle Bennett pulled on a pair of blue jeans and a shiny silver jacket. She threw her hair back into a pony tail, grabbed her large, green backpack and gray portfolio and kissed her aunt goodbye. She called the Parsons School of Design in New York City to say she would be late and raced out the door of her aunt's two-bedroom apartment in Westchester, N.Y.

No one has seen her since.

A former K-State student, Bennett's disappearance has surprised her old friends.

"I can't believe she's missing," said Mia Strange, senior in marketing. "That's scary."

Friends at K-State describe Bennett as outgoing and upbeat. Before withdrawing from the University in February of 1996, Bennett was involved in the Human Ecology Club, the Black Student Union, the National Organization of Minority Architecture Students and the Zeta Phi Beta Sorority.

The morning of her disappearance, Bennett left her aunt's apartment intending to walk to the Metro North Station and take the train to Grand Central Station. There she would board the subway to Union Square.

At 10 a.m., Bennett phoned Parsons again and left an answering machine message saying she was having transportation problems.

The 23-year-old woman never arrived.

That evening, Bennett's aunt and cousin waited for her to return. When Bennett didn't show up in time to bowl with her aunt and cousin

MICHELLE BENNETT, top row center, a former K-State student, has been missing for a week from her New York home. People with information relevant to Bennett's disappearance are encouraged to call the White Plains Police Department's hotline at 1-914-422-6006.

Horticulture center to open next year

BECKY WINTER
staff reporter

K-State's horticulture department is branching out.

On the grounds of the dormant Sunflower Army Ammunitions Plant about 20 miles east of Lawrence, a forestry and horticulture research center will open next year, Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said.

"We have horticulture centers throughout the state, but we don't have the quality facilities," he said. "This center will serve our need for future research because it is located in the middle of a climate zone."

Tom Warner, professor and department head of horticulture, said the old ammunitions plant is a good location for the center because it is easy to access and provides an ideal environment for research.

"It is an exquisite piece of land that will be used to conduct applied research on various horticulture crops," Warner said. "The soils are exactly what we are looking for, and there is a stream that runs right through it. Physically, it's a great environment."

Undergraduates, graduates and students working toward their doctoral degrees will have access to the center. It will also be available to students enrolled at Johnson County

Starting next fall, Parking Services will be cracking down on illegally parked bicycles.

Bikes parked illegally are issued warnings. But with the new bike plan next fall, parking services will issue tickets and impound illegally parked bicycles.

"Next fall we will start issuing real tickets instead of warnings. We are in the educational phase now," Lance Lunsway, Parking Service operations manager, said.

Fines for illegal parking are $15. If a bike is field impounded, which means it is locked on site with a Parking Services lock, a fine of $10 is assessed. If a bike is transport impounded, or removed from the site and stored at parking services, a fine of $30 is charged.

All bicycles should be parked in the provided bike racks across campus. Bikes parked by or locked to trees, railings, fences, sign posts or ▶ K-State senior builds thesis about asteroid impact sites in the state and discovers 11 sites scarring the prairie.

STORY BY BRANDON ROMBERGER

Asteroids blaze through the atmosphere daily at amazing speeds. Some are as large as small planets. Asteroids have battered Earth's surface in the past.

Nathan Geier, senior in mathematics, decided to do his senior thesis on places where asteroids had struck the earth.

He said there are 11 different sites in Kansas where the possibility of a past impact exists. One of the 11 sites, the Haviland Crater, has been confirmed in Kiowa County. There are also three other strong possibilities in Finney-Gray, Kingman and Dickinson counties.

"The process is so random. An asteroid may break up. Two of 10 pieces may impact in Kansas," he said.

He said the actual impact site might not be from an asteroid. An impact site is a place where anything from space has hit the earth.

There are two basic kinds of sites. There are sites exposed at the surface of the earth and sites that have been buried.

"Three out of four times it is on the surface," Geier said.

James Underwood, retired professor of geology, helped Geier with his work.

"When large objects impact, there are crater rocks that have been shocked. These effects remain after the impact. Through shock metamorphism we look at the surface structures and can tell if it actually is an impact site," he said.

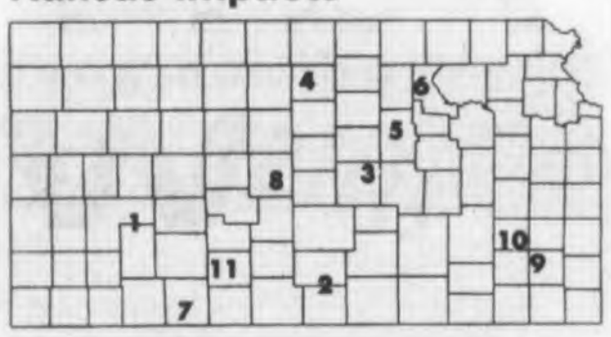
He said some of the sites are buried because the earth's atmosphere contributes to natural erosion, which eventually covers some of the sites.

"This is how the earth differs from the moon. On the moon, the only erosion that occurs is from other impacts," Underwood said.

Geier said finding the different sites was the toughest part of his studies. He looked for circular patterns in maps, and when he found one he went to the site. He tested sites for shock and disturbed beds.

Sites were also brought to his attention by finding unusual trace elements in people's water wells.

The purpose of Geier's research was to compile a list of sites so future graduate students could write about them.



"My job is to put down evidence for a place being an impact site," Geier said.

IATHAN GEIER, senior in geology, researched possible meteorite impact sites throughout Kansas. Geier's findings included three strong possible crater sites in the state.

If the sky falls

Every million years, a comet or asteroid tears through the Earth's atmosphere with enough force to destroy civilization. If spotted in time, scientists have the following options.

Nuke it	A properly aimed nuclear blast could blow the object off course.
Pulverize it	Rockets with powerful warheads could smash the object into pieces or divert its course.
Melt it	Earth or moon-based lasers could be used to melt layers off the object, redirecting it.

Researchers suggest an asteroid crashed into the Earth during the Mesozoic age. The impact caused a cloud of dust to rise, resulting in a greenhouse effect that quite possibly killed the dinosaurs. • IMPENDING DOOM.
With the fervor of Hale-Bopp, Earth's inhabitants question whether an asteroid-Earth collision is possible. Researchers say the odds are there, but at 1 in billions, it's not a bet you should place money on. If an asteroid the size of a basketball struck the Earth, an explosion would occur equal to 10 times the amount of energy released at Hiroshima.

• NORTHERN CALIFORNIA SUICIDE VICTIM COPIES CULT DEATHS.

MARYSVILLE, Calif. — A man was found dead with a bag over his head, a scarf shrouding his body and a suicide note saying he intended to join others on a spaceship following the Hale-Bopp comet, authorities said Tuesday.

Robert Leon Nichols, 58, was found before dawn Monday by a friend in the trailer home in a remote canyon where he lived alone, said Yuba County Undersheriff Gary Finch.

Nichols, clad in a blue and white T-shirt and blue briefs, also had a multicolored, partly purple scarf placed from chin-level over his body, Finch said.

A note found near the body stated: "I'm going on the spaceship with Hale-Bopp to be with those who have gone before me," Finch said.

Although there were some elements in common with the 39 members of the cult who committed suicide near San Diego last week, Nichols did not have a shaved head and wore different clothing, authorities said.

The Heaven's Gate cult members poisoned themselves with an overdose of phenobarbital and alcohol and had plastic bags over their heads.

Bodies were found with solid purple cloth shrouds over their faces. The cult cited the appearance of the Hale-Bopp comet in their writings.

• ABERDEEN JUDGE TURNS DOWN DEFENSE REQUEST TO INTERVIEW TOP ARMY OFFICIALS.

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. — A military judge this morning denied a defense request to interview high-ranking Army officials who last fall called for zero tolerance of sexual misconduct.

The request came in from lawyers for Sgt. Delmar Simpson, a drill instructor at Aberdeen Proving Ground charged with 25 counts of rape and other offenses.

The defense argued Monday during the first day of pretrial hearings that comments made by Army Secretary Togo West and other officials made it impossible for Simpson to receive a fair court martial. But the judge, Col. Paul Johnston, said he reviewed an 8-inch stack of newspaper clippings and a videotape of broadcast news reports and did not believe they showed Army officials unduly influenced Simpson's court martial.

ROGER REITZ, right, receives a hug from Mary Nichols after he was elected to City Commission Tuesday night at the Riley County Courthouse. Reitz received the largest number of votes for a City Commission chair, 3,141. Nichols received 1,697 votes, which wasn't enough to secure her a City Commission chair.

Ed Klimek, Karen McCulloh and Roger Reitz's names were written on the dry erase board as the winners of the Manhattan City Commission elections Tuesday night.

McCulloh and Reitz will serve four-year terms because they were the top two vote getters. Klimek will serve a two-year term after receiving the third-highest vote totals.

Reitz said he was pleased with the results of the elections.

"I am happy for the people who helped me with this campaign. My campaign chairs did a great job considering they didn't have a lot of past campaign experience. I had a huge number of people who helped me and I owe this to them," he said.

When he starts his term, Reitz said he hopes to work on the economic development of Manhattan. He said so much depends on having a plan in place.

Reitz said K-State is important to the city and is a significant resource. Commissioners should do what they can to utilize its professional expertise, he said.

He said he looks forward to working with the other commissioners.

"I got to know the other commissioners through the campaigns. Klimek and McCulloh bring a lot of resources with their backgrounds. People can be easy to work with if there is a good mix," he said.

McCulloh, a former county commissioner, said she is looking forward to the challenge of the new job.

"I was delighted to win. I think anyone who is new to something will hang back for a while to see how things work. The main thing I want to work on is a way to consolidate county and city activities," she said.

McCulloh said all of the new commissioners are excellent people, and she was disappointed that Edith Stunkel did not get re-elected.

"I think we have to give Edith credit for all the things she did in her six years," she said.

Klimek said he was happy to have a chance to serve on the City Commission with Reitz. They have known each other since they served on the Parks and Recreation Committee together.

"I think Roger Reitz and I are alike in the way we see issues," he said. "I see Karen as being more of a liberal. I think that is good. You don't want everyone to be of the same mind set."

Reitz said he would like to move business along, making fair and swift decisions. He said he thought the commission dragged on issues and did not get as much accomplished as it did in the past.

"When you are working on a commission, people act different than they do in real life. You want to feel comfortable with the people you work with. I think chemistry is needed with a commission. I think we will have that," he said.

Not all of the people at election headquarters won.

Mary Nichols, K-State speech instructor, did not win a position, but she said she was happy with the people who were elected.

"We are all friends. It is a team effort. Voters make the final decision. I think all of the candidates ran an issue-oriented campaign," she said. "I learned a lot going through the race that will help me when school board races come around."

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 also had elections for the school board. Beverly Eversmeyer, Flordie Pettis and Meryl Wilson were the three winners.

City Commission keeps speed limit

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

The speed limit in the Stagg Hill residential area will remain at 25 mph despite four years of petitioning by the neighborhood association to reduce it to 20 mph.

The City Commission voted 3-2 Tuesday night to leave the speed limits alone.

Commissioner Justin Kastner said reducing the speed limit would start a flood of requests from other neighborhoods to reduce their speed limits.

Commissioner Edith Stunkel said she preferred to see it as an opportunity for dialogue with the rest of the city about changing speed limits in accordance with the residents' wishes.

"The neighborhood has been very persistent for four years, and it's now time to act and respond to their needs," Stunkel said.

The commission had previously denied a request to install a speed monitor that would automatically issue tickets and had instructed the city administration to work with residents to decide about traffic calming devices, such as speed bumps and traffic circles.

The commission then addressed the request from the Social Services Advisory Board for $1,000 to fund the Community Summit.

The Summit is a collaboration of local community planning organizations that evaluates the need for programs such as housing, health care, elderly assistance, youth programs, education, transportation and economic development.

Aaron Otto, chairman of the board, explained the need for funds to pay for copying, phone calls and mailings.

Otto, who is also the K-State student body vice president, said the funds would be used as reimbursements for costs incurred.

Commissioners voted 4-1 to allocate the $1,000 from the general fund, with Commissioner Steve Hall dissenting.

"I think this is a deserving program, but I don't support the funding coming out of the general fund," Hall said.

Earlier in the evening, the commission listened to the city administration's recommendations for the proposed 1998-2003 Capital Improvements Program, which includes the removal of an item that would demolish a landmark water tower.

A few residents stood up to express their approval of this recommendation, which they said would preserve a valuable landmark.

The commission also authorized city administration to develop an agreement with the local Master Gardeners to beautify and landscape the city's land at the intersection of Sunset Avenue and Claflin Road.

Registration helps campus bicyclists

Warm weather brings a surge of bicyclists to campus with it. What a joy it is to cruise through campus, obstacle free, and park footsteps away from your class. Such are the advantages of riding a bike.

However, with a bicycle comes responsibilities. It is your responsibility, as a bicyclist, to know K-State's regulations. You can pick up a copy of them when you register your bike with Parking Services in Edwards Hall.

You might like to know that you can get a ticket as a bicyclist. If you lock your bike up on a handrail or other such place that obstructs safe passage for pedestrians, you can be ticketed and your bike can be locked.

But why should you register your bike?

K-State has been working hard in the past few years to create a comprehensive bike program, one aspect of which is registration.

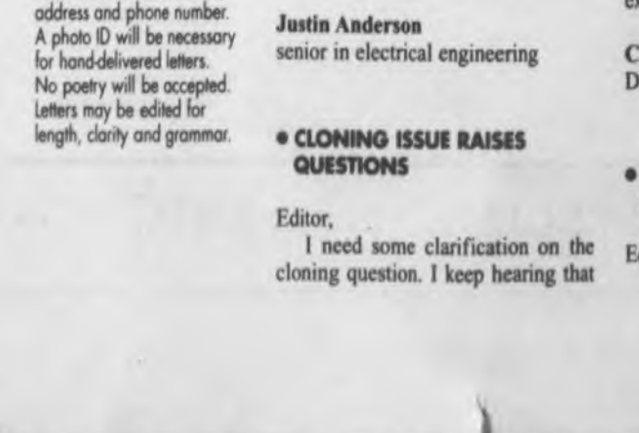
Registration allows K-State officials the opportunity to track the amount of bikes on campus and provide an ample amount of bike stalls and pathways. Registering your bike also helps you if your bike is stolen — an act that is, unfortunately, not rare on this campus.

While increased regulation for bicyclists is good, those people doing the ticketing of illegally parked bikes should also take special consideration of bicyclists unfamiliar with regulations.

It is good to ticket bicycles obstructing handicap rails or fire escapes, but is it necessary to ticket those bikes locked to extraneous railing that serves no purpose? Sometimes these non-purposeful rails are the only alternative to bike rails that are overwhelmed with users.

And no one should be given a monetary ticket for not being registered, although a warning would be OK. Making people pay for not being registered will only upset them and perhaps scare off bicyclists, which no one wants to do.

Although increased bike ticketing won't occur until next fall, all campus bicyclists should increase their awareness by either getting registered or rereading the bicycle regulations.



You can do both of these things at K-State's second-annual Bicycle Fair Friday outside the K-State Student Union in the Union free-speech zone.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a consensus opinion is reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and students.

War brewing in capital city controversial memorial site constitutes national issue

There is another war brewing in Washington, D.C.

No, it's not about our government or another country's government, but war over design.

Similar to Maya Lin's struggle amid protests to complete her original vision for the Vietnam Veterans Memorial northeast of the Lincoln Memorial, the design and location for the proposed World War II Veteran's Memorial has erupted into another debate of similar proportions.

It seems any time an artist, architect or government bureaucrat makes plans to alter Washington's Mall, the whole country splinters into various camps.

The Mall is that expansive, central green space in Washington dotted with the museums of the Smithsonian Institution and a stunning array of memorials all terminating with the grand U.S. Capitol building on the east and the Lincoln Memorial on the west. To be an American is to walk along its gravel paths near its reflecting pools and the soaring Washington Monument.

One can sit on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial and stare along the Mall's axis for hours without losing interest, as it must be the grandest example of purely public space in the country. And, for this reason, it is one of the most safely guarded public spaces. The powerful city Commission of Fine Arts approves any memorial built in the Washington area, so as to keep less important ones (like an Elvis memorial) out.

The hubbub over the WWII Memorial is mainly concerning its site. It is to be located at the eastern end of the Reflecting Pool, incorporating the grassy and treed area surrounding the Rainbow Pool. This site is roughly halfway between the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial — an important site by anyone's measure.

Several key Washingtonians have spoken up to the press about the site. Senator Bob Kerrey, D-Nebraska, has publicly launched a campaign against the site due to the proposed memorial blocking several secondary Mall vistas, not the main east-west axis. Other detractors include the editor of Architecture magazine and Roger K. Lewis, an architectural columnist for the Washington Post.

Positive response has come from J. Carter Brown, chairman of the CFA, who thinks the prominent site does justice to such a significant national event.

The important aspect of the debate is that no one is arguing against the need for the memorial — although the design of a sunken plaza defined by two colonnades backed by 50-foot-high walls is less than inspired.

What is truly silly is why the site directly across the street was not chosen among the seven or so sites considered. Past development studies of the Mall have identified the large grassy, hilly area directly west of the Washington Monument as prime land for formal gardens, but lack of funding has always stalled efforts.

An inspired move for those involved with the WWII Memorial would be to terrace this site and install a memorial there. Doing this would create a more natural transition from the upper Mall between the Washington and the Capitol and the lower Mall of the Reflecting Pool.

Manhattan has experienced this debate, although on a much smaller scale. There were some comments made by architecture students about the early siting of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. They argued it belittled the Vietnam Veterans Memorial east of All Faiths Chapel.

While it could be argued the art museum does impose on the memorial, I don't think the memorial itself was sited well when it was built. These circumstances, unfortunately, have minimized its impact.

And, the last thing anyone would want is for this WWII Memorial controversy to express itself in its design, such as the obvious expression found in the Korean War Memorial against Lin's abstraction with her Vietnam Veterans design. Or the blandness and pointlessness of the unfinished Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial, which is sited near the Jefferson Memorial along the Potomac River.

Although the siting and design of this memorial is several hundred miles from Kansas, it is a national decision that has a lasting impact far longer than those individuals who presently lead the debate. Our representatives to Washington should commit to informing their constituents of this proposal.

Letting the debate remain an east coast diversion would be to relegate the mall to that of elitist pursuit, as opposed to that of powerful expression of national pride.

MEAT EATER

will not waver in face of vegetarian rhetoric

VIEWPOINT

MARY RENEE SMITH

MARY RENEE SMITH is a junior in theatre. You can e-mail your comments to Mary at (mojo@ksu.edu).

While driving to visit my family in Kansas City during spring break, I saw a herd of cows by the side of the highway. Not a remarkable event here in the Midwest, I know.

But immediately after seeing the hoofed beasts, all I could think about was a big juicy, rare steak. My mouth began to water as I recalled the last steak dinner I had just a few days before, a filet mignon with new red potatoes and steamed broccoli on the side.

As you can guess, I am not a vegetarian. Never have been, never will be. I will eat anything that doesn't bite me first or put up too much of a fight. I have eaten a variety of animals including cow, alligator, chicken and whatever animal is in hot dogs and bologna. I am open to trying kangaroo and ostrich if anyone has any.

I use animals too. I own leather shoes. I would love to have a good suede jacket for the spring. I think gelatin is a great thing in nail polish.

There are probably hundreds of products I use daily that contain one animal or another. I don't pay much attention really. I use and eat what I like.

But I do suffer for my affection for animal products. There is in my life a history of abuse from vegetarians who don't approve of my lifestyle. I am particularly tired of being lectured about how barbaric I am for eating another animal.

Until then, pass the ketchup, pickles and a slice of cheese. I'm ready for a burger.

My clash with the non-meat eaters of our society started in high school. A friend of mine who had been recruited (I think forced) into the vegetarian movement by her hippie parents tried repeatedly to convince me of the inhumanity of eating cows.

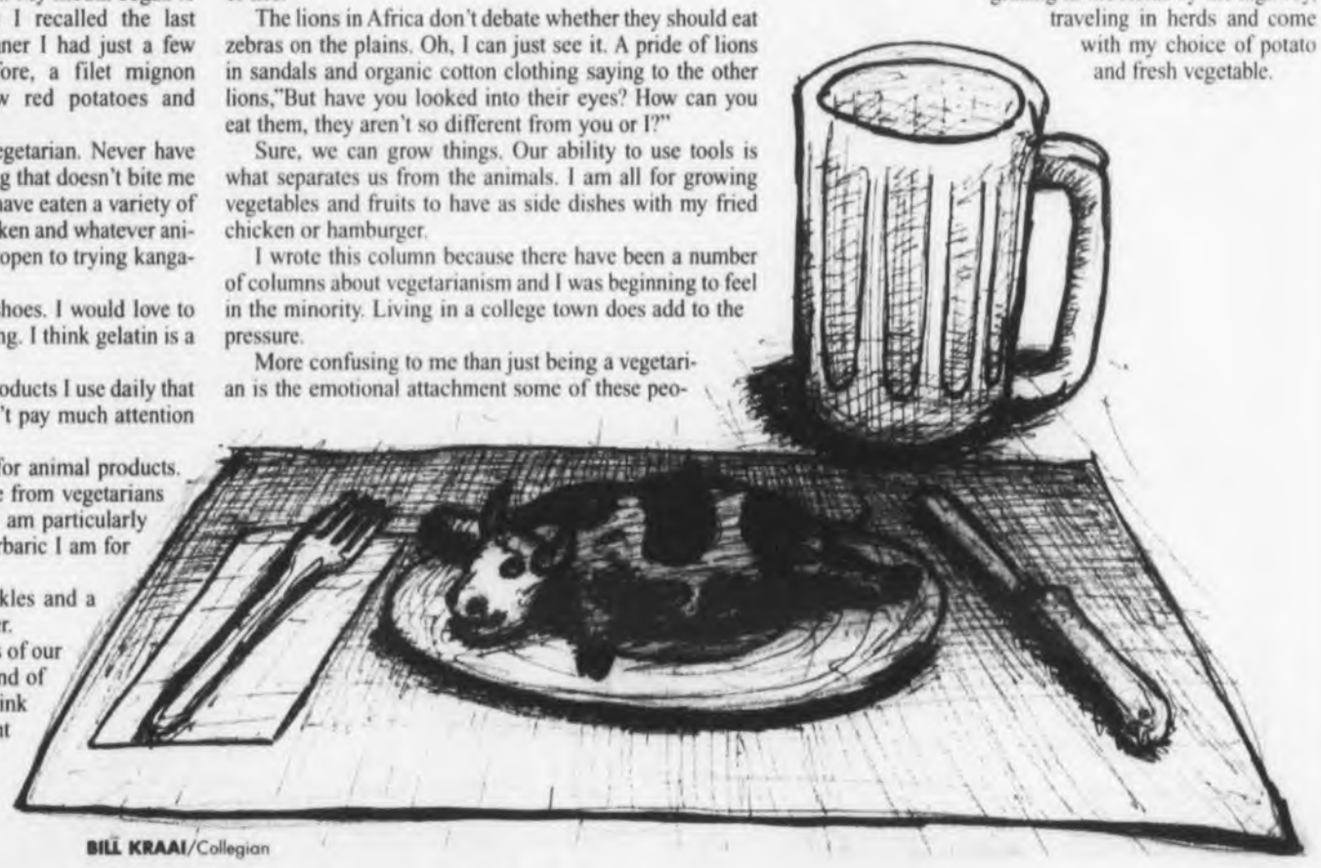
"Haven't you ever looked into the big, beautiful eyes of a cow?" she asked. "How can you eat an animal with eyes like that?"

"I don't eat the eyes." I responded. She was not amused.

People who are vegetarians are betraying their position in the food chain. We are humans, we eat those beneath us in the chain. That is why they call it a chain. Not the food line or the food loop.

Didn't anyone else see "The Lion King"? It is the circle of life.

The lions in Africa don't debate whether they should eat zebras on the plains. Oh, I can just see it. A pride of lions in sandals and organic cotton clothing saying to the other lions,"But have you looked into their eyes? How can you eat them, they aren't so different from you or I?"



Sure, we can grow things. Our ability to use tools is what separates us from the animals. I am all for growing vegetables and fruits to have as side dishes with my fried chicken or hamburger.

I wrote this column because there have been a number of columns about vegetarianism and I was beginning to feel in the minority. Living in a college town does add to the pressure.

More confusing to me than just being a vegetarian is the emotional attachment some of these people have to their lack of meat and animal products. I have had to endure lectures about my eating habits while eating. More than one meat eater has had to hear about exactly how particular animals are raised and slaughtered so that we may have that tasty pork loin.

To all you vegetarians, lets make a deal. I'll keep eating, wearing and using meat. You keep eating tofu and complaining about the lack of animal-friendly fast food.

Oh, yeah, and I promise not to eat you unless you start grazing in the fields by the highway, traveling in herds and come with my choice of potato and fresh vegetable.

• INSTRUCTOR WILL BE MISSED

Editor,

In my five years at K-State, I've had an opinion for every issue and instance that has graced this campus.

However, never have I been so undoubtedly certain about something that happened here than I am today. The fact is, K-State lost a huge asset this past weekend.

His name was Dr. William Dawes. And although he is gone, I am quite certain that the legacy he left with me as well as countless other students, will live on for many years to come.

• CLONING ISSUE RAISES QUESTIONS

Editor,

I need some clarification on the cloning question. I keep hearing that those who do this sort of research (and this comes up nearly every time there's some new advance in science) are playing God and that we aren't supposed to play God.

I must be confused because it appears to me that it comes pretty close to playing God (or at least to being his press secretary) to say, "God gave you the brain that allowed you to make this breakthrough, but, personally, I am telling you that God was only kidding. He doesn't want you to use that brain without checking with me first."

I'm sure someone out there can explain this to me.

• ABSTINENCE SATISFYING EVEN IN MARRIAGE

Editor,

As the author of a recently published book chapter on the effectiveness of natural family planning (Chapter 13 in "The Art of Natural Family Planning," Fourth Edition, by J.F. and S.K. Kippley), I commend you on the fair portrayal of birth control effectiveness rates on page 7 of the March 12 Collegian.

All too often, articles on birth control list only the effectiveness rates for perfect use (following all the rules) and not for typical use (as couples take chances, miss taking pills, etc.).

Yes, birth control pills can prevent pregnancy at a 99-percent effectiveness rate, but in real life, the true effectiveness is much lower, as you clearly stated.

I believe this is the fairest and fullest disclosure of birth control effectiveness rates I have seen in the lay press.

As a teacher and practitioner of natural family planning ("periodic abstinence" in the reference article), I would like to point out some other benefits.

First, it teaches a man self-control over perhaps his most unwieldy drive. My wife can easily trust me on business trips.

Second, the divorce rate of those using this method in marriage is less than 5 percent in several studies.

Third, wives feel loved as whole persons, not as bodies. Each month a cycle of courtship (abstinence) and honeymoon adds zest to an area of marriage that often becomes mundane.

Fourth, there are no potentially harmful physical side effects as with the other methods.

If anyone is interested in a free introduction to natural family planning and how to attain the 99-percent effectiveness rate, my wife and I will be presenting at 6:30 p.m. May 4 at Seven Dolors parish center.

• DECISIONS ABOUT FARRELL, GOLF COURSE INCONSISTENT

Editor,

I want to commend the K-State Foundation for its initiative in deciding to build Colbert Hills, a $9-10 million golf course that with one leap will place K-State in the forefront of the world's leading research universities like Harvard, Yale, the University of Chicago, Berkeley, MIT, Cal Tech, Cambridge and Oxford.

I venture to say that very few of these universities can boast such a PGA-approved set of golf courses as part of their research facilities.

Although we do not have as many Nobel Prize winners at our University as some of these institutions, the Foundation has identified a niche that will enable us to be second to none.

If we are going to raise $10 million in private funds, it is best to do it for a project where we can excel.

On another subject, I hope the Foundation can be persuaded to designate, as a second fundraising priority, an endowment allowing us to avoid canceling half a million dollars worth of periodicals.

Our library currently subscribes to about 8,800 periodicals, the lowest in the Big 12 (by contrast, the University of Texas at Austin gets 51,000) and will be forced to reduce this budget by $500,000.

If our book budget remains frozen and if inflation continues (as it probably will), soon we will have bought our last book.

This endowment would have to be about $10 million, by coincidence the cost of the new golf courses.

Of course, this project would take some selling, since "the Foundation does not accept gifts for projects that haven't been prioritized by the University administration," as reported in the Collegian.

Migration away from smaller towns is a problem across the country.
But some choose to stay. Why?

BRANDON WHITE

CHANUTE — Under the watchful eyes of a former White House photographer, a Kansas City Star photo editor and a professor from Western Kentucky University, the Collegian photo staff members spent spring break documenting the people of Chanute and Neosho County.

The project was called "AWACKS," which stands for "A Week at Chanute, Kan."

Our job was to give a face to a problem many small towns have.

Many small-town citizens are migrating to larger cities where they might see more opportunity for advancement, but there are those who choose to stay. They might stay because the smaller towns are safer for families or because they don't want to leave behind friends and family.

Young people in town will leave for college and not all of them will return.

Eventually, if migration continues, the economy of Chanute could suffer because of a shrinking tax base. In turn, each citizen will pay more.

Former White House photographer Pete Souza and Star photo editor Tim Janicke, both former Collegian photo staff members, set up a command headquarters in the conference room of the Chanute Tribune. Working with a portable light table, a couple of grease pencils and 500 feet of black-and-white film, we set out to document the life of Chanute for the week.

Western Kentucky professor and former Tribune photographer Dave LaBelle critiqued film, and told us what we could do better.

In many cases, we practically lived with our subjects whenever possible.

Our story is called "They Stayed," and this was our week at Chanute.

He came up with a model using the existing records to research previously recognized sites.

Geier found when he started the project that it hadn't been done before because researchers focused on other subjects.

"Dinosaurs arouse everyone's curiosity. Scientifically, it's more of a big deal," he said.

Underwood was responsible for getting Geier involved with the idea. He is a member of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists. He got the idea from them and suggested it to Geier.

"Nathan's initiative and response got this project going. He was really interested in it," Underwood said.

Geier was happy with how the idea turned out.

"I learned a lot about geology in general, and I have gained a lot of contacts," he said.

as she had every Saturday night, the police were alerted.

Bennett is the second New York City college student to disappear in a month. Patrick McNeill, a 21-year-old Fordham University student, disappeared after friends left him outside of a bar in New York City.

According to police, Bennett was worried about a midterm, which they said might mean she never intended to go to school that day.

Friends and family, however, are skeptical.

"Why would she leave without telling her family? That just doesn't make sense," Strange said.

In the week since her disappearance, family and friends in New York have covered poles with photocopied pictures of Bennett, who is 4 feet 11 inches tall. Her father, a taxi driver, has spent several nights driving through the city looking for his only daughter.

Detectives have been questioning family and friends and retracing Bennett's steps.

So far, they have found only one person who saw Bennett leave her building.

The concierge recalls watching her walk out of the building and down the street.

fire hydrants are considered in violation of parking regulations, Lunsway said.

Parking Services will be more strict with bicycles parked on handicap accessible ramps and fire lanes. Bicycles parked in these areas will be impounded.

According to campus police, the most common areas people illegally park their bikes are near Nichols, Calvin and Kedzie halls.

"They park them on the rails and it damages the rails. Then maintenance has to re-paint them," officer Oscar Ruiz said.

Parking on the grass can also cause problems.

"Sometimes they park them in flower beds or on the grass. One every now and then isn't going to cause problems. But, when it happens everyday, it starts to damage the grass," Lunsway said.

Plans for the locations of current and new bike racks are being considered by the parking service committee.

"They are planning to move racks closer to the streets to avoid having to ride bikes on the sidewalks," Ruiz said.

The property will be leased from the Department of Defense on a 25-yea rotating in which the center will have complete control of the grounds.

Expo win opens baseball season to commemorate Jackie Robinson

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Montreal was the first baseball team to win in 1997, a befitting start to a season dedicated to Jackie Robinson.

The Expos scored the winning run in the ninth inning — on a bases-loaded walk — to beat the St. Louis Cardinals 2-1 in Montreal, the city where Robinson briefly played before joining the Brooklyn Dodgers.

As a tribute to Robinson's breaking the color barrier 50 years ago, special commemorative balls were used in each team's home opener Tuesday and players and umpires wore Robinson patches on their uniforms.

Baseball's opening day also delivered two notable changes from the start of the 1996 season: Albert Belle talked, and fans didn't freeze.

Following a snow-out in Boston, a snowstorm in New York and arctic temperatures in both Detroit and Chicago last year, baseball adjusted its schedule in an attempt to beat the cold weather. All five domes in the majors were used Tuesday, and every West Coast club in both leagues was scheduled to begin the year at home this week.

It was a brilliant idea as a severe snowstorm battered the East Coast on Monday, forcing the postponement of Baltimore's home opener at Camden Yards until Wednesday.

In Tuesday's other American League afternoon games, Chicago beat Toronto 6-5 and Texas beat Milwaukee 6-2. In night games, Detroit was at Minnesota and the New York

Royals postpone season opener because of cold weather, winds

BALTIMORE — The Baltimore Orioles postponed their opening day game against the Kansas City Royals Tuesday because of cold weather and high winds.

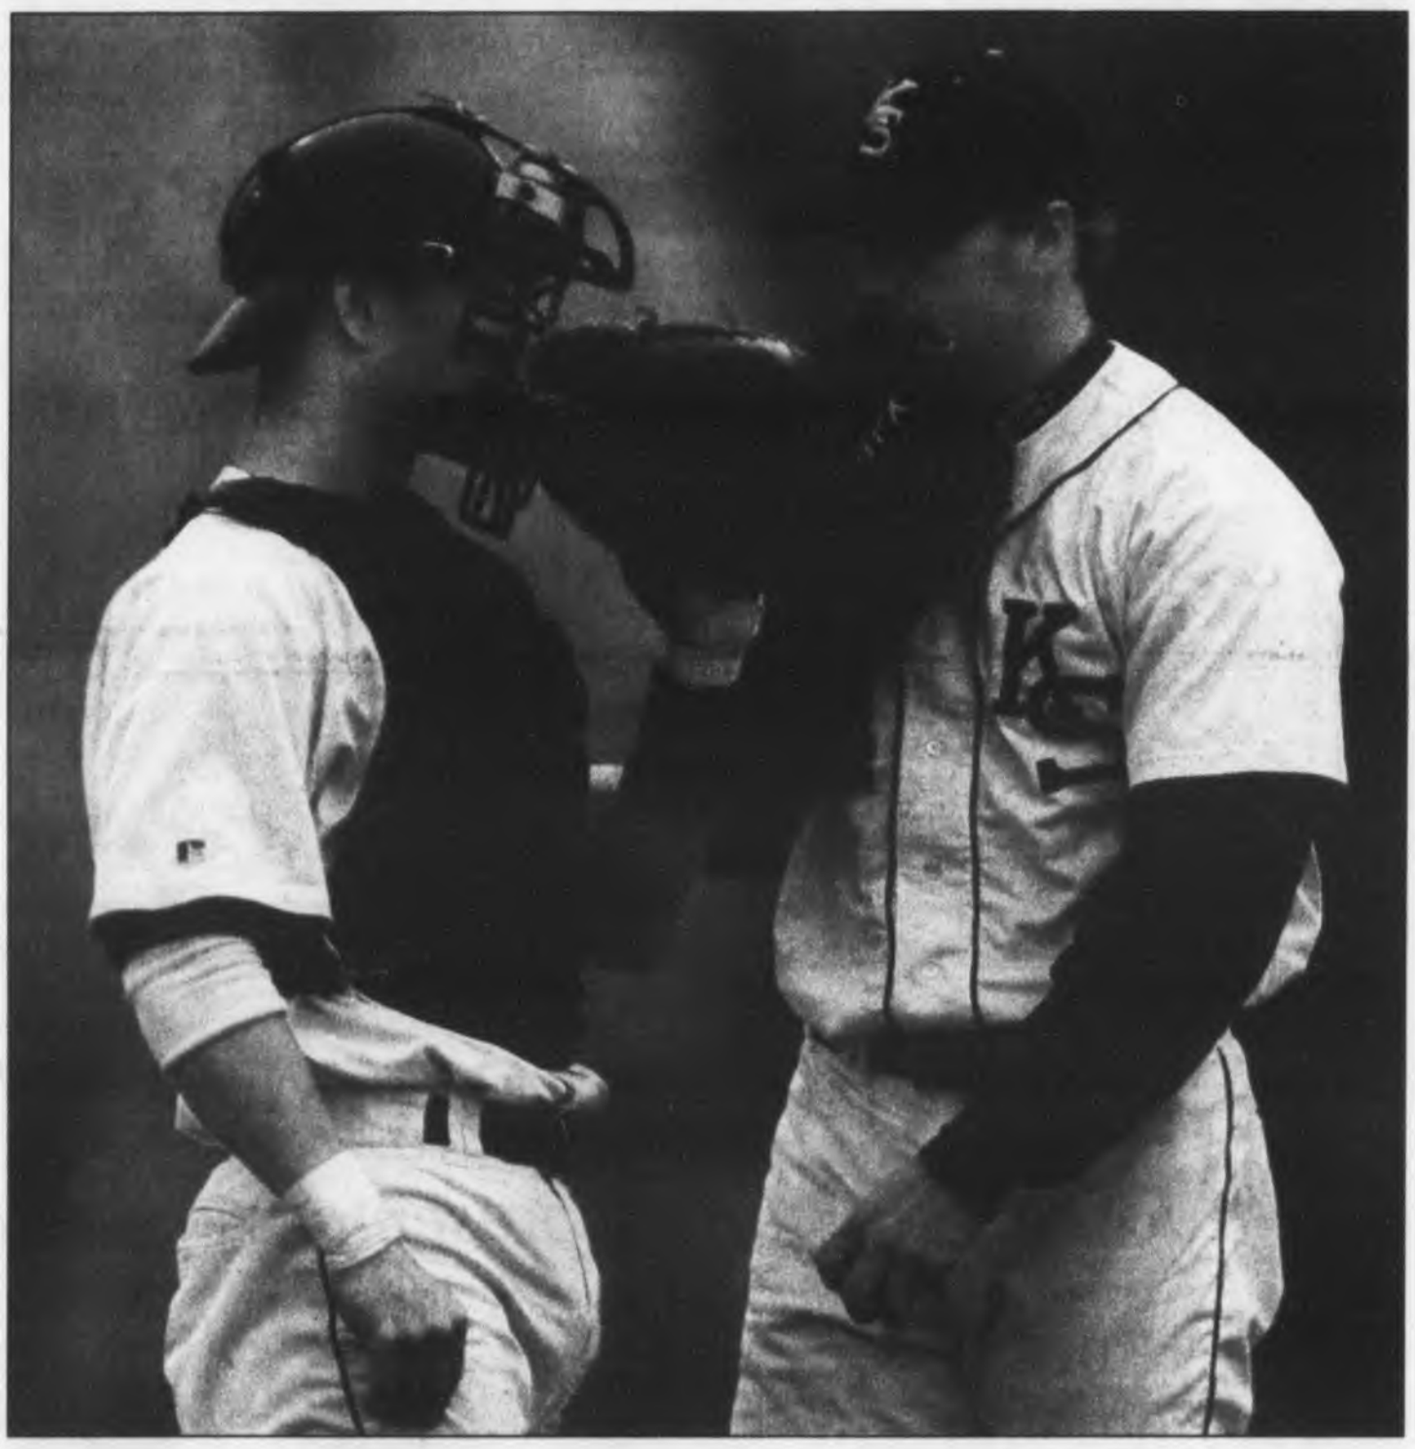
The game was rescheduled for Wednesday at 3:05 p.m.

Temperatures were expected to reach the upper 40s this afternoon. Winds were expected to be 25 to 35 mph with gusts to 50 mph.

"Today's forecast indicates high winds and rapidly dropping temperatures and, for the safety and comfort of our fans, we have decided to postpone the game," Orioles vice-chairman Joe Foss, said. "The forecast for tomorrow is much more favorable and conducive to baseball."

The National Weather Service forecast for Wednesday was for sunny and breezy weather with highs around 60 degrees.

This was the second time in a row that the Orioles home opener was postponed. The Orioles' opening day was canceled only one other time, in 1972 at Memorial Stadium.



The Orioles will stick with their planned starting rotation against the Kansas City Royals.

Jimmy Key will pitch the opener. Scott Kamieniecki, who lost a battle for the No. 5 spot to Shawn Boskie, will leave the bullpen and start Thursday against the Royals. Scott Erickson and Shawn Boskie will follow in the rotation.

Cats tear up Blue Jays, 9-5, in windy, late pull-away win

On a cold, blustery afternoon, an old, Mother-Nature rivalry took place — the cats vs. the birds.

However, the battle was fought on the baseball field instead of in the animal kingdom, with the Wildcats snatching a victory from the Blue Jays of Creighton, 9-5.

K-State used a two-run eighth inning and good bullpen pitching to pull away late. The Wildcats blew an early 6-1 lead as the Blue Jays scored four times to close the gap to 6-5.

In the sixth with one out, starting pitcher Chris Traylor was lifted in favor of Pat Hertzel with the tying run on first.

But Hertzel, along with Brian Thompson and David Johnson, combined to shut down Creighton's hitters, not allowing a hit over the last three-plus innings, while striking out four.

After giving up a one-out solo home run to Adam Christensen, Traylor cruised through the second, third and fourth innings holding the Blue Jays to no base runners and striking out five, before running into trouble in the fifth and sixth innings.

He picked up his third victory of the season, improving his record to 3-4. Nat Stoner absorbed the loss for Creighton.

Head coach Mike Clark liked what he saw from his pitching staff in conditions that are often nightmares for pitchers' ERAs.

"Traylor threw well in tough conditions," he said. "I thought the bullpen did an outstanding job."

"I've played with five or six of those guys during the summer, so I'm pretty familiar with them," Traylor said. "I just tried to keep the ball down, but they did a good job getting key hits."

Clark, however, wasn't ecstatic about the Wildcats' play offensively.

"I was unhappy with our at-bats," he said. "I thought we had a chance to put them away there in the third, but we just put together some bad at-bats there in a row."

"With the wind blowing out at 30 mph, it's bad conditions to pitch in," Clark said. "We were giving into the pitcher too much."

K-State made many fundamental mistakes, which did not help its cause. The Cats' normally solid defense committed three errors, and base runners were picked off three times.

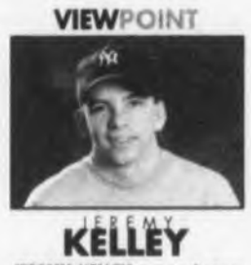
"Well, the outfield is awful rough," Clark said. "The whole field is rough. It needs some general maintenance.

"There's only so much you can do with artificial water, but it looks like we're going to get some rain this weekend," he said.

"We did make some mistakes in the running game," Clark said, "and I am sure we'll go over that tomorrow."

Junior shortstop Heath Schesser continued his dream season, going 2-4 with three RBIs and his team-leading 10th home run of the season.

"This was a must-win for us," he said. "Coming off two losses to A&M we needed a lift. We needed to get back on track."



Schesser's home run was the 21st at Frank Myers Field this season beginning with Big 12 play, raising the Frank Myers renovation fund up to $1,050. Area businesses are donating $50 to the fund each time the Wildcats hit a home run.

With the victory, K-State moves to 21-9 on the season, with a 4-8 record in the Big 12 Conference. Creighton drops to 17-11.

K-State is off until this weekend, when it travels to Lincoln to battle the Nebraska Cornhuskers. The next home game is Tuesday against the Kansas Jayhawks.

Underdog Cats show heart in NCAA title match-up

VIEWPOINT

JEREMY KELLEY

JEREMY KELLEY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Jeremy at (weasal1@ksu.edu).

The underdog.

Essentially it's a team (or sometimes a player) that is dubbed mediocre and not predicted to succeed whenever a challenge arises.

You see teams of this nature everywhere — from basketball to hockey to ice skating.

They're everywhere. When one thinks of underdogs in college basketball, probably the biggest team that stands out is the national championship team of 1988 — KU. KU weaved its way through the tournament bracket upsetting heavy favorites along the way: Duke, Oklahoma and even K-State.

Heck, the New York Yankees were dubbed overrated in its quest for the World Series Championship last season, but they prevailed.

But the biggest of underdogs in recent years was evident in Monday night's NCAA college basketball championship — the Arizona Wildcats.

In all of the aforementioned cases select characteristics prevailed: teamwork, hustle, tenacity and most of all, heart.

Take Arizona. Here is a team with no seniors who give ample playing time on the court. Here is a team with nine regular-season losses, which lost its last two games of the regular season and finished fifth in the Pac-10 Conference. Then you've got a freshman point-guard and a shooting guard who missed 11 games because of academic problems.

Here is a team that has struggled in tournaments past, losing to Providence a few years back when it was heavily favored and dropping a three-point decision to KU last year.

Smells like heartbreak to me.

But Arizona accomplished something no other team has ever done in the history of the NCAA — defeat three No. 1 seeds en route to a championship. To fuel the fire, the three top seeds Arizona beat were the three winningest programs in the history of college basketball, .and they did it all because they had a lot of heart and they didn't back down.

OK, it's my prevailing theme in life.

Check out the two unsung heroes — Miles Simon and Mike Bibby. They have a lot of heart. Simon and Bibby with their relentless three-point shooting never backed down. Just when things appeared to look grim, one scorched the opponent with a three-pointer.

Simon, the tournament's most outstanding player, scored 84 points in his final three games, including 30 in the title game against Kentucky. Simon and Bibby led the tournament in scoring averages with 22 and 18 points per game respectively.

As the Wildcats rampaged through the tournament, they did it in convincing style. In the first round, they were almost knocked off by South Alabama. Down 10 with seven minutes left, Arizona rallied for 22-4 run to win the game 65-57.

After that, the Cats ousted the College of Charleston and with that ended the nation's longest 23-game winning streak. Again, Arizona battled back from a 10-point second half deficit to win by a slim margin.

Then the true test came. Kansas. A contest against the Goliath of college basketball. A contest against a team that had lost just one game all season and was certainly favored to be in the national championship game.

The Wildcats weren't fazed a bit as they jumped out to any early 10-2 lead and never looked back, except for a Jayhawk rally in the last two minutes of the game. The little David had knocked off the mighty giant.

Arizona got a scare from Providence in the regional final and about lost the game. It took an overtime period and some clutch shooting by Simon, Bibby and Jason Terry to advance to its third final four in the last 10 years.

The Tarheels in the east couldn't stop Bibby or Simon either in what was just an ugly game. However, Arizona played the less sloppy basketball and advanced to its first ever Final Four.

The train just kept an rolling as coach Lute Olson pulled out his bag of tricks and turned loose his high-profile transition players. It was probably the best national championship game since the North Carolina-Michigan title game of years ago. A couple of guys with a lot of heart and a never-say-die attitude.

So here it is. Two days later, a new national champion and another underdog that capsized its opponents on the way to a

Peers remember former professor

Chelikowsky

SHAWN DENTON
staff writer

Joseph Chelikowsky, whose excellence in geology left a lasting impression on students and faculty, died Monday, March 31 after a battle with a prolonged illness.

Chelikowsky devoted 40 years of his life to the geology department at K-State. He began his career on campus in 1937 and was head of the Department of Geology and Geography from 1953 to 1968.

Chelikowsky continued to teach at K-State until his retirement in 1977.

"I think his major contribution was to be an excellent teacher," Jack Oviatt, head of the geology department, said. "He taught so many geology students professionally, as well having students who remember him well and continue to contribute to alumni groups."

Oviatt said one change during Chelikowsky's term as department head was the department's move to Thompson Hall.

"It was a major event in those days," Oviatt said.

K-State also established a seismological observatory when Chelikowsky was department head.

Chelikowsky was a professor in structural geology, regional geology and mineralogy. He was also the associate editor for the Kansas Academy of Science from 1963 to 1968.

Dennis Hedke, chairman of the geology advisory council and K-State alumni, said Chelikowsky encouraged his students to use the scientific process.

"I would say, in general, his relationship with all students was very high energy, very well thought of, very knowledgeable, and very descriptive in enticing the imaginative," Hedke said.

Hedke said Chelikowsky brought with him a comprehensive knowledge of the Appalachian Mountain range that former geology students still appreciate.

"From the standpoint of students, his contribution was immeasurable," Hedke said. "I would say, intellectually, Dr. Chelikowsky had a great impact on the department on both faculty and students when he was in residence."

Oviatt said Chelikowsky was a great guy whom virtually everyone liked.

"He was in the category of almost a mentor to me," Hedke said. "As a scientist, he was a strong encourager in my development."

Hedke said Chelikowsky often strove for the extra measure where his work was concerned.

"He was very much an inspiration," Hedke said.

Rotating roommates unites sororities

TRISHA LANGFORD
staff reporter

Twenty-three years ago Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, was looking for a way to create more interaction among K-State's sororities.

The solution she came up with was rotating roommates.

"It's an opportunity for three women of each sorority to move into another house to get acquainted, learn the similarities and differences and to pick up new ideas," Robel said.

The rotation will last for one week, Sunday through Thursday. Selections are made by nominations within each house.

Those who are outgoing, easy to get along with and a good representation of their sorority are chosen, Kelly Kephart, sophomore in business finance, said.

"I have always wanted to participate. It looked like a lot of fun to see how different houses live," Bettine Rezac, junior in industrial engineering, said. "It's also an opportunity to meet new people and broaden my horizons."

Rezac was nominated by the Pi Beta Phi house and will be rotating to the Alpha Xi Delta house.

"I don't know too many girls in that house. In fact, I've never been past their first floor," Rezac said.

Panhellenic Council secretary Kristen Mehan was responsible for the rotating.

Mehan collected the names of those nominated, made the matches and then arranged for those rotating to meet new house members before rotating.

Those moving are encouraged to stay at their new house and participate by attending two formal dinners and other activities.

Rotating roommates is also an opportunity to bring unity to the greek system.

With all of the competitions among the houses it gives the sororities a chance to break down the barriers the competitions might cause.

"It's a little harder to get uptight with another chapter when you know them better," Robel said.

Additions were made to this year's rotation. The four black sororities and Alpha of Clovia were included in the rotation.

"Friendships and more knowledge of the other houses' traditions will be accomplished. You can gain a lot of respect for others," Kephart said.

Tobacco company foresees layoffs, bankruptcy

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM, N.C. — Tobacco maker Liggett Group Inc. told regulators that it might be forced to lay off 273 people and seek bankruptcy court protection.

The company's auditor, Coopers & Lybrand, said in the documents filed Monday with the federal Securities and Exchange Commission that Liggett's debts raise substantial doubt about the company's ability to continue.

The revelation comes nearly two weeks after Liggett said it admitted smoking was addictive and settled 22 state lawsuits seeking to recover Medicaid money spent treating sick smokers.

"It's clear they haven't been focusing on their business," said Thomas Hoens, an analyst for Fitch Investors Service in New York. "They've been focusing on legal issues."

Liggett said in the SEC documents that it might not be able to meet three debt payments due early next year, one for $38 million, a second for $107 million and a third for $24 million.

The SEC filing was part of a 1996 year-end statement from Liggett that showed the company's financial position has continued to deteriorate. Last year, it lost $18.4 million as sales dropped 11 percent to $401 million.

"The company may be forced to seek protection from creditors under applicable laws," the filing said.

diagnosed with malignant melanoma, christa carey tells her story to help others learn about sun protection

CHRISTA CAREY

CHRISTA CAREY is a sophomore in journalism and mass communications. You can e-mail comments to Christa at (skipper@ksu.edu).

My sophomore year of high school, I became the youngest patient in Kansas City to be diagnosed with malignant melanoma.

At 15 years old, I did not know what this meant. I was sure I was going to die.

I remember the way my parents walked into my bedroom, trying to act calm as they announced the news. They left quickly, tears gushing down their faces and left me sitting, stunned and confused.

Just a week before, doctors had removed a dark mole from my left forearm, saying it was nothing to worry about.

It was.

They sent my mole to Harvard Medical School for a second opinion and confirmed malignant melanoma, which is the deadliest form of skin cancer and is fatal if not detected and removed early.

They told me if they had not have found the cancer early, it would have spread through my body and killed me.

My mom, who is a nurse, dug through her medical books looking for some answers.

The next day, Christmas Eve, I had surgery to remove more of the skin tissue. They wanted to get all of the cancer out.

As I sat on the operating table, watching the doctor pull a sharp blade through my flesh. I wondered how this all had happened.

Why me?

I had been swimming competitively since I was six for the outdoor swim club in Mission, Kan. I decided I had gotten the cancer from swimming and being outdoors often.

After that, I became an expert on skin cancer. I spoke with a group of doctors to high-school reporters about the harmful effects of the sun.

Friends asked me more about the disease, and I was supposed to know all the answers.

People still notice the scar on my arm and ask me what happened.

I have checked moles on several people, although I am not certified to do this. I usually refer them to their doctor.

Recently, I decided it was time to tell my story so others could learn how to protect themselves.

The sun in any form is bad. A tan is your skin's way of saying "ouch."

People don't understand this.

I have heard so many myths from people who are clueless about the sun's damaging effects.

Before I left for spring break, a friend told me she had been tanning at a salon before her vacation so she would not get burned. I wanted to tell her how ignorant this is.

Yes, it is worse to burn your skin, but the solution is sunblock.

If she would have just gone on her vacation prepared with sunblock, she would have been fine.

Do not listen to ignorant people who say tanning salons are safe. Tanning beds have killed many people. They just can't link the deaths to tanning beds alone, because victims were also outdoors.

People have burned themselves to death in tanning beds. They tan too much too often and fry not only the epidermis of their skin but their insides as well.

I don't know who started the myth that a tan looks healthy, but it doesn't.

I know a woman who was tan all her young life, and now at 45, she looks like a leather saddlebag and is a prime candidate for skin cancer.

The effects of sun exposure are not worth the look of a tan, so take these precautions:

- Avoid the sun between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. These are the most dangerous hours for UV exposure.
- Make sure you have sunblock, and reapply during these hours. Reapply often.
- Make sure your sunblock has an SPF of 15 or higher.
- For fairer skin use a higher SPF, and be more cautious if you burn easily.
- Wear plenty of clothing and a wide-brimmed hat.
- Watch for skin disfigurations. Have yourself checked at the dermatologist or doctor.
- Have moles checked if they have grown quickly, changed shape or color, and itch or bleed.

Listen to me, and listen to your body. The sun might be beautiful and warm, but the UV rays are damaging any time of the year.

TELL YOUR THERAPIST

A court in Fort Worth, Tex., awarded former patient Jeannie Warren, 23, $8.4 million in her lawsuit against the now-defunct Psychiatric Institute of Fort Worth because of its "rage reduction therapy."

The treatment involves restraining the patient and creating a rage "in a controlled and loving environment," said the Institute, so that any underlying anger will be exposed.

Warren said that, in two dozen lessons, Institute personnel pinned her down, punched her in the abdomen and ribs, and demanded continually to know what she was angry at.

Said Warren, "I couldn't think of anything except, 'You!'"

Slow jury selection conveys strong opinion among prospects

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — Timothy McVeigh's trial moved into a second day Tuesday with one prospective juror saying she has already made up her mind about his guilt and another saying he should pay for his crime if he is convicted.

McVeigh

So far, seven prospects have been interviewed, and all have expressed strong opinions about the highly publicized case in which McVeigh is accused in the Oklahoma City bombing that left 168 people dead and hundreds injured.

Six prospects have said they would be willing to recommend the death penalty should McVeigh be convicted. Three admitted they were reluctant to serve at all.

No. 414, a middle-aged woman who works with learning-disabled children, expressed reservations about the death penalty but said she would be willing to recommend it for such a heinous crime.

"If he has done this … you pay for your crime," she said.

In emotional tones, she recounted her college-aged son's recent brush with death during a bout of spinal meningitis.

She said the experience might give her insight that she could share with other jurors.

McVeigh, leaning over his elbows on the table, appeared riveted by her story. He watched her directly as he listened.

Earlier today, McVeigh's attorney, Stephen Jones, asked Juror No. 851, "As you sit here today, you believe he's guilty based on what you've read?"

"Yes, sir," said the woman, a mother with a 4-year-old child.

Jones also quoted a jury questionnaire on which she wrote, "I can't help but believe he's guilty based on the media reports."

The woman said earlier she has avoided news reports since receiving her jury summons, a five-week period in which The Dallas Morning News and Playboy posted stories on the Internet about McVeigh's purported confessions. Jones has claimed the jury pool was tainted by those accounts.

Among the spectators in the front row were McVeigh's divorced parents, Bill McVeigh of Pendleton, N.Y., and Mildred Frazer of Fort Pierce, Fla. U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch agreed to allow them to view the trial even though they may be witnesses.

Tom Kight, whose stepdaughter, Frankie Merrill, died in the bombing, told reporters he sympathized with the defendant's father.

"This could have been one of our children," Kight said. "We have to have some compassion, not for McVeigh the son, but for the father."

The exhaustive interrogation of potential jurors has covered their views of not only the death penalty and news coverage of the case, but opinions about the American government, the justice system and even the O.J. Simpson trial.

Even McVeigh's attorney, Stephen Jones, said the questioning had progressed slowly.

McVeigh himself nodded and smiled at each potential juror on the first day of questioning, but his expression hardened as discussions turned to the death penalty.

Starting from a pool of about 350, Matsch and attorneys must find 64 jurors who cannot be challenged for legal cause and are open to imposing the death penalty.

Each side will be able to dismiss 20 candidates, and then to use three more peremptory challenges to whittle the number to 12 jurors and six alternates. The process could take weeks.

McVeigh, 28, could face a death sentence if convicted on murder, conspiracy and weapons-related charges in the April 19, 1995, blast. Co-defendant Terry Nichols is to be tried later.

Only four relatives of the victims watched the first day here and there were still only a handful today.

In Oklahoma City, where there's room for 320 survivors and victims to watch a closed-circuit telecast of the trial, only 60 showed up the first day and just 30 Tuesday.

Yankees opened defense of their World Series title in Seattle.

The National League schedule included Cincinnati's 11-4 afternoon victory over Colorado. Also, it was Chicago-Florida and Atlanta-Houston in the late afternoon, with Philadelphia-Los Angeles, New York-San Diego and Pittsburgh-San Francisco playing at night.

Belle made his debut with Chicago in the climate-controlled SkyDome and paid immediate dividends for the White Sox's $55-million investment.

Belle, whose defection from Cleveland to Chicago was baseball's biggest off-season story, drove in the first run of the new season with a first-inning double. He added a home run in the eighth inning.

And in continuing his pledge this season to be more cooperative with the media, baseball's $10 million-a-year-man even talked about his performance.

"I'm happy to come over and be productive in the first game," Belle said. "There was pressure coming over, hitting with a guy like Frank Thomas and our tremendous lineup."

The White Sox trailed 5-2 in the eighth when Thomas singled and Belle followed with a home run into the left-field seats off AL Cy Young winner Pat Hentgen. Belle went the entire exhibition season without a homer.

"I looked terrible in spring training," he said. "Everybody was wondering when I was going to hit a home run. Once the season starts, everything is for keeps. These are the statistics that count. The main thing is that we started the season out 1-0."

So did Texas, although John Wetteland made the Rangers sweat out the ninth inning.

Wetteland, the World Series MVP for the Yankees last season, survived a 30-pitch ninth inning in Texas' win over Milwaukee at Arlington, Texas. Wetteland entered in the ninth and quickly got into trouble, allowing a one-out single and a walk. After getting a fly out, he walked Jeff Cirillo to load the bases.

Wetteland got out of it when Dave Nilsson hit a game-ending pop-up to shortstop.

"I was extremely nervous," Wetteland said. "There was a lot going on out there. It was opening day, and the team had a win in mind. I had a lot of adrenaline going. I was fighting myself a little. I really never gave myself a chance."

In Cincinnati, Deion Sanders returned to baseball with a big game to help the Reds over the Rockies.

Sanders, who took last season off to become a two-way player with the Dallas Cowboys, went two-for-four with an RBI, a pair of stolen bases and two runs scored.

ROYALS

his opening day start because of a swollen elbow, hopes to return April 7 in Kansas City.

"It's just a little swelling, but it's kind of preventing me from getting my full range of motion," Mussina said.

Orioles manager Davey Johnson said Mussina's injury is "something that we just don't want to push.

"He could probably pitch, but we feel this is the best thing," Johnson said.

Enter Key, who signed with the Orioles as a free agent during the off-season after winning Game 6 for the New York Yankees in last year's World Series.

A year ago, the Orioles opened the season by beating the Royals 4-2. Baltimore swept the series en route to an 11-2 start and ultimately made the playoffs for the first time in 13 years.

The opening-day loss proved to be a sign of things to come for the Royals, too. Kansas City went 75-86 and finished in the American League Central basement.

Both teams have changed dramatically since last season, although Kevin Appier will be making his club-record sixth straight start for the Royals.

Barring a late change, the Royals will have only two people in the same spot as on opening day last year: Appier and catcher Mike Macfarlane.

Jose Offerman, who opened last year at shortstop, will be at second and Tom Goodwin moves from left field to center. Chili Davis, Jeff King, Jay Bell and Jermaine Dye are among the newcomers the Royals hope can perk up an offense that last season scored the fewest runs in the AL.

Hepatitis infects 150 children

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Michigan doctors were stumped as schoolchildren fell ill with hepatitis. Federal "disease detectives" hopped on a plane and five days later sent out the word the culprit was frozen strawberries served in schools in possibly six states.

The government says it acted fast in fighting the mild liver infections. But Wednesday, consumer advocates wrote President Clinton that this latest outbreak after a year of food-poisoning scares signals it's time to create a single federal food-safety agency.

"The bugs are getting ahead of us here, and we need to catch up," said Caroline Smith DeWaal of the Center for Science in the Public Interest.

She says underfunded programs at the Food and Drug Administration, Agriculture Department and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention merely recall food after people are sickened instead of preventing harm.

Although the U.S. food supply is called the world's safest, some 9,000 Americans die every year from food poisoning and 9 million to 33 million are sickened.

Just in the last year, more than 1,000 Americans were sickened by parasite-tainted Guatemalan raspberries, at least 100 got E. coli poisoning from lettuce, a child died and dozens of others were sickened by E. coli-tainted apple juice, and bad oysters left hundreds ill, DeWaal said.

Clinton didn't immediately respond, but he has asked Congress for a $43 million food budget increase to, among other things, get these agencies to work together — and quickly.

"There are important challenges to be overcome," acknowledged Michael Friedman, acting commissioner of the FDA, which is the nation's top consumer protection agency but devotes just one-fourth of its budget — $225 million — to food.

"We're working to further improve the safety of the food supply in this country," added CDC Director David Satcher.

The latest scare, from frozen strawberries, illustrates the system.

About 150 schoolchildren in Michigan got hepatitis A, a mild and common liver infection but a puzzling cluster big enough to prompt the state to call in CDC on March 24.

By March 27, CDC detectives had surveyed patients' eating and sanitation habits and found a common denominator: They all ate frozen strawberries — not fresh ones — served through USDA's school-lunch program. And it is unlikely Michigan school workers spread the virus because no one employee came in contact with fruit at all the affected schools, CDC concluded.

Armed with that finding, FDA began tracing the berries through distributor Andrew & Williamson of San Diego and uncovered about 1 million pounds that may have been contaminated.

The berries are believed to have been grown in northern Mexico last spring, Friedman said. About half went to the school programs in Michigan and five other states — Arizona, California, Iowa, Tennessee and Georgia — that were warned Saturday about the hepatitis risk.

But the other half was sold commercially, and the FDA is now tracking them. Some may have been processed into other foods, such as jams, that require heating that could have killed the hepatitis virus — and because the berries are so old, few may still be left.

FDA tests random samples of imported foods for various bugs, but there is no test that can detect the hepatitis virus on produce, Friedman said.

FDA inspectors are in Mexico investigating whether the berries were contaminated in the field, possibly through irrigation with dirty water. They also are investigating

White House: Wichita doctor's donations OK

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The protection that U.S. marshals afforded a Kansas doctor from pro-life violence was proper and had nothing to do with his political donations to Democrats, administration officials said Wednesday.

The marshals have protected Dr. George Tiller and his Women's Health Care Services in Wichita at times due to what local law enforcement officials viewed as threats to the facility, said Bill Dempsey, spokesman for the U.S. Marshals Service.

Any suggestion that the security was connected to Tiller's political contributions is crazy, Dempsey said. "We have been working on this problem of security at the clinics for a couple of years now."

The Wichita clinic is one of the few in the country that performs abortions in the third trimester and has long been a target for pro-life protests. Tiller was shot in both arms in 1993 by an attacker.

The physician gave $25,000 to the Democratic National Committee in March 1996 and later attended a White House coffee where he personally thanked the president for the marshal's protection.

Tiller and his wife, Jeanne, also gave $13,795 to a variety of candidates, including Kansas Democratic congressional hopefuls and Clinton's re-election campaign, according to federal records.

The White House on Wednesday defended Tiller's right to make the contributions.

"People who come into contact with the government, in a variety of ways, contribute to politics in this country, and there's not any reason why that should bar anyone from participating in politics as a contributor," Mike McCurry, White House press secretary, said.

top honors

JUSTIN KASTNER, senior in food science, and Vickie Choitz, senior in political science, education and women's studies, received Harry S. Truman Scholarships. The scholarship is geared toward college students who plan to work in public service and can be used for senior-year studies or for graduate school.

Scholars grateful for family, University support

Messages from President Jon Wefald were waiting on the answering machines of Justin Kastner, senior in food science, and Vickie Choitz, senior in political science, education and women's studies.

The messages asked them to call Wefald back. When they both did, they found out they each had been awarded $30,000 Harry S. Truman Scholarships.

"It was such a long process to go through — over a year," Choitz said. "But it was just amazing. I think I'm still on cloud nine."

After the recipients found out March 20, they called the people who are closest to them.

Kastner, who was with his girlfriend Susie Viterise, senior in family studies, went directly to his parents' house to tell them the news. Choitz, after placing a call to one of her mentors, Ann Butler, former director of women's studies at K-State, went to the Calvin computer lab to tell her boyfriend, Ted Poppitz, senior in business finance.

"He told me that he knew I would get it," Choitz said. "It's nice to have that kind of support."

This is the seventh time in the history of the competition the University has produced two winners in one year. This year 69 people were named Truman scholars. The scholarship is geared toward college students who plan to work in public service. The scholarship money can be used for senior-year studies or for graduate school.

"It says a lot about the two who were selected," Beth Powers, scholarship adviser, said. "I was very pleased and glad that the regional committee saw that we had two good candidates."

Both recipients said Powers was instrumental in their being selected. She assisted both scholars in preparing for the lengthy application process of the scholarship.

"She was so supporting and demanding of us," Choitz said. "This included encouraging us to work continually on our applications and providing practices."

Powers, who is in her first-year advising the scholarship, said it was her job to keep them on top of the process and assist them in many different areas.

"I consider myself someone who helps them see the various alternatives that are available to them," Powers said.

One of the areas Truman nominees have to keep up with is current events. This entailed reading papers and watching news coverage daily.

"It was agony at times for me that I couldn't keep up with everything," Kastner said.

Kastner said that the endless help he received from the University helped him on his road to the Truman scholarship.

"If I asked for help, it was taken very seriously because of the tradition at K-State," Kastner said.

This tradition, which ranks K-State first among public universities in the number of Truman Scholars, allows students to have a solid chance at being selected. The University has had 22 recipients.

"Part is preparation and part is a recognition at K-State that these kind of academic opportunities are important," Kastner said.

Kastner, who is Manhattan's youngest City Commissioner ever elected, had planned on graduating in May. Since the scholarship requires that a recipient stay as an undergraduate at least one more semester, he will now stay in Manhattan for one more year and work toward a minor in leadership studies before he sets off to graduate school at the University of

SpringDance '97 ready for McCain

YVONNE PEARSON
staff reporter

Almost 60 students will pirouette, leap and stomp across McCain Auditorium's stage during SpringDance '97 at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

SpringDance is an annual dance concert, with a variety of dances including ballet, jazz and modern dance. Three student works will also be included in the concert. There will be one original and two classical ballets.

Although many cast members are dance majors, most are not. Many have never been on stage before.

"We're a liberal arts program, and we encourage a lot of non-majors to do it," Luke Kahlich, director of dance, said.

One non-major said being in SpringDance was a valuable life experience.

"I met a lot of new people, and it's keeping my dancing ability up," Amy Frese, freshman in elementary education, said. "I like dancing more than I did before because now I know more about it."

One modern dance piece will be choreographed by the guest alumna artist, Jo Byrnes Miller. Her modern piece will be based on some of her personal experiences in the desert.

There will be a jazz piece with cajun and rhythm and blues music, choreographed by Kahlich.

"Whoevercanbethereonwednesdaynight," choreographed by Kahlich, is a modern theatrical dance with circus-type movement and a lot of props. It will be danced by whomever wanted to perform and could meet on Wednesday nights for practice.

Tickets can be purchased at McCain box office. They are $9 for general admission and $6 for students.

Talks under way to sell CompuServe; stocks rise

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — CompuServe's parent company confirmed Wednesday that talks were under way to sell the second-largest online service, sending CompuServe stock up nearly 15 percent amid reports that America Online was the bidder.

While a deal faces formidable hurdles, a combination of CompuServe and the nation's largest online service could create an industry behemoth — boosting AOL's 8-million membership by more than a third, erasing a big rival and aiding its ambitions to sell dramatically more online advertising.

A combined company also might be in a better position to compete with the Microsoft Network, the nation's third-largest online service backed by the deep pockets of software giant Microsoft Corp.

H&R Block, which owns 80 percent of Columbus, Ohio-based CompuServe Inc., would not say with whom it was talking about the takeover. A spokeswoman for Dulles, Va.-based AOL said the company doesn't comment on rumors.

• STUDENT LOSES TO TEACHER IN HESSTON MAYOR'S RACE.

HESSTON — Students in John Waltner's American government class had always joked that they would run against their teacher for mayor, but Christopher Friesen made the threat into a real life political lesson.

After knocking on nearly every door to convince people in this central Kansas town of 3,000 to vote for him, Friesen earned 236 votes for mayor.

But Waltner, Friesen's teacher and the incumbent mayor, was re-elected with 391 votes.

Though Friesen lost the race, he said he learned an important lesson: an 18-year-old student can be taken seriously as a political candidate.

"I thought I could convince people that I would be a better choice," Friesen said.

"I think that what really held me back was the fact that I am 18, and they didn't think I was mature enough."

Friesen said he decided to run for mayor while taking Waltner's government class this semester, and the two remained friends throughout the campaign.

Waltner even made Friesen vow to speak to his class for the next four years if he won the race.

When Friesen came over to his house late Tuesday, Waltner asked him if he would still speak to the class about running for mayor.

• NAVY OFFICER ACCUSED OF RAPE, ASSAULT BY JAPANESE WOMAN.

WASHINGTON — A Navy petty officer is under arrest at a base in Japan after being accused of rape and assault by a Japanese woman, a Navy official said Wednesday.

The incident allegedly occurred Tuesday in the barracks at the Yokosuka naval base, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Defense Secretary William Cohen, asked about the matter at a photo session at the Pentagon, said: "The matter is currently under investigation. He is under arrest, and we will know more details as the investigation unfolds."

The 21-year-old woman was taken to the Navy hospital at the base, examined and released, said the Navy official.

The petty officer third class, whose name has not been released, is being detained in the barracks while the Navy Criminal Investigative Service investigates, the official added.

Anger against American forces in Okinawa boiled up after a 12-year-old girl was raped by U.S. servicemen in September 1995, and again this year after news that American troops in training had accidentally fired bullets containing depleted uranium.

An agreement has been reached on moving some U.S. facilities out of Okinawa, but the island will continue to house more than half of the 47,000 troops based in Japan.

• KING HUSSEIN TO UNDERGO SURGERY ON PROSTATE GLAND.

WASHINGTON — Jordan's King Hussein will undergo prostate surgery at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., the Jordanian Embassy said Wednesday.

Hussein will check into the clinic Saturday for what an embassy statement described as "a small surgical operation to remove a part of an inflamed prostate gland."

Hussein had a checkup at the clinic March 23.

Tests confirmed he was free of cancer, the statement said.

The 61-year-old monarch has been returning to the Mayo Clinic every year since 1992, when surgeons removed his ureter and left kidney following a diagnosis of cancer.

Hussein has been in Washington for talks with President Clinton, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and other officials.

Cable channel offers students convenience, academic help

RACHAEL KRUEGER
staff reporter

By pressing a button on the television, K-State students and Manhattan residents have access to everything from City Commission meetings to the latest K-State review session.

The Local Origination Channel from TCI, cable channel 19, allows K-State and many public service organizations to broadcast at no cost.

The normal satellite programming, Knowledge TV, can be overridden by local programming, Richard Cofer, general manager of TCI, said.

"Generally we get things of a public service nature," he said.

Examples include the Red Cross, Fort Riley, City Commission meetings and school board meetings.

"It's good public relations for TCI," Cofer said.

Dave Deitch, associate director for operations at the Educational Communications Center, said the channel benefits K-State as well.

Several thousand students enrolled in classes that broadcasted review sessions were surveyed last year.

"The results were overwhelmingly positive," Deitch said.

The broadcast sessions offer students the option of watching it at the scheduled time, taping it with a VCR or watching it live at the ECC at Bob Dole Hall.

Paul Ciccantell teaches Introduction to Sociology and broadcasts his reviews.

"It requires only myself and my teaching assistant to come to campus for the review — not 300 to 400 students," he said.

The convenience and safety issues benefit everyone, Ciccantell said.

Nontraditional students with children also take advantage of the home review sessions, Deitch said.

Roger Trenary, professor in the economics department, said he uses the station for similar review purposes.

To be able to watch and discuss the review with friends is a benefit students do not have in a classroom atmosphere, Trenary said.

Ciccantell said the tension of asking questions is reduced because a student is not in a crowded classroom.

"They can call in a question, and I'll answer it on the air," he said.

Trenary said problems do arise with the broadcasts. He said students in Junction City would not be able to watch review sessions because they do not get Manhattan cable.

"Some people don't have access to the television show," Trenary said.

The only option for these students is to attend the live session as a regular review, or check out a copy of the VCR tape at Farrell Library.

Ciccantell said the broadcast sessions are no substitution for class, but they work well for the reviews.

Aside from reviews, K-State uses the channel to rebroadcast popular events such as Landon Lectures. One journalism class uses the channel to produce a weekly news broadcast.

Both Ciccantell and Trenary said everyone at the ECC is extremely helpful.

"It's a way to give back to the University," Deitch said.

Bike Fair aims to raise registration

HEATHER PERKINS
staff reporter

Students can register their bikes with Parking Services at the Bike Fair from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. today in front of the K-State Student Union.

Parking Services officials said they would like all bikes to be registered. There is no cost for registering a bike.

"They are not issuing tickets for unregistered bikes, but we encourage students to register them for identification purposes. Once, someone stole a bunch of bikes off one of the racks and dumped them. For the ones that were registered we were able to locate the owners," Peggy Winkler, director of Parking Services, said.

The Bike Fair will also give students the opportunity to see plans for the new bike paths.

"We want to let people be aware that using bikes as alternative transportation will be easier with the new paths. Biking is fun along with being a mode of transportation. It is an alternative to dealing with parking on campus. It is also very healthy," Winkler said.

Local bike shops will be on hand to show the latest in bikes and biking accessories.

"The bike fair will show what recreational biking will be like in the future," Winkler said.

Officer Oscar Ruiz will be available if there are questions about bike safety and rules and regulations.

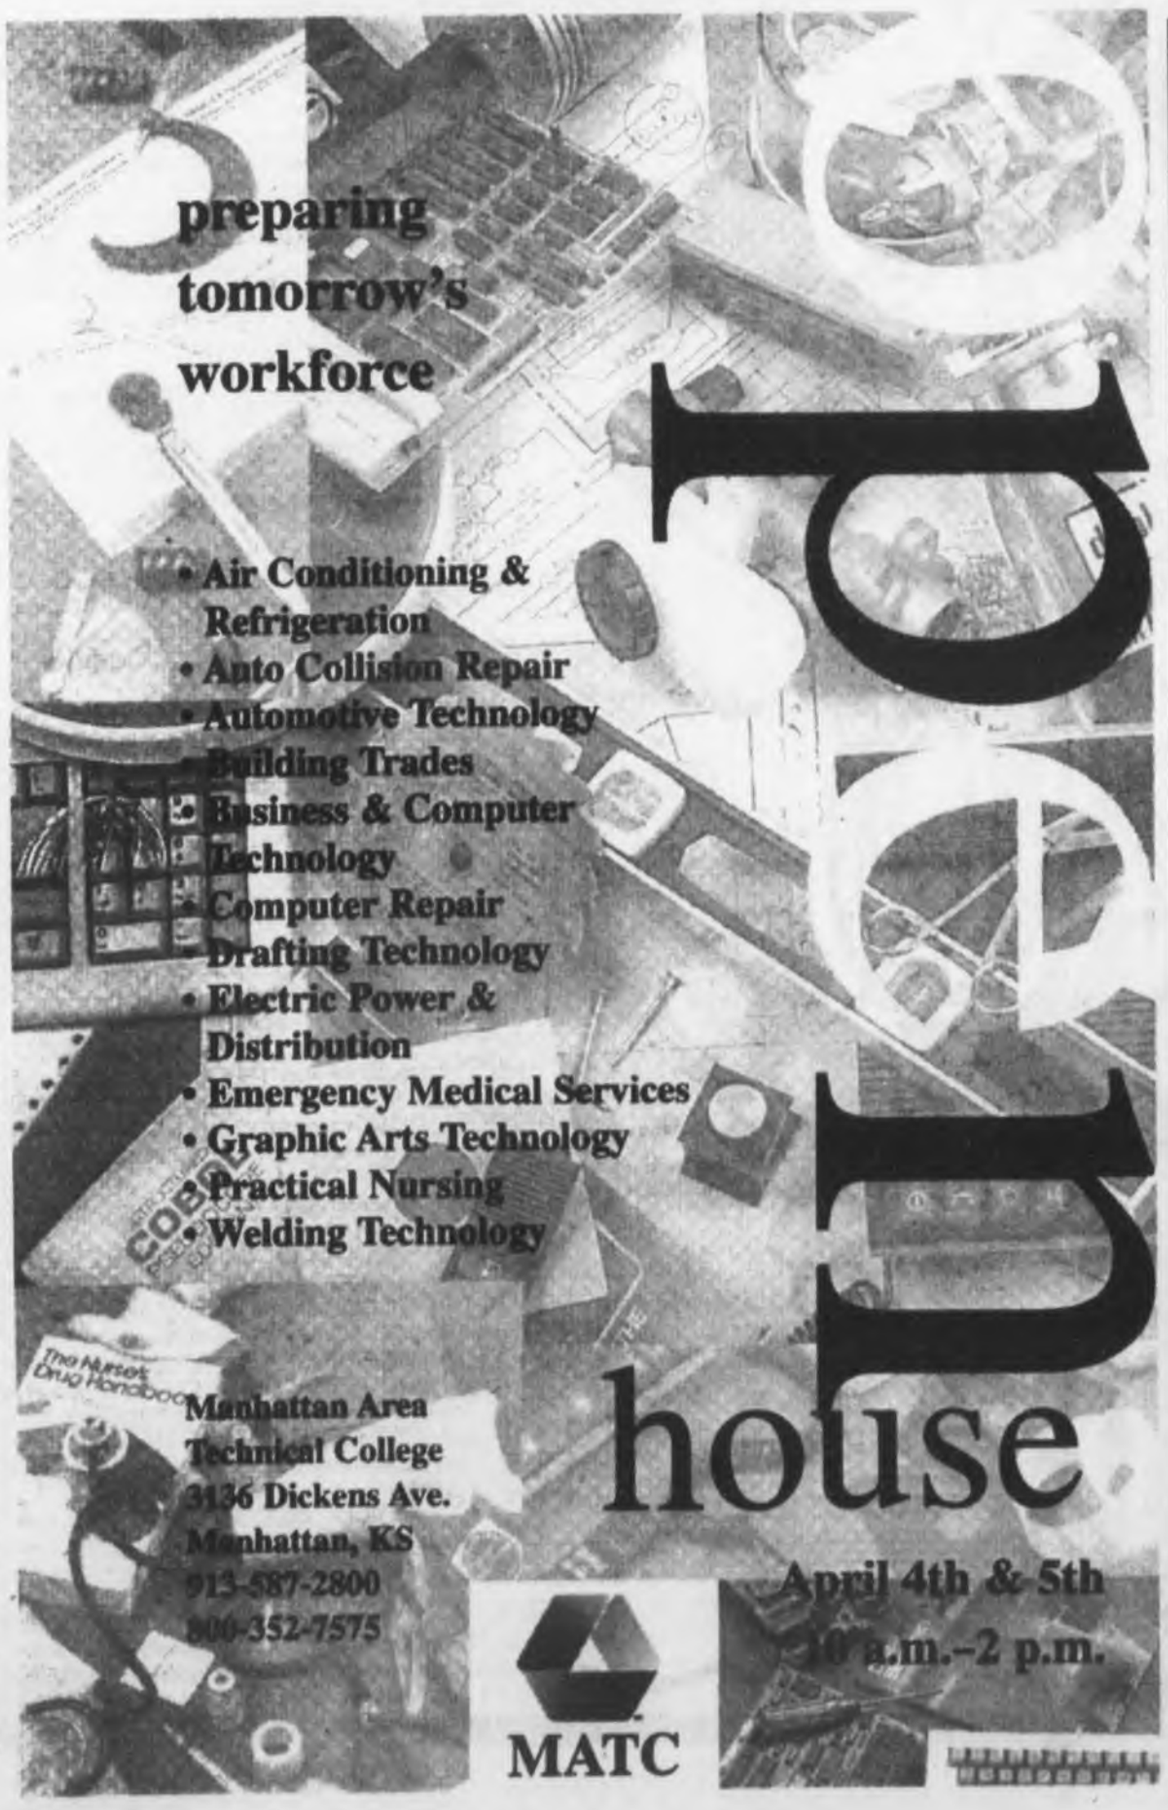
"An officer will be there with his equipment for bike patrol and to answer questions. He has already been out warning cyclists about safety issues and proper parking," Winkler said.

NASA delays launch to install pipe insulation

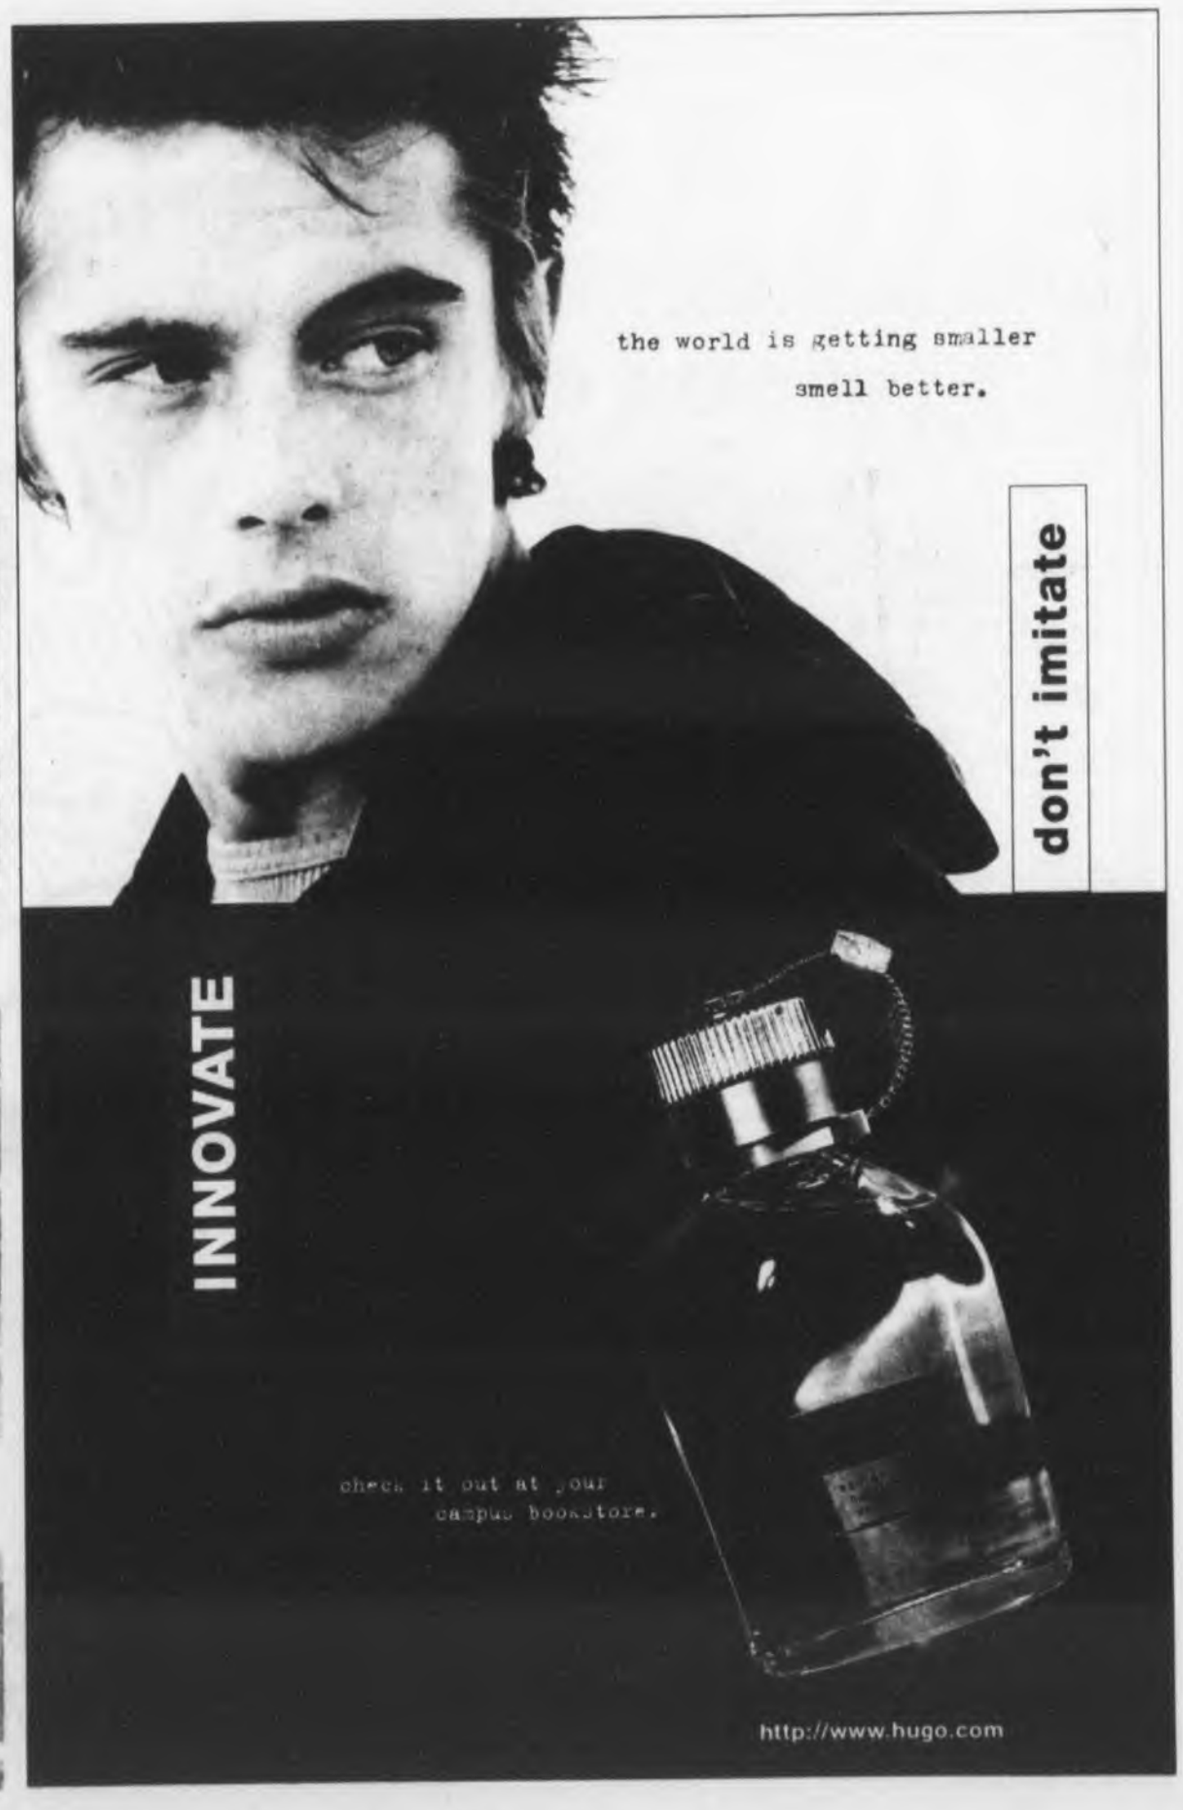
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA installed insulation on space shuttle Columbia's water pipes Wednesday, holding up the launch for a job that should have been done as many as 14 years ago.

NASA delayed Columbia's launch by one day to perform the work. The shuttle is now scheduled to lift off with seven astronauts and 33 laboratory experiments on Friday afternoon.



The space agency realized only this week that 3-foot sections of two coolant loops on Columbia lacked thermal blankets, said shuttle operations director Bob Sieck. The fear is that water in the exposed lines might freeze in orbit, causing the shuttle electronics to overheat and forcing an early landing.



Columbia may have been flying without the insulation since 1983, two years after it made the first shuttle flight, Sieck said.

"We're not smart enough to know whether these blankets were left off intentionally or they were an 'I forgot,'" Sieck said. Engineers were poring over years of paperwork to find that answer, he added.

While the shuttle has flown safely before without the insulation, Columbia's flight this time is longer than usual at 16 days, Sieck said.

"We want to continue our record, obviously, of safe and successful missions so this is the right thing to do," he said.

If you're not already participating in Open House with your club, call your college to find out how you can volunteer on Saturday.

Or you can find out what researchers have been doing on your campus.

Eat fried bugs. Watch rats walk a tightrope. Try free doughnuts and French bread straight out of the oven. Do all the things on campus that you never get around to doing.

Find out what other departments are doing. Let people in the College of Business Administration show you how blackjack, poker and other casino games of chance relate to business concepts.

In the College of Engineering, you can find out how to design tennis rackets and baseball bats.

Experience someone else's disability in a simulation in the College of Education, and learn about the special education program.

To find out more about what you can do on campus Saturday, check out the World Wide Web site about Open House at (http://www.ksu.edu/Consider/Open House.html). You can also get the Collegian's Open House section, which will come out Friday.

If you don't volunteer or go learn about bugs, just make sure you don't tarnish K-State's friendly image.

Behave yourself. Give directions. Pick up cigarette butts.

When you drive around town Saturday, be polite to the out-of-town drivers. Remember what Manhattan traffic is like the day the residence halls open? Get ready for that caliber of traffic flow again. Give yourself a few extra minutes to drive across town.

• COLUMNIST'S FAITH MISPLACED

Editor,

While I sympathize with Kevin Bailey's situation (and certainly wish his father every success in overcoming cancer), I think his wish to find solace and comfort in a fairy tale is absurd. Only Bailey's father and the doctors can cure cancer if, in this situation, if it can be cured at all.

No god, no Jesus, no amount of prayer to the supernatural, no spaceship full of aliens hiding behind the Hale-Bopp comet will do it. If it can be cured, only human beings will do it. And it is in each other — family and friends — that we should seek to find our comfort and support ... a comfort based in reality and not one based upon nonsense.

I think if Bailey applied the same criteria he uses to deny the existence of all other gods from all other religious beliefs, he would find he must deny the existence of his own God as well.

With his father in a life-and-death situation, now is the time Bailey should be getting a grip on reality, not immersing himself in half-baked, pie-in-the-sky religious dogma.

• SHELTER THANKS PARTICIPANTS

Editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of all the resident halls, and Van Zile in particular, for organizing and participating in the "Throw A Pie, Feed A Family" fundraiser. The event raised $142.50 and helped raise awareness about the Manhattan Emergency Shelter and the services that we offer to the community.

Thank you for all of your hard work. Your ongoing support will help MESI continue to provide services to those in need.

We, as human beings, are fickle creatures. The concept of humanity is one of extremes. People can be quite logical, but they can also be amazingly irrational. There is no constant to our nature: We are dynamic creatures. Human beings are, as Shakespeare wrote in "Hamlet," "The beauty of the world, the paragon of animals."

This uniqueness, though, can be dangerous. Part of human nature is surrounded by fear and superstition. Whether a person looks to the sky in wonder or behind his or her shoulder in a parking lot, we have a fear of the unknown. No aspect of our logical side, for example, technology, can lead us away from all the dark corners of our psyches.

Those who follow their curiosity lead us all into a darker place. Last week, America saw another group of people follow each other into death. The members of Heaven's Gate, a cult near San Diego, committed mass suicide. The members themselves were led by their leader to believe that the Hale-Bopp comet was actually a shielded spaceship which was going to carry their spirits to heaven.

Despite that revelation, perhaps no one, in the end, will really know why they did what they did. Speculation must be left among littered paper cups and empty pill bottles. What we can look at, though, are the aspects of cult status which continue in our society.

Right now, general opinion scoffs at groups of individuals such as Heaven's Gate members or the doomsday militias in Montana, but we must also remember that, at one point in time, people scoffed at a man who walked around talking to fishermen and gathering disciples.

The point I would really like to highlight regards the way we follow each other into doom. Just as the members of Heaven's Gate followed one another like lemmings into water, we follow one another into our own fears.

It would appear that our collective rational side is being dissolved in a solution of comets and dates.

Last week, I looked at Hale-Bopp on a friend's porch in Indiana with a pen in my hand, writing about it. I have no doubt, though, that three or four thousand years ago a person was looking at something similar in the sky, thinking the same thoughts I was.

At the turn of the last millennium, cultists most likely locked themselves away, staring like scared rabbits towards the sky, waiting for God to end it all.

> "We live in difficult times, and a new century, possibly filled with more misery, is something no one wants to accept."

It is understandable how a new millennium presents a challenge. We live in difficult times, and a new century, possibly filled with more misery, is something no one wants to accept.

The solution to this matter does not rest in a bottle of pills or hoping that some spaceship is going to come. Both of those measures are escapist. I believe that cults, and some major religions, are not used as a support, but as a shield against harsh reality.

What if the world was going to end tomorrow? There's nothing we can do about it, so why fret about something we have no control over?

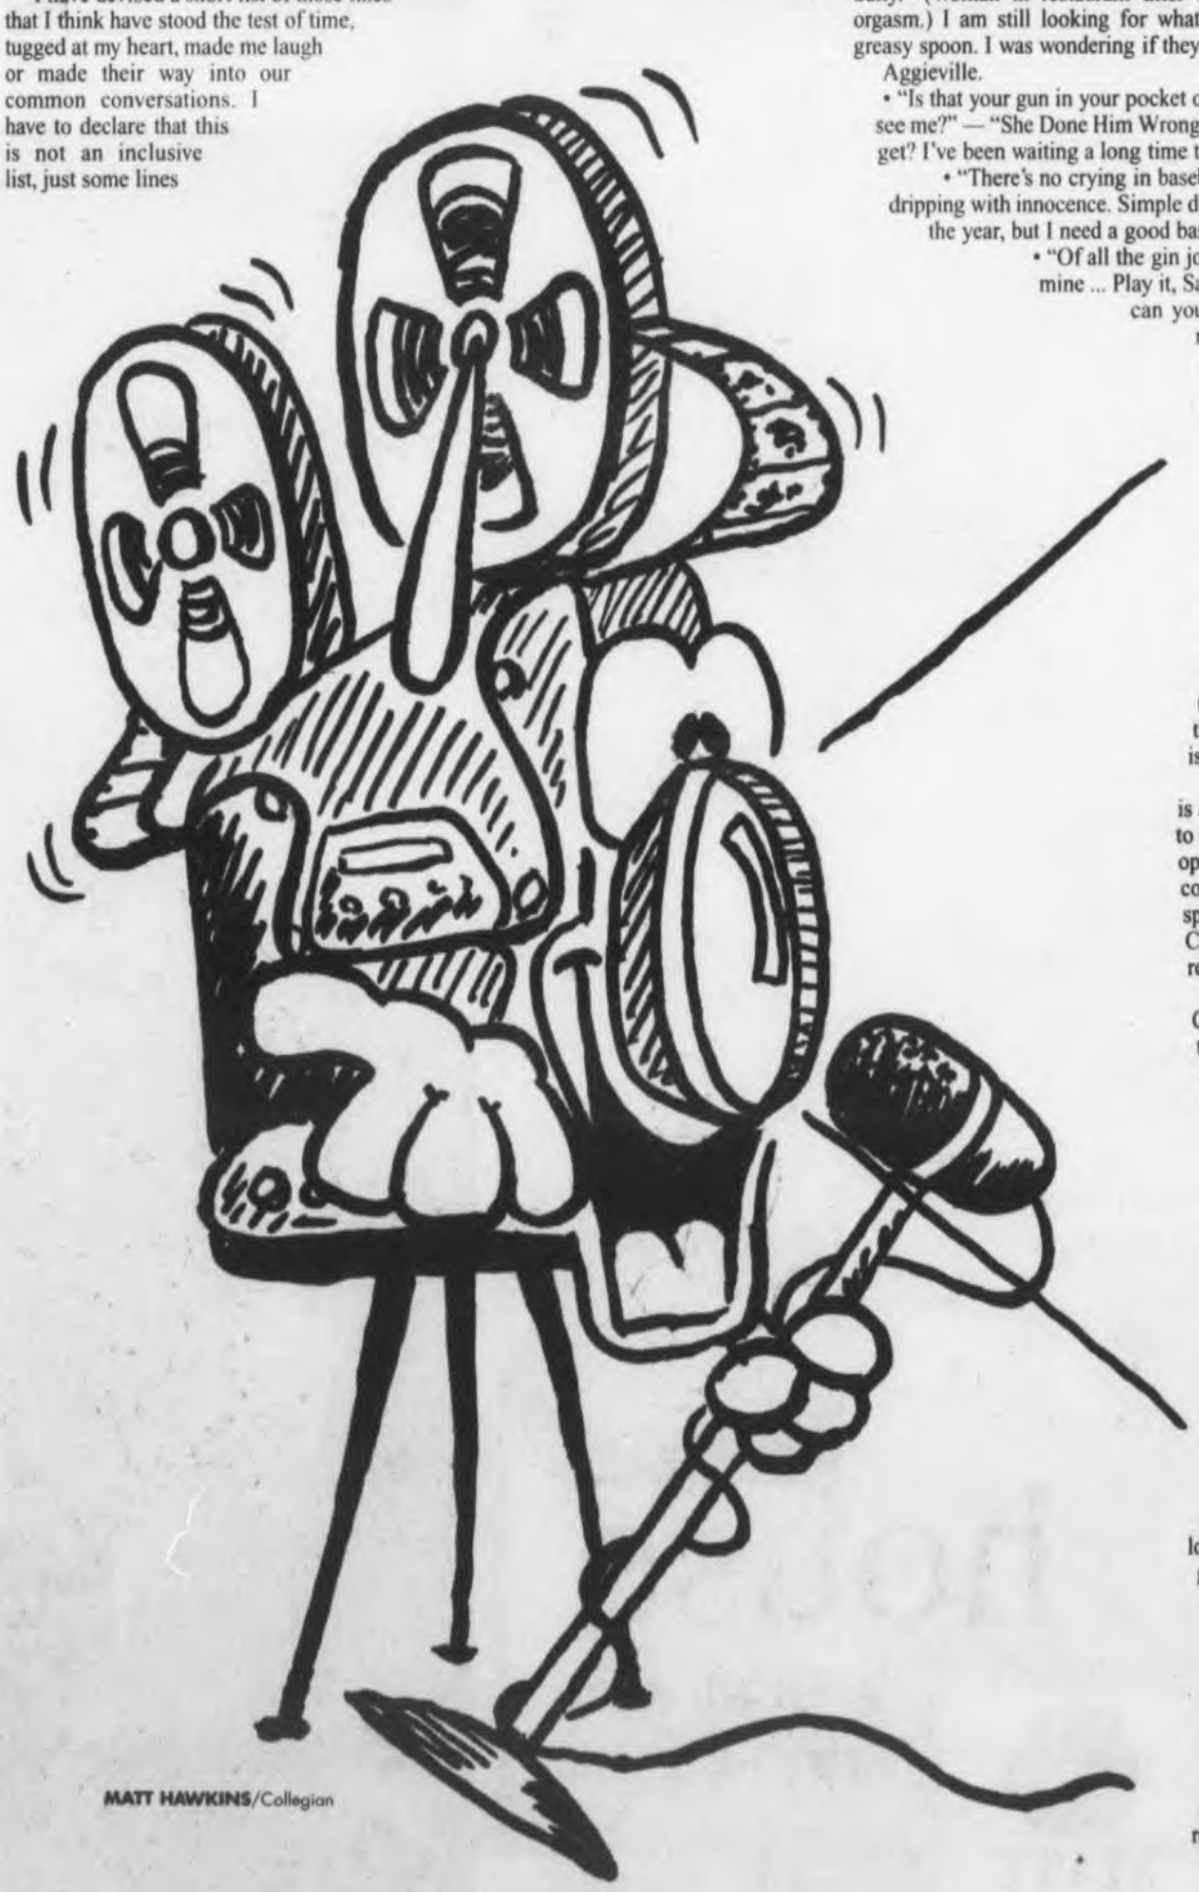
Instead of viewing our upcoming millennia as unique, we should look at it in perspective. People have always feared the unknown; humanity has thought that the world was flat, the sun was a God and that a radio broadcast of "War of Worlds" was actually a Martian invasion.

Instead of spending time and money focusing on 39 people in San Diego, we as a people should look towards the strives humanity is making towards a positive beginning of the 21st century.

Instead of looking to the sky, or the next century, as a source of fear, perhaps we should look at it as a source of hope.

Movie lines feed the soul

VIEWPOINT



VALERI CRENSHAW

VALERI CRENSHAW is a graduate student in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Valeri at (vrc4359@ksu.edu).

Isn't it funny how a movie scene or line can really grab your attention? You can remember it word for word as if it were a moment of your own life. I love those lines that can be taken completely out of context and still have an effect. I think that is why I am such a "Seinfeld" buff.

It baffles me how some movie lines become so mainstream that people say them over and over to the point of annoyance. I will never forget a couple of semesters ago when I vowed to strangle the next Jim Carrey wannabe who belted out "Aaaaaawrightythen." And every time I turn on the television, I am amazed how many products, actors and broadcasters can work in a little "May the force be with you" hoopla. How long is that movie going to be around, anyway?

I have devised a short list of those lines that I think have stood the test of time, tugged at my heart, made me laugh or made their way into our common conversations. I have to declare that this is not an inclusive list, just some lines that I have enjoyed, and I hope you do, too.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

• "And stop calling me Shirley." — "Airplane." It might not be mentally challenging or emotionally moving, but isn't slapstick comedy fun?

• "Toto, I have a feeling we're not in Kansas anymore." — "The Wizard of Oz." Those of you from Kansas are probably as sick of this line as I am. The next person who tells me to click my heels together ... well, let's just say if the concealed weapons law passes, look out!

• "I'll have what she's having." — "When Harry Met Sally." (Woman in restaurant after Meg Ryan fakes an orgasm.) I am still looking for what she ordered in that greasy spoon. I was wondering if they serve it anywhere in Aggieville.

• "Is that your gun in your pocket or are you just glad to see me?" — "She Done Him Wrong." How sassy can you get? I've been waiting a long time to use this line in a casual conversation.

• "There's no crying in baseball." — "A League of Their Own." This line is just dripping with innocence. Simple dumb-founded innocence. Maybe it is just the time of the year, but I need a good baseball season to tide me over until football season.

• "Of all the gin joints in all the towns in all the world, she walks into mine ... Play it, Sam. Play 'As Time Goes By.' — "Casablanca." What can you really say about "Casablanca"? I can watch this movie until my couch sinks in, and I still get excited by the movie lines and scenes. Humphrey Bogart is too cool. He'll make you cry and laugh at the same time.

• "You talkin' to me?" — "Taxi Driver." Enough said.

• "Forget about it." — "Donnie Brasco." This line reminds me of the word "dude." In its time, it could mean anything you wanted it to mean.

• "We're on a mission from God." — "The Blues Brothers." Aren't we all on a mission from God?

• "That'll be $1,000 Canadian or 10 American dollars if you wish." "There's a time to think and a time to act. And this gentlemen, is not a time to think." Both from "Canadian Bacon." If confession is good for the soul, here goes.

This is one of my all-time favorite movies. There is a reason for this. I have been given the opportunity to date a Canadian, a Canuk if you will. (Calling it an opportunity is being nice!) This movie was my dream come true. You won't be able to understand until you spend a holiday in a house full of short little Canadians ending their sentences with "eh" and refusing to pronounce the letter O.

•"F--- 'em if they can't take a joke." — "The Big Chill." This sums up my life philosophy. The world is too serious. We need to laugh a little more. A lot more. If you can't laugh at life's twists and turns, then I pity you and am glad that I don't walk in your shoes.

•"Is it safe?" — "The Marathon Man." I'll never forget when I saw this movie. I was pretty young, and for days my dad and I would walk around repeating this line. It comes back to me every time I step into a dentist office.

•"You know what they call a Quarter Pounder with Cheese in France? ... A Royale with Cheese." — "Pulp Fiction." Maybe this isn't the best line in a movie filled with great lines, but it's certainly a classic. Chalk another one up to John Travolta.

•"Will you love me for the rest of my life? ... No, I will love you for the rest of mine." — "Phenomenon." I'll admit, I shed a few tears at this point in the movie. Who didn't fall in love with Travolta in this movie? Are there really any guys like this out there? Call me if there are any in Manhattan.

•"Rock, chalk, we're going home again, Jayhawks." — Birmingham Newspaper. Okay, okay so it isn't a movie line, but its the best news I've heard all year.

To all you K-Staters who, like me, jumped up and down when the supposedly No. 1 basketball team choked like the chicken hawks that they are, bless you. After that loss I realized, hey, there really is a God.

Spring refreshes art galleries with 2 exhibits in Manhattan

Art Review

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

The long winter of little art in Manhattan has come to a close.

Spring has brought an abundance of interesting group shows to campus and Strecker Gallery's first show of the season.

If enjoying the spring weather is your idea of fun, consider walking to a gallery.

Chang Gallery

Seaton Hall's Chang Gallery is filled with works by the College of Architecture faculty until April 11.

Everywhere you look seems to be work by the talented Tali Cohen, whose master's thesis show last semester seems to be keeping steam with pieces in two spring shows.

Cohen's colorful ceramic work in this show, especially "Formed Stoneware," a glassed porcelain clay piece mounted on a high metal stand, was not part of her thesis work.

In this setting, it adds some much-needed three-dimensionality to a largely drawing-oriented show.

Among the drawings, Jim Dubois's pen and inks of local landmarks, such as Holton and Holtz Halls, are more conventional architectural drawings, where Richard Forsyth's watercolors of Palladio's Villa Capra La Rotondo in Italy take a few stylistic chances.

James Jones' "Storm Warning: The McManus Addition" shows his clever design for a master bedroom addition with a landmark feature second-story tower for watching spring and summer storms — appropriate considering the present season.

Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Union Art Gallery

The Spring 1997 Student Art Show is in the K-State Student Union Art Gallery until April 18.

This show, a juried art competition open to all K-State students, always showcases a variety of artistic mediums and styles, and this spring's show is no exception.

Standing out among some tepid entries, Jonas Sturr's "From the Shadow of Wind" is an eerily speckled flesh digital image that appears to have been morphed into intensely rounded shapes.

There is an otherworldliness about flesh as landscape that is both frightening and sensuous.

Sturr's simple, revealing work seems the least overwrought, although it garnered no award.

Among the award winners, for what that's worth, is Nickie Mitchell's smooth sculpture "Dark Horse Duet." The fluid dark-based and torquoise-topped piece (in this case, two pieces) sits precariously on its base, two forms in a balletic near-collision. It won both first place for three-dimensional work and the best in show awards.

Other notable entries are Jonathan Looney's "Untitled" digital image, which is more of a flowing, blurred architectural space study; Aimee LaDouceur's "Angel," an opaque sculpture that recalls the smaller work of Dale Chihuly; Suzanne Hale's marine-colored "New Ruins," a symbolistic mixed media piece; and Seiji Ikeda's simplistic "Angelic," a mixed media sculpture of metal, brass, and copper fittings pieced together with twine that is tensely wrought.

The Union Gallery is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Strecker Gallery

The Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz Ave., is hosting a reception from 5 to 7 p.m. this Friday for Tokyo artist Kotoko Imaoka.

Imaoka's Japanese brush and ink painting show, "Bunraku Theatre," will run through May 3.

Imaoka will also be on hand from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday for technique and ink-mixing demonstrations and portraits.

You must make an appointment for a portrait at $100 each. Call 537-2099 for more information.

K-State isn't the only school in Manhattan having an open house this weekend.

Manhattan Area Technical College will open its doors to the public from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

Scott Sullivan, MATC marketing and public relations coordinator, said it was coincidence that last year's open house was not at the same time as K-State's, but this year's is.

"It was kind of neat it worked out that way," he said.

Sullivan said the open house will give the college an opportunity to participate with K-State and the community.

"We're a strong supporter of K-State," he said. "We seem to partner up well."

Sullivan said the open house will give MATC an opportunity to show off the college.

"We're a real well-kept secret," he said.

Adam McDiffett, student of emergency medical technician at MATC, said students come from both the Manhattan area and K-State.

"Most people in my class belong to K-State too," he said.

McDiffett said he encourages people to look at MATC as a possible educational choice because it offers short programs at flexible hours with reasonable prices. He also said the educational level and job placement are excellent.

"The teachers are really good. They help you find jobs," he said.

Sullivan said the open house will highlight MATC's degree program, which places about 90 percent of its graduates.

People interested in attending the open house can call the MATC office at 587-2800 for more information.

KANSAS CITY ROYALS OPENING DAY

Royals drop first game of season to Baltimore's ace

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — Jimmy Key was outstanding in his Baltimore debut, Brady Anderson and Cal Ripken punctuated memorable days with three hits apiece and the Orioles beat Kansas City 4-2.

What more could a manager ask for on opening day?

Not much.

"It was a perfect day," Orioles manager Davey Johnson said after Wednesday's game. "Jimmy Key pitched really well ... and Cal and Brady are special people. Very special."

Regardless of what uniform he wears, Key can't be beat on opening day. The left-hander, working in place of the injured Mike Mussina, didn't allow an earned run in six innings, yielding four hits and a walk.

Key improved to 7-0 in eight opening-day starts with Toronto, the New York Yankees and now the Orioles.

"That's a record I'll cherish when I get out the game," Key, 35, said. "It's a little special to me. You always want to win your first start and have the team win. It's an important thing, and I feel good about that."

Key struck out four and improved his record against the Royals to 13-6 — including 3-0 on opening day. Randy Myers, the fifth Baltimore pitcher, struck out the side in the ninth for the save.

Ripken, playing at third base in an opener for the first time since 1982, saved a run with a sparkling play, doubled twice, homered and walked. His previous 14 opening day starts were at shortstop. Afterward, he celebrated a new contract that guarantees him $15.1 million during the 1998 and 1999 seasons.

A day after high winds caused a postponement, Baltimore broke a 2-2 tie in the sixth when Anderson got an infield hit off Jamie Walker and scored on a two-out double by Eric Davis, also making his debut with Baltimore.

Anderson hit an RBI single in the seventh to make it 4-2.

A week ago, Anderson was expected to begin the season on the disabled list with a cracked rib. But he started in the leadoff spot as the designated hitter and went 3-for-4 in addition to being hit by a pitch.

"You can almost eliminate the pain by not worrying about it," Anderson said. "It actually hurts more sitting at home and not doing anything that it does to swing a bat. I guess it's just something you learn to do. If you focus on something else, the pain disappears."

Down 2-0, the Royals got two unearned runs in the sixth following an error by Mike Bordick, Ripken's replacement at shortstop. After Jose Offerman reached second on a throwing error by Bordick, Key hit Tom Goodwin with a pitch. Bip Roberts then singled in a run and Jeff King followed with a sacrifice fly.

The Royals were last in the AL in runs scored last season, and their revamped lineup didn't produce much offense Wednesday. Of course, Key

Kansas City bridge to receive new name in honor of Brett

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Only George Brett could stop Kansas City, Mo., traffic like this.

A highway overpass near Kauffman Stadium will be closed for a half-hour Monday morning as the stretch of road is christened the George Brett Bridge.

The ex-Royal himself is scheduled to be there to help local radio disc jockey David Lawrence unveil a sign informing motorists they are crossing Interstate 70 on the George Brett Bridge.

"I've always been a fan of George," said Lawrence, the morning disc jockey on WDAF-AM. "That's no secret to my listeners. The bridge is a testament to his continuing popularity."

Lawrence was behind the drive to persuade the Missouri Department of Transportation to rename the Blue Ridge Cutoff overpass near the Truman Sports Complex for the Royals legend.

The bridge will be shut down from 10 to 10:30 a.m. for the ceremony, which will precede by a few hours the Royals' scheduled home opener against the Baltimore Orioles.

Brett, 44, is in his fifth year as the Royals' vice president for baseball operations. He finished his 20-year career with the team with 3,154 hits and a .305 batting average.

Short but sweet

STORY BY JEREMY KELLEY • PHOTO BY CRAIG HACKER

▶ K-State shortstop finds groove batting third after sitting in the lead-off spot last year.

WILDCAT SHORTSTOP Heath Schesser moves in to field a ground ball against Missouri Western Feb. 18 at Frank Myers Field. K-State crushed Missouri Western, 17-6.

K-State shortstop Heath Schesser garnered honorable mention all-Big 8 honors as a sophomore last year. Batting at the top of the order, Schesser led the team in runs with 57 and finished the season with 72 hits.

But this year it's a whole different story.

Schesser has moved from the top of the order to the third spot in the lineup and has already produced more RBIs this year than his entire total last year.

"It has to do with the role I'm playing," Schesser said. "Last year my main concern as the lead-off hitter was getting on base. This year I have been put into a different role where guys are setting the tables, and I have to knock them in."

Certainly the tables have been set and Schesser has been turning them over.

Schesser's numbers speak for themselves: 128 at-bats and 55 hits for an average of .430, a mark that leads the team and ranks fifth in the Big 12 Conference.

"I just take pitches that I feel like I can drive — which is pretty much something inside," he said. "Our philosophy at the plate is a little different this year. Coach Moen likes us to be a little more aggressive at the plate."

And it shows. Schesser has hit 11 home runs thus far in the season and is boasting a slugging percentage of .883. His seven triples are the most in the Big 12.

Even so, Schesser remains humble about his hitting streak as of late — his most recent a two-run blast against Creighton last Tuesday.

"Sometimes I have a tendency to hit pitches that I shouldn't," Schesser said. "As the season wears on I need to concentrate on hitting pitches that are in my zone and just waiting for my pitch."

But his hitting isn't the only thing that has changed from a year ago. Schesser said more and more he concentrates on his fielding at short — what he says is the main weakness in his game.

"I look at last year and those little errors in the field were our downfall," he said. "My defense can always get better, and that's what I put most of my effort toward in practice."

It isn't a fallacy that this team can hang with the better teams in the Big 12. During spring break, K-State won two of three games from then-20th ranked University of Texas. But last weekend, K-State dropped two of three close decisions to Texas A&M, which is now ranked 25th by the Sporting News.

"To tell you the truth, we're better than any team we have played against so far," Schesser said. "We haven't really made too many physical mistakes. They're just mental mistakes that can be corrected as we keep playing."

The ball keeps rolling this weekend as K-State squares off against Nebraska in a three-game conference series. On March 11, K-State won a double header with Nebraska 19-9 and 11-3, but Schesser isn't counting on seeing the same team this time around.

"They came down here and we swept that double header, but I'm sure they have regrouped since then," he said. "As long as we go out and play all 27 outs and don't give up, we'll do fine."

Last summer Schesser gained experience in the Cape Cod League in Massachusetts with Nebraska first baseman Todd Sears. In that league, Schesser was named the Most Valuable Player on his team, the Falmouth Commodores.

When the Cats face the Huskers this weekend, Schesser will certainly have his eye on his former teammate while defending in the infield.

"I definitely know he's going to hit the ball hard, but I'll be prepared," Schesser said. "Todd's a great player, and I have a lot of respect for him."

Cool Hand Lute keeps unruly basketball squad in check for title game

When the clock struck midnight Monday in Indianapolis, Cinderella still had her dancing shoes on.

And while the Arizona Wildcats pranced about the RCA Dome, relishing their 84-79 victory over Kentucky that secured their first national championship, one man stood in quiet relief.

This figure was Lute Olson, the coaching mastermind behind Arizona's improbable run to the top and fairy godfather of the moment.

Standing tall with a smug look of confidence bordering on cockiness, Olson had finally achieved the coveted piece of championship hardware that had eluded him so long.

Past runs at the NCAA title had let to numerous embarrassments (See: Santa Clara, Miami of Ohio), and this season's Wildcats looked ripe for an early departure. But by adopting unconventional and ill-advised coaching strategies, Lute Olson took his Cats far beyond expectation and didn't stop until his cactus kids were crowned champs.

Tracing way back to the start of the season, Arizona's chances of strutting through the Big Dance seemed as probable as a Pauly Shore Oscar nomination, but Olson slowly crafted his young squad game by game.

By developing a relentless squad of basketball fusion (juniors Miles Simon and Michael Dickerson jelled with newcomers Mike Bibby and Eugene Edgerson), Olson completed phase one of getting his players to believe and feed off one another.

The next phase of Olson's plan was March Madness itself. Although Arizona hit the dance on a bit of a down note (two losses to Pac-10 foes), Olson still believed in his team. He believed in them so much, in fact, that he told them they were the better team, no matter who the opponent was.

Once he had escaped the demons of first round upsets, Olson began casually brainwashing his Wildcats. Through careful doses of confidence and orders to go out and have fun, Olson suddenly had the kind of Arizona squad that had escaped him in the past.

No longer did his Cats back down when defeat seemed eminent. With Olson's anything-goes attitude reflecting on everything, Arizona took the court with nothing to lose.

Going into their Sweet 16 match-up with Kansas, Arizona showed no feelings of awe toward the mighty Jayhawks. And after crashing KU's bid to cap off a dream season, the Cats treated it like just another victory.

Screw heart, these Cats were downright cocky.

And it was this kind of attitude that pointed Olson's under-experienced squad to the top. With this confidence concoction instilled, Arizona did what they had to do to reach the Final Four.

They shot and shot again. They drove and pounded their way to the charity stripe. And most importantly, the Cats relied on each other when in crucial conflicts.

Another area of Olson's plan that kept his Cats riding on a gravy train with biscuit wheels was the element of enjoyment. Olson stressed fun to his squad, and they responded with food fights and pranks galore.

Not a day went by without some Wildcat becoming the recipient of a practical joke. Even when dining, one of the players would transform the room into a full food assault.

This kind of lounge mentality was just what Arizona needed.

In the final showdown versus Kentucky, Olson built upon Arizona's already rock steady confidence with coaching bent on devouring Kentucky's patented defense.

As Olson paced the sidelines inside the RCA Dome, his Cats broke down the UK press with pinpoint passing and tenacity for taking it to the hole.

When the hardwood settled after a one-sided overtime session, Arizona had committed only 18 turnovers and had taken 41 free-throw attempts, a statistic that spelled champion.

Now fully released from the early round upset label, Olson can spend the summer relaxing, knowing his mission is accomplished.

But there was more to his title run than just the trophy that makes Olson shine.

By teaching his players to enjoy the ride and never back down from a challenge, Olson achieved the most from a squad that was a year away from challenging for the title, or so everyone else thought.

Owning a car requires some form of car insurance.
Speeding tickets, car accidents and other violations can increase the cost, so what can you do to lower it?

insurance made easy

STORY BY KARA LOWE ● ART BY BILL KRAAI

▶ The insurance series, appearing in Currency the next four weeks, will explore different options students may face when purchasing insurance.

Speeding tickets, car accidents and other moving violations contribute to the rise in car insurance premiums.

Kansas law requires that people have car insurance to drive a vehicle.

Besides basic liability insurance, there are other insurance plans available, and some could save students money in the long run.

"Frankly, I recommend to not get just the basic coverage. Many times there are only a few dollars difference between the next level. For instance, $5 more raises personal injury protection from $4,500 covered by the basic level to $500,000," Gary Olds, insurance agent for Shelter Insurance, said.

There are many ways to get discounts for car insurance. Among them are companion discounts, homeowner discounts and good grade discounts.

Students younger than the age of 20 will receive better rates if they are covered under their parents' insurance. They can receive the discounts that their parents qualify for, such as companion discounts.

"It's very important for students who are no longer under their parents' insurance to establish themselves with an insurance agency and stick with that company even when the renewal is issued. That way, if they have an accident, their agent will be able to assist them better due to the long-term relationship they've had with the company," Olds said.

Good grade discounts are the most common way for students to lower their insurance rates. Students who maintain a 3.0 grade point average are eligible for this discount.

Olds said insurance companies give students discounts for having good grades because it demonstrates they are much more mature and responsible, even though they might not be the greatest drivers.

"One thing that helps keep my car insurance costs down is getting good grades. I try to keep my GPA at 3.0 or above," Jill Koester, sophomore in business, said.

Speeding and being involved in accidents are the most common reasons students pay more for insurance.

Individuals with a poor driving record are covered under standard insurance, rather than the preferred or mutual insurance available to drivers without a bad driving record.

Under the standard insurance, points are given on the basis of the violation, which raises the cost. For instance, one speeding ticket equals two points, and five speeding tickets equal 10 points. The more points a driver accumulates, the higher the cost of insurance.

Each violation remains on the individual's driving record for three years. When all violations have expired, the individual can begin getting preferred insurance to receive lower rates.

"The only way to ensure that insurance rates remain low is to be better drivers and quit speeding and having wrecks. Even if the accident is not the individual's fault, it could still hurt their record. This is why individuals need to tell their insurance agent about the wreck, so when it shows up on their driving report, the agent will already be aware of it," Olds said.

Students younger than the age of 25 will pay more for insurance.

"When people reach the age of 25, they are considered an adult and get better rates. Those under 25 have a higher premium because they are more inexperienced drivers and take more risks," Olds said.

car Insurance vocabulary

Liability – Pays for the other individuals costs in the event the accident was your fault. Includes bodily injury and property damages.

Uninsured Motorists – Pays for your damages in the event the accident was the other motoristss fault and he or she does not carry auto insurance.

Collision Damage – Pays for part of the expenses due to crashing into another object. Remember, the higher the deductible, the lower the premium.

Comprehensive – Pays for part of the expenses due to accidents other than collision such as theft, fire, hail damage, glass breakage, civil disputes or animal damage. The higher the deductable, the lower the premium.

Personal Injury Protection – Pays for part of the personal injury expenses despite who's at fault. This includes $4,500 in medical payments, up to $900 per month for one year due to loss of income, $2,000 for funeral services and compensation for essential services such as a spouse being unable to work.

MESSAGE FROM GOD

Randy Farmer of a Houston, Tex., suburb was one of the millions of people around the world who felt compelled to welcome in 1997 by firing off a few gunshots just after midnight.

Farmer shot at a backyard tree, but then the gun jammed, and he went back inside to unjam it. He mishandled his gun and accidentally shot and killed his 7-year-old daughter.

Said Farmer, "God had a hand in this. He had to. It was like God called my baby home to be with him, and God used me as a tool to bring her to him."

Check cards provide convenience

TANYA NISLY
staff writer

When purchasing life's little necessities and not paying with cash, some form of ID is often required.

For those who are in a rush and don't want to take the time to write a check and dig out their ID, a check card or debit card is the time saver they have been waiting for.

Many of the banks in Manhattan either offer this service to customers or are preparing to make it available.

"It started off slow. People are seeing how convenient they are," Courtney Yoder, customer service representative at First Bank Kansas, said.

When customers use their check cards, the process the transaction goes through is the same as if they wrote a check. It often takes two to three days for checks that are written to clear the customer's account. This is also true for the check card.

"Funds don't immediately leave the account," Brenda Jorden, customer service representative at Capitol Federal Savings Bank, said.

The amount of time for the transaction to be processed depends on how soon the merchant cashes the transaction, Emil Scherlacker, senior vice president at Kansas State Bank, said.

Most banks do not charge a monthly service fee to use the check card. Customers are usually charged when they use an automatic teller machine not owned by their bank, which is called a foreign ATM.

Yoder said some customers find using the check cards is less expensive than writing checks because they don't have to buy boxes of checks.

Mina Glenn, financial service representative at Commerce Bank, agreed.

"It cuts down on check writing. A lot of college students can't afford to buy boxes of checks," she said.

Many banks offer check cards to new customers, but customers must pass a credit check.

"If you're not a responsible user of a checking account, you won't be issued a card," Scherlacker said.

There was some disagreement in whether check cards cause more overdrafts.

"You can't really overdraft the account because the computer checks the account when the merchant runs the card through the machine," Glenn said. With many of the check cards, a denial message will be displayed if funds are not available.

Wanda Swisher, personal banking representative at UMB Bank, said she thinks overdrafts are more of a problem with the check card because people forget to record their transactions.

"You have to be diligent about balancing accounts," Debby Sprunk, executive secretary at Security National Bank, said.

Check cards can be used anywhere Visa and Mastercard are accepted and are safer than checks if they are stolen.

"If reported immediately, they are not responsible for the charges. If they don't report immediately, they are responsible for the first $50," Glenn said.

Local bands offer diverse music scene

PHIL KELLUM
staff writer

The diversity of Manhattan's music scene is supported by the new releases from Seraphine 7 and Ruskabank.

Music Review

Imagine Sunny Day Real Estate, Mineral, the Jesus Lizard, godheadSilo and the Melvins in a wrestling match, and that's a pretty close description of Seraphine 7.

The band itself prefers the description of a train wreck to define its sound, and that's even closer.

It's brutal yet melodic and crushing yet fragile. Its sonic assault will leave you bloodied and bruised, but wanting more.

In addition, its self-titled, self-released cassette is one of the most visually and aurally striking local releases in quite a long time.

The tape kicks off with the driving "First Day of Fall," with guitarist and vocalist Jeff Boren's emotional vocals kicking off a wall of guitar and bass noise that crashes over you in waves.

When most bands try to avoid guitar feedback and excess noise, Seraphine 7 craves it. Boren, guitarist and occasional backing-screamer Eric Parker, and bassist and vocalist Russell Behrends craft feedback like artisans crafting woodwork.

"Fainting Couch" starts out with Behrends' almost whispered vocals, with a simple, quiet backing. By the end of the song, Behrends is screaming at the top of his lungs, almost wanting you to scream along too, as the band rages along.

Drummer Matt Anderson has some of the most creative, intricate drum beats you'll find, utilizing unusual rhythms and patterns.

Seraphine 7 was probably the loudest band in Manhattan, and this tape shows why. Turn it up loud enough so that chunks of plaster fall from the ceiling. The guys want it that way.

Unfortunately, Seraphine 7 broke up more than a month ago. Their demo tape, as a result, might be hard to find. If asked, I'm sure the guys in the band would get you a copy. They will be greatly missed.

On the complete other end of the musical spectrum, Ruskabank wants to make the audience dance and have fun while they kick out the ska.

Their five-song cassette, titled "Swank!" was recorded at one of their fun-filled shows this past fall at Bombers.

Ruskabank's sound is definitely ska, but with a twist. It could be described as Two-Tone in origin. Two-Tone refers to the style of ska made famous by bands like the Specials and Madness in the early 1980s. Ruskabank does make it its own, however.

The sound on "Swank!" is surprisingly clear for a live recording. It starts off with guitarist and vocalist David Spiker encouraging the crowd to come to the front of the club and dance.

"Hothead," a song about those who get into fights at bars and start trouble wherever they go, gets you moving first.

The band is one of the most fun in the area to see live, with keyboardist Donnyves Laroque keeping the crowd entertained with his moves on stage while playing the keys. One can almost picture Ruskabank on stage rocking steady when this tape is playing.

"Been Around" features a very catchy chorus and horn riffs that will stick in your head after listening to it.

"One Shot Judy" is very Specials-esque, with the guitar at the end sounding close to Specials guitarist Roddy Radiation's guitar tone.

The tape closes with their theme song, if you will, "Ruskabank."

It's one of their traditions that they play at every show, so it wouldn't be an accurate representation of a Ruskabank show without it.

Advertising Design

Publication Practice MC 360

If you are interested in working in newspaper ad design/production you can earn one hour of journalism credit during fall semester 1997. Attend class one day a week from 8:30-11:30 a.m. You pick the day but only one student will be accepted for each day so first-come, first-served. The instructor's permission is required. No prerequisites required.

If you are a graphic design major and can work at least 12 hours per week, you can earn three hours of credit in graphic design. Prerequisites must be met and instructor's permission is required.

The experience you earn in the fall could qualify you to apply for a paid, part-time position in the spring.

Come to 113 Kedzie from 8 a.m.-3 p.m for more information and syllabus.

But speculation has firmly centered on AOL, whose struggle to fix its network bottlenecks could be aided by CompuServe's high-tech equipment.

AOL needs to rapidly upgrade its network of modems, computers and networking equipment so it can begin growing again.

Under an agreement with 36 states in February, AOL suspended a multi-million dollar membership drive until it can add more capacity to clear up network bottlenecks that resulted in busy signals for millions of people trying to log on.

"The worry is that if (the number of new members) is higher than what they forecast, they may run into some legal issues," said Kenneth Leon, an analyst at Chicago Corp.

CompuServe has the capacity to handle additional members with its existing modems, computers and other network equipment, said company spokesman Steve Conway. Contrasting with AOL's recent surge in members, CompuServe is beset by defections to rival services and the cancellation of its family oriented WOW! service just seven months after it was started.

In addition, CompuServe is growing strongly with large corporate customers, a lucrative market that AOL has been eyeing.

CompuServe also is strong in Europe and Japan, where America Online has been trying to expand.

CompuServe investors applauded the merger talks. Even as the broader stock market tumbled, CompuServe shares soared 14.8 percent, up $1.62-1/2 to $12.62-1/2, on the Nasdaq Stock Market. CompuServe had gained nearly 19 percent in the previous two sessions on rumors about an AOL bid.

But analysts were mixed about a deal's value to America Online, which fell 2.5 percent to $44.62-1/2 on the New York Stock Exchange. AOL has been short on cash, with only about $100 million on hand at the end of last year. At Wednesday's stock price, CompuServe is worth about $1.2 billion overall, with H&R Block's stake worth about $960 million.

"It's less expensive for AOL to build out its own network," said Jamie Kiggen, an industry analyst with Cowen & Co. in Boston.

Kiggen said CompuServe's equipment would only give AOL an "incremental" increase in capacity for online usage.

In addition, he said there's no guarantee the CompuServe members would become AOL members.

had a lot to do with it.

"He had pretty good command of his pitches today. He threw a heck of a ballgame," DH Joe Vitiello said. "He's a great pitcher and he showed it out there today."

Key retired the first nine batters before Offerman led off the fourth with a single and moved to third with two outs. King hit a grounder down the line that Ripken stabbed with a dive before throwing out the runner while on his knees.

"I worked hard at third base and it seemed I was relaxed about the whole thing," Ripken said. "When you look at it, I should be most nervous coming into a new position. I don't know why, but I wasn't."

Baltimore took a 2-0 lead in the bottom half. Ripken opened with a homer to left before two walks and a single loaded the bases for Jeff Reboulet, who drew a walk and forced in a run.

Reboulet was playing at second base for Roberto Alomar, who began a five-game suspension for spitting in the face of umpire John Hirschbeck last September.

Texas at Houston. For Kastner, this is not a setback, just an opportunity.

"I just love campus life," Kastner said. "I'm looking forward to spending more time with my friends and with what's important — my church, coaching soccer. These are the types of activities I want to get involved in."

Now that Kastner's term as City Commissioner is coming to a close, he hopes to be able to find more free time.

"I have so many memories of campus activities — orientation leader, my fraternity — there's never been a dull moment," Kastner said.

Choitz, who will graduate in May 1998, plans on taking classes that interest her next semester before she takes an internship next spring in London. After graduation, Choitz will pursue a master's degree in public policy at either Harvard or the University of Minnesota.

While at K-State, Choitz became the first student to coordinate the Lou Douglas Lecture series. This and other activities helped Choitz not only in preparing for the Truman scholarship, but also life.

"I love to be busy and involved in things," Choitz said. "My advice to students coming in would be to just get involved in something."

Now that they have been selected as Truman scholars, Kastner and Choitz both said that the process has been worth it.

"I'm very proud to represent K-State with Vickie," Kastner said. "It's the ultimate privilege."

if contamination occurred during processing, and probing Andrew & Williamson's records to ensure the berries actually came from Mexico.

USDA is investigating that also, because it is illegal to sell foreign produce to the school-lunch program.

Consumer advocate DeWaal said the weeks-long incubation period for hepatitis means the outbreak may prove far larger than the government now thinks — and argued there are not enough safeguards against a repeat of the scare.

Indeed, at a news conference Wednesday, neither CDC, FDA nor USDA officials could offer safeguards. Instead, they essentially said the nation was lucky: Hepatitis A is seldom serious.

"The prudent statement today is to be very reassuring," Friedman said. "A large proportion of the population may ... have consumed these products with no ill effects whatsoever."

in recent years. The protection stopped in October 1996 but was resumed a month later because of a potential threat, said the doctor's spokeswoman, Peggy Jarman.

"It was the result of a specific conspiracy they learned about," she said.

The protection has recently stopped, but not because of publicity about Tiller's contributions or visit to the White House, Dempsey said.

The protection is based on recommendations of a law enforcement task force that includes the FBI and local police, he said.

At the White House, McCurry said he was satisfied that the Marshals Service and Justice Department "made clear the criteria under which he was a protectee, and I think they have answered that authoritatively."

▶ POLICE MOVE search for missing former student to Manhattan.

DANEDRI THOMPSON

The White Plains Police Department refuses to stop its search for former K-State student Michelle Bennett until a resolution is reached.

The 23-year-old woman's disappearance on March 8 has left police frantically searching in several places, including K-State.

Lt. Anne Fitzsimmons of the WPPD said Bennett had close friends at K-State and talked about visiting Manhattan during her spring break.

The joint investigation between WPPD and the New York Police Department began the search by checking New York area hospitals and medical examiners' offices.

"We searched her apartment building. We have checked to see if she's used any banks or her credit cards. We retraced the route she took at the same time she took it. We put up fliers," Fitzsimmons said. "We are doing everything we can to reunite this woman with her family."

Bennett is the second New York City student to disappear in a month. Patrick McNeil, a Fordham University student, disappeared Feb. 16.

Police originally considered the possibility of a connection between the two, but they were quick to dismiss it.

"There just isn't any evidence to connect the two," she said. "He disappeared outside of a bar at night. She disappeared on her way to school in broad daylight."

New detectives have recently been assigned to the case and plan to call friends of Bennett's in Manhattan. Although police aren't saying that Bennett ran away, they aren't discounting that option.

"There are many things that could've happened," Fitzsimmons said. "We just don't know."

Fitzsimmons does know, however, it is rare for someone to disappear and never be found.

"This case will never be closed until we see Michelle," Fitzsimmons said.

K-State experiment blasts off with space shuttle Columbia

▶ BIOSERVE PROGRAM launches 12th experiment into space.

RYAN O'HALLORAN
staff reporter

For the 12th time in the past decade, the space shuttle will be taking off with an experiment from K-State's BioServe program.

The space shuttle Columbia was scheduled for launch Thursday, but was delayed because of a coolant pipe problem. The launch was rescheduled for 1 p.m. today.

On board Columbia for the 16-day mission is the Plant Generic Bioprocessing Apparatus, or a space greenhouse for microgravitational research. It will be the second time this plant growth unit will be on the space shuttle, the first being last May.

K-State is one of 11 schools in the country that has a BioServe program sponsored by NASA.

"We're funded by them, and they give us access to the space shuttle for our experiments," Rachelle Wolfe, BioServe marketing and program development manager, said.

But NASA does not divide Shuttle assignments on a school-to-school basis.

"We probably have the second-most flights of the centers involved, so we do have a lot of experience," Wolfe said. "Some schools haven't had any missions."

Wolfe said the high number of missions carrying K-State experiments is due in large part because NASA is not involved in a large amount of the preflight work.

"One thing that really facilitates us is that we have people building equipment for us to whatever specifications we need," Wolfe said.

For K-State, that means working with the Otto, Knedlik decline to file election grievance

Otto

BENJAMIN YODER
city/government editor

Aaron Otto, former student body presidential candidate, said he was not going to file a grievance against the Senate Elections Committee for the polls at Kramer Food Center closing half an hour early during the runoff election March 19.

"The students spoke, and they made their decision," he said.

Sean Asbury, elections chair, said the deadline to file a grievance had passed.

"It's too late now," he said. "It's over."

Had Otto and his running mate, Amy Knedlik, chosen to file a grievance, the complaint would have been brought before a Tribunal Council consisting of two faculty members chosen by Faculty Senate and three students chosen by the student body president and the attorney general.

The tribunal could have called for another presidential and vice presidential election had they found grounds against the Elections Committee.

The deadline to file the grievance was Wednesday, which was 21 days after the general election.

Otto said closing the Kramer poll 30 minutes early did not provide enough time to make a difference in the election result. But he said he was happy about how well he and Knedlik did in the election.

In addition, Otto said filing a grievance was not worth the trouble.

"We made the most fair and equitable decision," he said.

Knedlik said she agreed there was not a cause to file a grievance.

"I had zero intention of pursuing it," she said.

Knedlik said new Student Body President Tim Riemann and Vice President Jennafer Neufeld will do a good job serving the University.

"They're great leaders, and I have all the respect in the world for them," she said.

Riemann, Neufeld take office, usher in pro-education plans

YVONNE PEARSON
staff reporter

With every beginning there is also an ending. This was true at the Student Senate meeting Thursday night when the new student body president and vice president took their places.

"I really look at the position as, students voted on Tim Riemann and Jennafer Neufeld as qualified, very education-oriented and as for the things we wanted to work for," Jennafer Neufeld, new student body vice president, said.

Riemann and Neufeld's plans include working on implementing the plus grading system and helping with the proposal for publishing teacher evaluations. They also want to work with the state Legislature to encourage it to put a great emphasis on tuition assistance programs for the most needy students.

Responsibility comes with their new positions.

"It's a big honor, but it's not so much an honor as it is a responsibility," Riemann, new student body president, said. "It was nice to get the vote of confidence from the student body. Jennafer and I are going to do our best to try to make it worth their while."

Riemann

Neufeld

While Riemann and Neufeld step up to their new positions, Chris Hansen and Aaron Otto step down.

"I have no regrets about what we've done this year," Otto, former student body vice president, said.

Otto also said he has no regrets about the people involved.

"I have no regrets about how hard we worked. I don't regret a thing I did. It was a great year," he said.

Hansen and Otto said they got a lot done this year but are not giving up their involvement in Student Senate.

"I want to be there and available to give input because otherwise you lose that continuity," Hansen, former student body president, said.

"I've spent thousands and thousands of hours working on the problems that they'll be working on next year. I think it would be a disservice to the students if I didn't pay back that investment," Hansen said.

Otto said he plans to be as useful as he can in Student Senate.

"You're as obsolete as you let yourself become, and I don't plan to let myself become obsolete," Otto said.

"If I'm going to be here, I'm going to be useful to the extent that people want me to be," he said.

Both Hansen and Otto said they think Riemann and Neufeld will do a good job and will help them do a good job.

"I can't say I'm displeased with how the elections turned out," Hansen said. "We have a great group of senators and a great student body president and vice president who'll be able to come in and take off where we took off."

▶ Senate coverage.
Tim Riemann and Jennafer Neufeld were sworn in Thursday night as the 1997-98 student body president and vice president, respectively. Next year's senator were also sworn in. Coverage of Thursday's meeting will be in Monday's Collegian.

• TOPEKA NATIVE AMONG VICTIMS IN CHARGE AGAINST MCVEIGH.

TOPEKA — Of the 168 people who died in the Oklahoma City bombing, Timothy McVeigh is officially charged with killing eight, all federal agents, including Topeka native Paul Broxterman. Broxterman, 42, was a special agent for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and he had been on the job in Oklahoma City only three days when the explosion took his life on April 19, 1995.

"It surprised me, because I didn't think they were going to narrow it down to just eight," his mother, Peggy Broxterman, said from her home in Las Vegas. "But it made me feel good. I know if Paul were alive he would be fighting and kicking with both feet. He would want to be in this fight."

Peggy Broxterman said she doesn't know the criteria for her son being among the eight official victims.

All eight were on the job as federal agents. Four were with the Secret Service, one was an agent of the Drug Enforcement Administration, and two worked for the U.S. Customs office.

Peggy Broxterman said she is paying close attention to the trial in Denver and receiving frequent updates from federal authorities. She isn't going to the trial itself but will be a witness if there is a penalty phase after a conviction.

She admitted she was nervous, but if she testifies, she said she will have a lot to say about what the death of her son has done to her life.

"I'm just as bitter as I was before," she said. "Nothing has changed."

"It's harder now that the trial is here," she said. "Somehow bringing it all up again is hurting again. We certainly didn't get rid of it in our minds. We knew it was coming, but now it's here."

Paul Broxterman is buried in Topeka's Mount Hope Cemetery, where a marker was put in place at his grave in February. A week before he died, he had called his father and told him what he wanted it to say.

His family followed his wishes as closely as they could. His mother explained that her son was interested in genealogy and became frustrated when coming across a vague grave marker while researching family history.

"He said, 'When they come across me they're going to know who I was," she said. "Of course I wasn't thinking I would ever see the day."

The marker states in part: "Paul Gregory Broxterman died in the Oklahoma City bombing. He was born in Topeka .... He was a Vietnam War Navy veteran and a Federal Law Enforcement Special Agent."

In the wake of her son's death, Peggy Broxterman has taken a part-time job teaching kindergarten.

"It has made all the difference," she said. "It keeps my mind occupied. The first time I'm not busy my mind automatically goes to Paul."

• GRAVES NAMES TOPEKA MAN TO KANSAS BOARD OF REGENTS.

TOPEKA — Gov. Bill Graves Thursday announced appointment of Topeka executive Harry W. Craig Jr. to the Kansas Board of Regents, which supervises Kansas' six public universities. Graves also reappointed Cimarron farmer-rancher Sid Warner to the board. Craig, chairman and chief executive officer of Martin Tractor Co., replaces John Hiebert of Lawrence, an appointee of former Gov. Joan Finney.

Warner, also a Finney appointee in October 1992, had been retained by Graves two years ago, and is now being appointed to a full term.

Both Craig and Warner were appointed to four-year terms that will expire Jan. 15, 2001.

Warner already sits on the board. Craig will take Hiebert's place as soon as his appointment is confirmed by the Senate, which is expected to consider it in the next four weeks.

Craig is a Republican and Warner is a Democrat. By law no more than five members of the nine-member board can belong to the same political party.

"These two gentlemen will bring knowledge, experience and common sense to the regents board," Graves said of Craig and Warner.

"Harry Craig and Sid Warner are honored and respected Kansans who define the notion of community service."

Craig has bachelor and law degrees from the University of Kansas. Besides running Martin Tractor, a Caterpiller dealership, Craig has had leadership positions in the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Greater Topeka Chamber of Commerce, Kansas Good Roads Association and Kansas Industrial Council.

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

KAREN MCCULLOH, assistant to the dean of libraries, checks a book to see what category it goes into for the book sale. The sale begins Saturday and runs until Tuesday.

Tours, book sale provides opportunity for University to show off Farrell

LILLIAN E. BEEBE
staff writer

Students and visitors can take a tour of Farrell Library, experience the new entrance and purchase a book or two at All-University Open House this weekend.

Tours of the library will be given from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. They will start every hour on the hour, and will last 20 to 30 minutes depending on questions. Librarians will lead the tours, but there are self-guided tours as an alternative.

"This is our first official opportunity to show off the building," Molly Royse, Open House chair for Farrell, said. "We had to get special permission to use the main entrance since it's not ready yet."

The new main entrance is where the Friends of the Library will have a book sale Saturday through Tuesday. Hours for the sale will be 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday and regular library hours Sunday through Tuesday.

The entrance will be open on Saturday only, but patrons can get to the book sale by going to the second floor and following signs.

"It's a real bargain for the students, keeps the books out of the landfill and makes the library some money," Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of libraries, said.

The books are donated by the public, with some coming from the K-State Student Union Bookstore, McCulloh said.

"People give us books year-round," she said. "We have also had drop boxes at Dillons east and west stores for three weeks."

Prices range from 10 cents to $2, with some exceptions. All magazines are 10 cents. Soft-back text books are a dollar and hard-back text books are $2. Everything else is 50 cents, except for better books. At 4 p.m. Tuesday prices drop to a dollar a bag, McCulloh said.

The proceeds from the sale go toward the library's share of the $1-million endowment for humanities. For every $3,000 the library raises, the National Endowment for the Humanities will donate $1,000. By July, the library will have raised its $750,000 with the NEH contributing $250,000, McCulloh said.

The endowment provides the library with $50,000 per year to augment humanities collections, she said. The library can then purchase large-ticket items it couldn't before.

"We have been at this now for five years, and this is our last year," McCulloh said.

UPC sponsors drive-in movie night in conjunction with Open House

JASON ELLIS
staff reporter

Another big screen is coming to the Little Apple, but for one night and one night only.

Bramlage Coliseum's east parking lot will be transformed into the Great College Drive-in Saturday night in conjunction with the All-University Open House.

Two pictures, "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" and "The Blues Brothers," will be shown, Heide Madjeski, one of Union Program Council's program advisers, said.

Both movies may be seen with one paid admission, Madjeski said. The first film will start around 8:30 p.m. The second movie will immediately follow the first.

Admission will be $2 per person or $5 per carload. A carload consists of three or more people.

In case of bad weather, the films will be shown in Forum Hall at the K-State Student Union. Madjeski said no movies are scheduled for Saturday night in Forum Hall as long as the weather is decent for the drive-in.

An 18- by 20-foot screen and sound system will be set up, Madjeski said.

Madjeski said those who plan to attend should take their own refreshments because none will be sold at the movies.

No rules have been added or changed for Saturday night's movie, Madjeski said.

K-State Police will be providing the security for the evening, enforcing the same rules used for tailgates and other activities at Bramlage.

Consumption of alcohol is not allowed, since the event is on University property.

The Great College Drive-in could become a regular event, Madjeski said. It depends on how Saturday night goes.

The drive-in is sponsored by UPC's Feature Films, Kaleidoscope Films and Special Events committees.

Proceeds from the movies will go to support other UPC activities, Madjeski said.

Students showcase livestock in exhibition

CAMI SOWERS
staff reporter

The competition showcases K-State students, whether they have had livestock showing experience or not. More than 100 students will be showing in this year's exhibition, and there is no admission charge.

"One thing that has made it a little tough is Open House has gone to being one week after spring break. It's made it tougher to put on because the kids come back here on Sunday night and have to get their animals ready for that Saturday," Dave Nichols, professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

The species of livestock shown at the Little American Royal include beef, swine, horse, sheep and dairy cattle.

When the students sign up for the type of animal they want to show, they draw a University animal at random. The students show the animal on the basis of their showing and grooming ability, not the quality of the animal, Nichols said.

When the students start working with their animals, they must learn to break the animal to lead and learn grooming techniques.

Beef cattle take a little longer to work with, so students started working with the cattle a few weeks early to tame them down. Other animals vary with the time it takes to tame them to lead, Nichols said.

The students are required to do their own work, but training sessions are available to help students who don't have experience, he said.

"It gives the students an opportunity to work together in leadership programs, leadership positions, as well as have a good time learning about livestock," Nichols said.

This year the annual livestock judging team reunion, which was normally in the fall, will take place the night of the LAR.

"It'll bring back a lot of alumni and former judging team members," Nichols said.

▶ Tradition
The Little American Royal is a long-standing tradition at K-State. This year's 69th annual event is scheduled for 1 p.m. Saturday in Weber Arena.

Seize the opportunity during Open House to watch a movie at UPC's drive-in

So it's not football season, but the parking lot at the KSU Sports Complex will be ripe for tailgating in the dark this weekend.

Union Program Council is sponsoring the Great College Drive-In Saturday night in the east parking lot at Bramlage Coliseum. Two movies will be shown on an 18- by 20-foot screen. The first flick is scheduled to begin around 8:30 p.m.

So we can see a movie every weekend in Manhattan, but how often can you take your date to the drive-in? Try something different for a change.

And it's a cheap date.

The drive-in only costs $2 per person or $5 per carload. Pile in the car, get some lawn chairs and a blanket, and make tracks for the makeshift drive-in.

But hey, Bramlage was just repaved, so the lot will be nice and smooth — just throw your blanket down.

Who can pass up movies like "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" and "The Blues Brothers"?

Let's get out and make this thing successful, because then they'll do it again.

And we finally have a chance to eat popcorn at the cinema without paying $3 or $4 for a small popcorn. Refreshments will not be provided, so bring your own.

But remember, K-State Police will patrol the parking lot during the movie. The same rules apply for the movie that are in effect during tailgating for games — no alcohol allowed.

The weather should be great, and it's probably a whole new experience for a lot of students who have never had the good fortune to attend a drive-in movie.

Another advantage of an outdoor activity Saturday night, for those of you who have been living in a cave, is viewing the Hale-Bopp comet. Dusk is prime time for viewing, so the comet should be out in force just before the movies begin.

Velcro Vows

Marriage is becoming more convenient to rip along the seams

VIEWPOINT

KEN WELLS

KEN WELLS is a graduate student in theater. You can e-mail comments to Ken at (sigma7@ksu.edu).

Someone once called marriage "the last adventure open to the cowardly." This person must have been a travel agent, selling "adventure vacations" that consist of laying around on sandy blankets and watching crabs scuttle by.

I've been boycotting weddings for several years now. Funerals are infinitely more fun. Both have flowers. Both have crying. And for only one do you make the effort to make something as immutable as a headstone.

Modern marriages might as well be jotted down on a dry-erase board or sky written for all of their longevity. I dislike the hypocrisy tainting the ceremony. I can't understand how two people, more often than not white-clad, can stare at each other and say "till death do us part" without snorting or chuckling under their breath.

I'm guessing there comes a point in every person's life when they ask a question to the god-like beings who sired them to the extent of "Are you and daddy/mommy staying together forever?" (Or, for those on the fast-track to understanding modern society, "Didn't I have two parents at one time?")

And if your child asks you this question, what do you say? "No, dear, I'm too financially strapped to squirm free from this life of oppression and too emotionally dependent on my spouse. But once I sniff out the slightest crack in the prison wall, I will latch onto some abusive and mentally challenged individual for meaningless passion and abandon all familial responsibilities. Why?"

No, you don't say that. You nod and affirm that yes, you love your spouse (despite the fact that she/he is still annoyed at you for the Visa bill) and that you'll be together forever. It's not a big lie. It's an Easter Bunny lie. It's a Santa Claus lie. It's a lie for the greater good. So we get started off on the right foot.

Well, that day comes when you find Easter eggs courtesy of the Paas Corporation, or awake at 2 a.m. on Christmas morning to the sounds of a parent struggling to assemble a Ronco Silly Driller under the tree. And there's the day when two people you know closely decide they can't live together anymore.

ADRIAN FLEMING/Collegian

And why should they? We've got disposable cameras, disposable diapers, disposable cars (mine), why not disposable relationships? Don't like 'er? Hit eject, reset, play again. Watch the movies. The lovable, but hapless, hero of the movie ends up with the supermodel-pretending-she-can-act by the end credits — so can you!

Has your spouse succumbed to the idea of not having to put on their finest clothing for an evening with you just because of the bonds of holy matrimony? "I can relax now. We're married. I don't have to be impressive anymore." And they don't. And you settle into a routine.

And all this time you're wondering how much money your prom date is making per year.

Divorce is hitting the 50-percent level. Would you fly on an airline that lands half its planes or drive a car that has a 50-50 chance of exploding upon ignition? (Bad example, in my case.)

We've become an instant-gratification society. We want it all, and we want it now. Marriage comes quick, goes quicker. Patience? Work through the relationship? Why should I when one of my coworkers is making goo-goo eyes at me through the water cooler?

Well, perjury on the stand's nothing new, nor is perjuring oneself before God, in whatever form you acknowledge the big guy. "Till death do us part" is the only phrase in English that carries less weight than "just friends."

Here's my suggestion: dissolve the institution of marriage altogether. At least stop lying about it.

The social stigma of cohabitation is almost eradicated, anyway. Save the government the paperwork.

No more licenses, churches would be freed for more bingo marathons, no more prosecutions on adultery charges.

Think about it. Better yet, consider — half of all marriages end in divorce, the other half end in death.

▶ YOUR VIEWS

•CHRISTIAN VIEWS SHOULD NOT BE RIDICULED

Editor,

This is in response to the editorial against Kevin Bailey's article by a Brad Seabourn. Seabourn, I, too, am a believer in this Jesus, or as you put it, "a half-baked, pie-in-the-sky religious dogma."

Unlike you, I will accept your opinion of the Christian faith.

However, let me express a few concerns I have with your argument.

First, we do not believe in a spaceship or in aliens picking us up to take us to heaven.

Secondly, you as a graduate student should know that humans do not know everything or can even fix the problems around them.

Furthermore, Seabourn, there are countless times when medicine could not help people miraculously get better.

How do you rationally explain these incidents?

I tend to think with rational thought, and the thought of a supreme God helps me get through the day.

Why, you may ask?

The answer I give you, hopefully you will understand.

If humans are the most intelligent things in the universe and there is no master plan, what, then, is our point and what happens after death?

Seabourn, I wish you the best of luck in the world, but what happens after it is over?

That is the assurance we as Christians have in Christ, that there is something waiting for us.

That is why Bailey can put his trust in Jesus.

I hope someday you will truly understand what we believe and trust in.

Kip Traynor
junior at Manhattan Christian College

Editor,

I would like to respond to Brad Seabourn's letter in the April 3 Collegian by saying that Kevin Bailey's faith is in no way misguided.

Bailey is not taking comfort in a fairy tale, but rather in reality.

Seabourn states "If it (cancer) can be cured, only human beings will do it. And it is in each other ... that we should seek to find our comfort and support ... a comfort based on reality and not one based upon nonsense."

The only nonsense here is that Seabourn thinks because he does not believe in God, there is no reason for anyone else to either.

He also said, "I think if Bailey applied the same criteria he uses to deny the existence of all other Gods from all other religious beliefs, he would find he must deny the existence of his own God as well."

The reality of this statement is that in fact the converse is true.

That is what makes the Christian faith the unique faith it is, the God of Christianity has withstood the tests that condemn the gods of other religions.

I would like to say that Bailey has indeed a very good grip on reality, and would encourage Seabourn to understand the reality of the faith that he is dismissing as a "half-baked, pie-in-the-sky religious dogma."

Shaking those rainy-day, post-spring break

Voodoo Blues

VIEWPOINT

JEFF CHAN

JEFF CHAN is a graduate student in English. You can e-mail comments to Jeff at (defcon1@ksu.edu).

I'm looking outside my window, and it's raining this morning, one of the first of many early spring storms this year. I'm reminded of a poem by the classical haikuist Basho:

Under my tree-roof slanting lines of April rain separate to drops

A beautiful image, certainly. Unfortunately for me, Basho's drops of April rain are seeping through the roof in my bathroom and soaking the already mysteriously stained carpet in there.

The whole scene this morning reminds me of a pretty bad poem I wrote as an undergrad one spring, called "Green Stuff":

Everything looks so much greener after the spring rain ... grass, leaves, bushes moss, trees;
hot dogs w/ mustard.
But clown paint doesn't get greener when it rains;
it just gets runny.

I am expecting my appointment as poet laureate to go through any day now.

I'm depressed. Most of my friends are depressed. Why, when so much life abounds with the coming of spring? The Quinlan Nature Area inspired my little poem all those years ago. Where is the inspiration this morning? Who is behind that clown paint, anyway?

Obviously, my friends and I are suffering from spring break withdrawal, and even after a full week of the daily routine, going cold turkey just hasn't helped.

"Do you know what it means, to miss New Orleans?" The lines from that old song still echo with trombone accompaniment as I think about that jazz jam band performing it out in the middle of Jackson Square, New Orleans, spring break 1997. My first visit to the City of Sin was, except for the darker, deeper and altogether hazier late nights, unforgettable.

The blues and jazz seeping their way out of Bourbon Street bars, the swollen Mississippi River at night beneath the full moon, the street mimes hiding under cafe awnings or oversized umbrellas for fear of the morning spring showers disfiguring their carefully applied livelihood.

Despite promising ourselves we wouldn't, my lovely traveling companion and I had to break down and play tourists for a day. We went on an official walking tour to one of the famous New Orleans cemeteries, known for their brooding, above-ground tombs.

Remember "Easy Rider"? Remember the cemetery our two heroes find themselves in after dropping acid at Mardi Gras? That's the one.

We learned all about the popularization of voodoo, that Creole mix of traditional African religious practices and Catholicism, in New Orleans under the sway of Marie Laveau, the Voodoo Queen of New Orleans. We even visited her graffitied tomb, now the most popular and used voodoo shrine in town.

We visited a Catholic church that had originally been built to attend to the spiritual needs of the plague stricken in the early days of the city. There we discovered, in a corner tucked in near the doorway by the rocky grotto, the statue of St. Expedite, coincidentally one of the patron saints of April, and a powerful figure in voodoo lore.

"The Lives of the Saints" by Omer Englebert relates how St. Expedite was believed to have been martyred at Melitene in Armenia in the fourth century. He is sometimes invoked for the settlement of long-delayed negotiations.

Despite the statue, it turns out there really was no St. Expedite. The crate containing the statue arrived without a contents label, and read only "expedite," which means to hasten, sped up or facilitate.

I have a small St. Expedite medal anyway. My spring break went by too fast, but not because of the medal, I think. It's just the way spring breaks work.

I shouldn't be depressed. After all, we wouldn't even have spring break without school, would we? And, have you compared the university life to the ever-looming real world lately? My advice, from someone who's been out in it: Stay in school. It's a blast, really.

OK, OK, so the argument lacks. Check back with me in five years. Meanwhile, try to enjoy your time here. And not just here in school, but here on Earth. That's what a little spring break in N'awlins taught me.

Expedite nothing, and go play out in the rain. I think I'm gonna go write me a poem.

"Do you know what it means, to miss New Orleans?" The lines from that old song still echo with trombone accompaniment as I think about that jazz jam band performing it out in the middle of Jackson Square, New Orleans, spring break 1997.

Supporters seek to postpone school closing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNCTION CITY — People who don't want Junction City's tiny St. Xavier High School to close are pledging money and putting their heads together in hopes of finding a way to keep it alive.

The Most Rev. George Fitzsimons, bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Salina, announced last week that he had decided to close the high school at the end of the current school year.

Members of the Pastoral Council at St. Xavier Church had recommended on a 4-2 vote that the bishop close the school, which has only 30 students. The parish debt for operating the high school and a grade school, which will remain open, has reached $260,000, money borrowed from the diocese.

About 150 people attended a two-hour meeting Tuesday night to discuss alternatives that leaders of the drive to keep the school open plan to present to the pastoral council.

Maureen Gustafson, president of the St. Xavier school board, said the bishop told her he was not as concerned about the debt as about how the schools could become self-sufficient.

She said it would cost an estimated $100,000 to operate the schools for the 1997-98 school year. Supporters of keeping the high school open have already pledged contributions in that amount since last week's announcement.

Gustafson said she will bring this information to the bishop, along with a request that he consider reversing his decision.

"It would even benefit more to have the additional $260,000 to put toward the debt," she said, saying additional pledges are needed. "If we had that, we feel our influence would be there."

Bob Wahle, a St. Xavier parent, said that if the decision to close is reversed the school would have to be self-supporting to eliminate a need for future borrowing. He also said there is a sense of urgency because teacher contracts are due on April 15.

Ralph Millard said he spoke with an official of Hutchinson's Trinity High School, which was facing possible closure five years ago, and was told St. Xavier should have a professional development coordinator and a football program.

St. Xavier dropped football two years ago, but had announced plans to resume it on the junior varsity level next season, with a varsity team to start playing the following year. If the school were to continue next year, enrollment is projected to rise to 42.

The school board had recommended that the parish hire a development director, and a Methodist minister has even offered to serve in that role.

"This school is an alternative for all Christian families," the Rev. Tony Horsley, pastor of the Church of Our Savior United Methodist Church, said at Tuesday night's meeting.

"I am here because I love St. X," he said. "I am not Catholic, but I am a Christian and I will do whatever I can to keep this high school open. It is tragic that we are on the brink of losing the only alternative families have to the public high school."

University of Colorado.

"K-State primarily does the life science investigations," Wolfe said. "Colorado does the hardware design and the building. The pieces of equipment that contain our experiments are built by them."

On this flight, the greenhouse will be located in the payload area of the Shuttle and will have 10 different species of plants on board, ranging from wheat to spinach.

"The apparatus is a unique and powerful research tool," said Carla Gulart, a BioServe experiment integration engineer. "Not only is it the largest volume plant chamber ever flown, but it also offers the highest light intensity level available in a plant growth chamber."

BioServe scientist Peter Wong said the apparatus will take his research with wheat to the next level.

"With the plant growth chamber, we can now study the effects of space on plants in an environment which includes factors, such as light, that were never available before," said Wong, professor of biology at K-State.

The chamber is self-contained, meaning none of the astronauts will have to work with it.

"And NASA prefers it that way," Wolfe said.

Data from the greenhouse — current temperature, humidity, carbon dioxide, oxygen and light-cycle status — will be accessed and adjusted accordingly by K-State personnel.

"If there's a problem, we know immediately and can fix it," Wolfe said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN
SPORTS
FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 1997

SPORTS EDITOR
JEREMY KELLEY
e-mail: (weasol1@ksu.edu)

MONDAY
The K-State baseball team rolls into Lincoln Neb., on Friday for a three-game conference series with the Cornhuskers at Buck Beltzer Field.

Royals, Cubs should move up in standings from a year ago

Let the losing tradition continue.

The 1997 Major League Baseball season kicked off Tuesday afternoon, and with it comes another summer of huge salaries, spitting players, dueling owners and, oh yeah, a little thing called baseball.

It looks to be a year of new champions (Seattle) and perennial losers (take your pick); one can only hope their team is on the winning end.

I for one know my two favorite teams will, in all probability, not be playing in October. But it's OK, I am used to it.

VIEWPOINT

TARA WRAY

TARA WRAY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Tara at (twray@ksu.edu).

Welcome to the wonderful world of Kansas City, Mo., — October is too cold for baseball, anyhow — Royals and Chicago — we did it in 1908, we'll do it again — Cubs baseball. The winning don't come easy 'round here and last season was the epitome of futility for my favorites.

For the first time in franchise history, the Royals were at the bottom of the basement as they wallowed their way to a 75-86 record — good for last place in AL central.

Relying heavily on young talent, namely Johnny Damon and Bob — I look like I am 50 — Hamelin, the Royals learned the hard way that winning takes more than young legs; it takes experience.

The Cubs did not fare much better as they finished fourth in the NL central. One of the only highlights of the season for the Cubbies was bragging rights to most attendance in Chicago baseball. Wooee, big deal, huh. Bragging rights to a division title would have been much more satisfying.

Chicago practically mirrored Kansas City's lousy record. They were 76-86. Despite big time numbers from Sammy Sosa — 40 homers and 100 RBI's before breaking his hand — the Cubs managed to stink up the league.

But, it is a new year and the cellar dwellers are getting ready for the 1997 season. And despite both teams losing their openers, do not check them off as the same teams as last year.

The Royals are not relying as heavily on the youngins', instead they are hoping for an air of respectability and a spark in offense from the addition of veterans Jay Bell, Chili Davis and Jeff King.

The Cubs, on the other hand, are just praying for a miracle. No, I am kidding. Chicago has a few things going for them. Coming off a league-leading defensive effort in 1996, defense will not be the problem.

Pitching will be. It would seem to be the biggest problem facing both teams.

Neither boasts a reliable pitching rotation with enough depth to get them through the season if starters are plagued with injuries.

Kansas City edges Chicago in the category, however.

With a potential 20-game winner in Kevin Appier and a decent closer, Jeff Montgomery, who, if he can remain healthy, might help the team relive that little thing called winning.

The Cubs did some wheeling and dealing in the off season trading Jamie Navarro, a 15-game winner last season, to the White Sox in exchange for Kevin Tapani.

Some say the Cubs got the short end of the deal. Only time will tell if Tapani has Cubs pitching potential.

The way I figure it is, both teams have nowhere to go but up.

I know it is early, but by some standards the Cubs are potential contenders for second in their division. And the Royals, perhaps playing in the toughest division in baseball, will likely finish third behind Cleveland and Chicago. Both could wind up with a wild card playoff spot.

Call it preseason overzealousness, but I am prepared to forget the fact the Cubs have not won a World Series since 1908, or the fact the Royals have not returned to the postseason since winning the World Series in 1985.

While I do not know how both teams will fare this season, I can only look ahead to June 3—July 2, when the two will meet at Wrigley Field. At that time no pitching stats or batting records will matter, not even the postseason will be on my mind.

Yes, for those three games this summer, one of my favorite losers will be the champions of my own private World Series.

It will be the start of a new tradition; where winning or losing does not matter, only how the game is played.

Coxswain certain to have toughest job in weekend regatta

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

As the K-State women's crew races in a regatta with KU and Iowa this weekend, its main concern won't be winning the race.

"We really don't talk about winning and losing, but we talk about fight," Coach Jenny Hale said.

That fight Hale speaks of will essentially be the motivator for the crew in just its fourth regatta of the collegiate season. Hale said the person in the eight- or four-person boat who must have the most fight is the coxswain.

The coxswain is the person who steers the shell, or the boat, communicates the strategy to the other rowers, motivates the rowers throughout the course of the 2,000-meter race and is pretty much the on-the-water coach for the crew.

This task is not simple, just ask K-State's coxswain, senior Vandy Paul.

"We have a lot of responsibilities, and we're kind of the mini-coaches on the water," Paul said. "If we see something wrong with a blade as it enters the water, it is our responsibility to correct that."

For Paul, her job doesn't get any easier as the race progresses. During the first few minutes of a race, rowers go into oxygen debt and lactic acid is produced in the muscles, which causes the athletes to breathe anaerobically. For 7-1/2 minutes, the rowers must try to hold off lactic acid.

"Crew is the most difficult sport in the world and is the most painful in that you start with a sprint, the entire body of the race is a sprint and you end with sprint," Hale said.

It is the task of the coxswain to keep the rowers motivated and high-spirited as the race winds down in the last 500 meters.

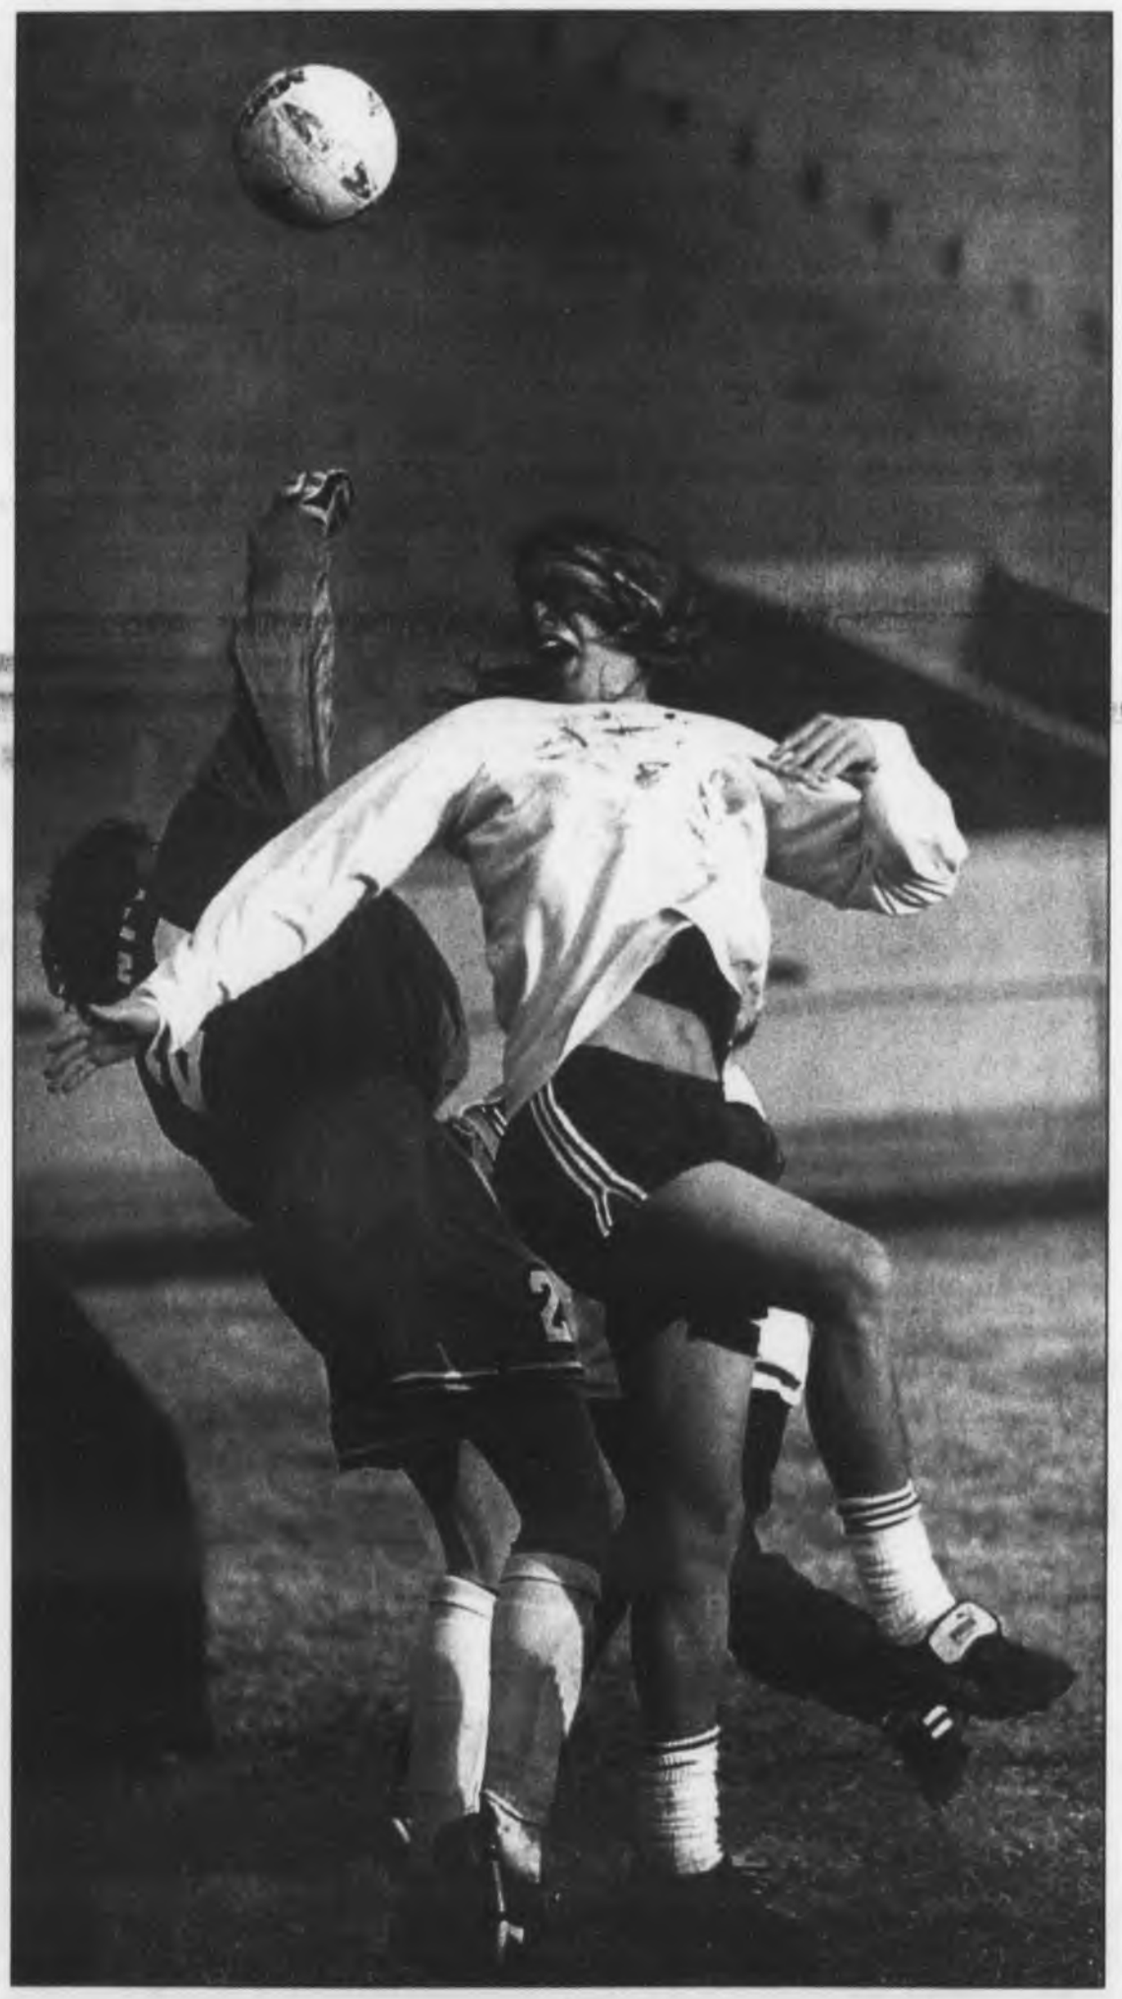
"Especially during the third 500 it's really hard to motivate yourself," Paul said. "I really do need to motivate them, because that's where we could lose a race is in the last 500 meters."

But don't take the coxswain's word for it.

Darcie Kelley, who is the stroke on the boat, or the rower who sets the rhythm of the cadence, said it just takes a lot of dedication.

"You have to be able to tell yourself to push harder," she said. "You just have to be dedicated to pushing toward the end and never giving up."

Hale said that's the attitude that has been holding this team together since the fall season.



"We are definitely holding our own," she said. "They're a novice crew going out against varsity boats."

Funny thing is, they're actually winning.

K-State had a double-dual meet against Texas and Minnesota last week in Waco, Texas, and rowed past Texas and Minnesota in five of six races.

"Watching each other and having the dedication and love that we have for each other really helps us," Paul said. "The only thing we really need to do is find our potential and we'll do all right."

Frumunda Cheez favorites to repeat

CORY MORGAN
staff reporter

All right, everyone join in: Take me out to the ball game. Take me out to the crowd. Buy me some peanuts and cracker jacks.

Isn't Harry Carey just wonderful.

Yes, sports fans. It's spring time once again, and Mr. Carey is back in the press box doing that thing he does best, singing. OK, maybe not, but spring time is here and so is intramural softball.

The preseason favorites have been voted on for this year's softball season, and last year's winners are on the top once again. Five leagues will be in action this spring, with three (independent, fraternity, residence hall) for men, one for women and one for co-recreation.

In the men's league, the favorite for this year is Frumunda Cheez, which took second place last year in the all-University final, losing to Tau Kappa Epsilon, the fraternity champion, by three runs.

The captain of Frumunda Cheez is Greg McLean, senior in mass communications, and he said the team is basically the same as last year with a few new additions.

McLean also said his team's expectations are very high this year.

"Our goal is to win the all-University title," McLean said. "If we don't win the independent league and get to the all-University final, we won't feel like we accomplished too much."

McLean said there is not any added pressure being the preseason favorite, but everyone shoots to knock off the number one team.

"I think that a lot of times any team can get beat any day, especially in softball," McLean said. "We have a good team this year, and don't feel any additional pressure."

Trying to upset Frumunda Cheez in the independent league is Scoreboard, Wool and Gamecocks.

The fraternity league's preseason favorite is Tau Kappa Epsilon. They will be challenged for the title by Sigma Chi, Kappa Sigma, Alpha Tau Omega and Delta Upsilon.

Bill Jacob, junior in food science and captain of TKE's team, said there is always added pressure when you are the preseason favorite.

"Every team will be out to get us," Jacob said. "Everyone wants to see the number one team go down."

The preseason favorite in the fraternity division lost three members from last year's team that won the all-University title, but Jacob said they should still be tough.

"We will have some tough games," Jacob said. "But we should do really well if we play up to our team's ability. We haven't practiced too much yet, but we will get into the swing shortly."

The favorite in the residence hall division is Marlatt 3. Last season, Haymaker 5 took home the first-place trophy.

In the women's league, the preseason favorite is the Bad Mamas. They are followed by Takin' it Deep, Team Hoops and Alpha Delta Pi. Bad Mamas will try to defend its title this season after winning the championship last year.

In the co-rec division, the preseason favorite is Scoreboard 6P6H, followed by the defending champion, Pink Tacos, Bob's Diner and Funbags.

The season began Wednesday and will last until May 11. The softball games will take place from 5 p.m. to 11 p.m. Monday through Thursday, with some additional games being played on Sundays.

Women's tennis team hits road to battle Oklahoma

SHANE MCCORMICK
staff writer

The K-State women's tennis team will look to improve its 7-6 record this weekend in Oklahoma.

The first action for the Cats will come on Saturday as they face the Oklahoma Sooners in Norman, Okla. Sunday, the team will turn its attention to the Cowgirls of Oklahoma State in Stillwater, Okla.

Last season, the Cats were defeated by the Sooners and the Cowgirls by the same score, 5-2.

The Sooners will return two of their top players from last year's squad in Kate Dunlevy and Megan Ricci. They each finished last season with 20 wins.

"They have lost some players from last year's squad, but they have had others step up and play better," coach Steve Bietau said.

The Cowgirls finished second in the conference standings last season. Returning this season is the team's top player, senior Kim Hazzard. Hazzard, 28-14 last season, beat the Cats' top player, sophomore Yana Dorodnova, 6-1, 7-5 in last season's dual.

The Pokes return another 20-win player in junior Monika Wirthova. Wirthova finished the season with a 20-18 record.

The Cats will be coming into this weekend's matches on a four-game losing skid that started the weekend before spring break against Baylor. With seven duals left before the Big 12 Tournament, the Cats know how important these matches are.

"Yes, I think it is crucial that we pick up a win this weekend," restrictive earnings coach Jack Oxler said.

Bietau said the players know the importance of these matches as well.

"Everyone sees the end of the season coming," Bietau said. "They know that there is a limited number of opportunities left."

The next home match for the Cats next Saturday against Colorado in Manhattan.

The Columbian Theatre, Museum and Art Center presents "Shared Space/Shared Vision" at the Columbian Gallery in Wamego. The exhibit will be on display through April 27.

Martin Sexton, the 1994 Songwriter of the Year, will perform at 7:30 p.m. April 5 in The Columbian Theatre. Tickets are $5 and $8.50.

The Exotics and Little Blue Crunchy Things will perform at 8 p.m. April 17 in the Ballroom of the K-State Student Union. Admission is $1 with a student ID, and $3 for the general public.

▶ MELVIN VS. THE WORLD

Album creates eerie edge successfully

REVIEW BY PHIL KELLUM

Leave it to Trent Reznor of Nine Inch Nails and filmmaker David Lynch to create the scariest, freakiest soundtrack of the year, perhaps of all time.

The soundtrack to Lynch's new movie, "Lost Highway," on Reznor's Nothing Records, is a masterpiece from beginning to end. It mixes radically different sounds and artists to create a very eerie vibe, complete with bits of dialogue from the film.

Music Review

The songs are also continuously mixed together, instead of having short breaks between them. That just contributes to the strength of this soundtrack.

The compact disc kicks off with "I'm Deranged," from legend David Bowie's new album, titled "Outside." It's a great song that mixes the sounds of drum and bass with Bowie's trademark vocals. It fades into an ambient interlude by Reznor, which is over before you know it.

Reznor and Nine Inch Nails turn in a new song called "The Perfect Drug," which is their take on drum and bass. It is easily the best thing they have done in years.

The film is scored by longtime Lynch collaborator Angelo Badalamenti, and seven tracks on the CD are snippets of his work, which is nothing short of scary.

The Smashing Pumpkins turn in a brand new song exclusive to the soundtrack titled "Eye," and it is a definite winner. It sounds like singer/guitarist Billy Corgan wrote and performed the song by himself, because the drum parts sound like a drum machine, and it doesn't sound like a full band backing him up either. "Eye" has a definite techno sound to it, which is fine by me.

Reznor also recruited ex-Bad Seed member Barry Adamson to score portions of the movie. Adamson contributed several tracks from last year's "Oedipus Schmoedipus" album. His avant-garde, jazzy soundscapes lend themselves perfectly to the vibe of the soundtrack.

Living rock 'n' roll legend Lou Reed performs his take on a Doc Pomus classic, "This Magic Moment," which was originally recorded for a Doc Pomus tribute album.

Brazilian jazz legend Antonio Carlos Jobim is also featured with "Insensatez," which was recorded way back in 1963 at Carnegie Hall in New York.

Reznor protégés and labelmates Marilyn Manson make a special appearance here with two new songs, one of which is a cover of Screaming Jay Hawkins' "I Put A Spell On You."

Manson's songs here are different than its past work, in that they are more subdued and not as abrasive, it seems.

I am probably the most ardent non-fan of Marilyn Manson, but I don't mind its songs on this album. Manson fit so well into the whole vibe of the album that it doesn't irritate me at all. That's how good this soundtrack is.

Reznor also brings little-known German industrial artist Rammstein into the fold. His two songs are really good. They mix loud and grating guitars with screamed/spoken vocals, reminiscent of old Nine Inch Nails or Ministry.

Reznor also composes "Driver Down" for "Lost Highway," a frenzied, fast instrumental that builds and builds to a peak, only to self-destruct quickly, leaving the listener wondering what happened in the studio.

Much like the soundtrack begins, a reprise of Bowie's "I'm Deranged" closes the album out.

All in all, this is probably the most solid, consistent soundtrack that fits a movie's vibe that I have ever heard. Reznor did a stellar job in assembling the bands and performers to create this work.

Also, a remix EP featuring remixes of Nine Inch Nails' "The Perfect Drug" is set to appear later in 1997, with remixes by such techno/drum and bass luminaries as the Orb, Jack Dangers of Meat Beat Manifesto, and 333.

Check this album out if you get a chance. But don't listen to it before bed, or be prepared for some weird dreams.

WHERE ARE THOSE NIPPLES SUPPOSED TO BE?

Pro wrestler Don Harris, 36 (6'6", 275 lbs.), who with twin brother Ron performed as the Bruise Brothers, went to trial in Nashville in January in his lawsuit against plastic surgeon Glenn Buckspan.

Harris had wanted his pectorals tightened but wound up with misplaced nipples such that he now says he is mortified every time he takes his shirt off in public and now wrestles only in a vest.

20,000 people expected to attend All-University Open House this year

Look it up on the World Wide Web. For more information about the K-State All-University Open House, see the Open House Web page at (http://www.ksu.edu/Consider/OpenHouse.html).

JASON ELLIS
staff reporter

March moved out like a lamb and now comes April, bringing spring showers, blooming trees, green grass and 20,000 people — the anticipated number of visitors to the 1997 All-University Open House on Saturday.

In 1922, the College of Engineering had the first open house on campus, Sara Throne, All-University Open House student coordinator, said. The University joined the College of Engineering's open house 17 years ago.

The All-University Open House starts at 9 a.m. Saturday, but festivities for the College of Engineering begin at noon today with a parade followed by opening ceremonies at Seaton Hall.

As the All-University Open House has progressed, many regular events have developed, such as the Little American Royal. Preregistered students have the opportunity to show livestock owned by the University at the 69th LAR at 1 p.m. Saturday in Weber Arena.

Open House, Throne said, has three main purposes. The first is to inform the tax payers of where their money is going.

"Colleges and departments will display examples of research and experiments they are working on," Throne said. "One such item is the Power Kat Krunch cereal designed by the College of Agriculture's Department of Grain Science."

Throne said the second purpose of Open House is to show off the University, housing and facilities to prospective students, providing recruitment opportunities for K-State's nine colleges.

Tours of Farrell Library, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex will be available. Some of the tours, however, are self-guided, but maps will be provided.

Residence halls, scholarship houses, fraternities and sororities will be open for prospective students to visit during Open House.

The Student Alumni Board is having For Sophomores Only, a recruitment program focused on informing high school sophomores about college.

It is used to provide the students with something to compare other colleges to when they begin looking around, said Marcia Hellwig, For Sophomores Only coordinator and graduate student in accounting.

Open House also provides leadership opportunities for current students.

"This year's Open House will include almost 2,500 faculty and student volunteers," Throne said.

"Without the leadership from the students, K-State's Open House wouldn't be a success. The 'lost' people, positioned around campus to give directions and information, consist of 100 volunteers by themselves. The whole University comes together to make open house work."

Since the metered parking spaces are free on Saturdays, consider putting those extra quarters to a good cause.

Theta Xi fraternity and Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority are sponsoring the Miracle Mile, a philanthropy to raise money for the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Quarters will be lined up on campus sidewalks, starting at the free-speech zone north of the K-State Student Union and extending to Waters Hall and various other locations on campus.

3 years of involvement lift student to coordinator position for All-University Open House

CAMI SOWERS
staff reporter

Open House is this weekend, and one of the many people who work behind the scenes to put on the University-wide event is Sara Throne, junior in animal sciences and industry.

Throne got involved her freshman year as a Leadership Scholar. She took a leadership class and Pat Bosco, dean of student life, asked her to be a member of the leadership core committee.

She was a co-chair of the special projects committee her freshman year, chair of special projects her sophomore year, and this year she was chosen to be the coordinator of Open House.

Four core positions exist to coordinate Open House, Throne said. Special projects is in charge of visitor relations, finding volunteers and the arranging for shuttle systems.

"We also have an entertainment committee which gives the campus a carnival-like atmosphere," Throne said.

It handles mascots from many area businesses like Subway Sandwiches, Sonic Drive-In and McDonald's Restaurant. Along with the Union Program Council, the committee gets a majority of the entertainment at Union Station and throughout campus.

Along with the entertainment, the committee will have Willie the Wildcat and cheerleaders for pictures and athletes will be around to sign autographs.

The public relations committee handles the radio, television and newspaper ads and the student life committee handles booths that will be on display on the first floor in the K-State Student Union.

"We try and bring in freshman every year to be committee members that can move up to the chair so we can bring in a flow of people so we never have a brand new core member," Throne said.

The committees also work with the coordinating council, which consists of a student and faculty representative from every college to help with their planning. The colleges do their own promotions, but the members of the core committee do the University promotions.

Continued planning makes this possible as the committees meet with the coordinating council at the beginning of the year. In October, they start planning, meet again in February and once after Open House to do an analysis.

"It hits hard second semester when you get back," Throne said. "It's a lot of hard work and dedication, but you see the rewards when you see 20,000 people come to K-State."

Everyone can get involved in Open House through departmental clubs, residents halls, fraternities and sororities and many other groups on campus, Throne said. There are plenty of ways to get involved and it's not too late.

More additions to open house this year are tours of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and self-guided tours of the new Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and Farrell Library.

"Basically, the day of Open House my job is done. Open House is a day to enjoy, and a lot of talking with the people," Throne said.

It's a lot of answering questions, talking with people and helping them get around, Throne added.

It takes about 2,500 volunteers to pull off Open House, which makes it an all-University effort. It is primarily run by students, which is really something for students to pull off something this huge and exciting, Throne said.

It tells a lot about K-State students that they are willing to put in the time to tell people about the University, she said.

DO THE CRU!
Campus Crusade For Christ
Widening Influence and Deepening Character
Campus Crusade for Christ is an interdenominational Christian movement on over 250 campuses in the U.S. and more than 150 countries worldwide. Here at Kansas State,students involved in the CRU (Campus Crusade for Christ)learn to grow in a dynamic relationship with God and learnhow to impact the campus with the gospel of Jesus Christ.
WEEKLY MEETINGS:
Our weekly meetings, called the CRU is a campus-wide Student gathering that is an action-packed hour of live music, teaching and FUN! Every Friday, Students gather together to pray for each other, the community, the campus, and the world.
CONFERENCES:
We have many conferences through out the school year that are especially designed to challenge you and strengthen your walk with Christ. Dynamic speakers and LIVE music are always a part of these "get aways." Wildcat Weekend, and Denver Christmas Conference are two of our main conferences.
BIBLE STUDIES/CELL GROUPS:
All over campus, students meet to learn what the Bible says about the Christian life and how to share God's love with others.

Open House to provide high school sophomores with college experience

CORI HERBERS
staff reporter

High school sophomores will have an opportunity to find out what college life is like a few years early.

The program, sponsored by the KSU Alumni Association, is called "For Sophomores Only" and is designed to give high school sophomores a chance to visit K-State in a more relaxed setting, said Heather Lansdowne, assistant director of alumni programs.

"More than 75 high school students are coming to K-State April 4-5 and will stay overnight in a residence hall," Lansdowne said. "They will have the chance to meet other students and participate in several special activities."

A skit about being in college, a night tour of campus and personality quizzes that might lead students to a certain area of study are some of the activities that will take place during their stay.

"The students will attend a special course called College 101, while their parents will have a chance to attend a seminar on scholarships, admission requirements and financial aid," Lansdowne said.

The program is in conjunction with K-State's All-University Open House.

"After the conclusion of the program on Saturday students and parents will have the opportunity to visit the many activities and demonstrations taking place during Open House," Lansdowne said.

A seminar for both parents and students on getting motivated for college will wrap up the event.

"Most high school sophomores don't know what they want to major in or where they want to go to college," Lansdowne said. "This program is a great chance for the students to become familiar with college and the steps to take before graduating from high school."

For Sophomores Only will run April 4-5 and will cost $35 for an overnight stay and $10 for the Saturday program. Preregistration is required.

K-State students find many things that make them proud to be Cats

VIEWPOINT

VALERI CRENSHAW

VALERI CRENSHAW is a graduate student in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Valeri at (vrc4359@ksu.edu).

Each morning I wake up and thank the purple heavens above that I am a K-Stater. My heart would shatter if I lived in Nebraska, Oklahoma or that God-forsaken Lawrence.

It should also go without saying that I would rather poke my eyes out than claim one of those Texas schools. If ya'll or howdy ever roll off my tongue, I want you to beat me upside the head.

But even sometimes in this utopia we call Manhattan, we forget how great we have it. Classes keep us too busy. The weather gets a little boring. Professors are on our case, and our roommates drive us crazy. It is times like these when we need to sit back and realize how lucky we are to have purple running through our veins.

When life has gotten a little bothersome or you just feel like throwing the towel in on those darn classes, it helps to sit back and remember the great things about college, especially K-State.

There is a certain happiness that only K-Staters can feel and share with each other, and maybe it is time to contemplate the wonderful aspects of this elite group. I have compiled a short list of the things that make my heart flutter, my eyes water and my face smile.

- The big purple flag that Willie wrestles out on the football field or basketball court.
- The ominous sunflowers that forever grace the new and improved Farrell Library.
- The smell of fresh bread wafting throughout the K-State Student Union.
- The free T-shirts the cheerleaders sling into the crowd at basketball games.
- Sleeping in the Union before class while ESPN's SportsCenter blares in the background.
- The smell of hamburgers cooking on the many grills of fellow K-Staters who flood the parking lot three hours before a football game to tailgate.
- Seeing the new K-State license plates proudly displayed on cars across the state.
- The swaying grass of the Konza Prairie.
- Yelling "Good For Another Wildcat First Down" while witnessing a stadium-wide wave of purple arms.
- That care-free feeling that sweeps over Manhattan as the last final ends for the semester.
- The KSC on the wrought-iron gates of Memorial Stadium.
- Mark Young throwing an elbow that landed in Jacque Vaughn's mouth.
- The sweet sound of Harley Davidsons in KSU Stadium during Willie's pregame show.
- Knowing that we were not chosen to house Bob Dole's congressional archives.
- The mouth-watering taste of ice cream from Call Hall on a hot afternoon.
- The smell of printing ink seeping out of Kedzie Hall.
- The K-State Singers belting out the national anthem in Bramlage Coliseum.
- The electricity of homecoming and the sound of Ahearn Field House shaking from the excitement within.
- Aggieville.
- The purple caravan to Dallas highlighted by the periodic highway signs that kept us going.
- Boris Yeltsin proudly wearing purple and white halfway around the world.
- Claiming the national victory in Livestock Judging.
- Knowing that Coach Bob Cope will be enjoying another spring in Manhattan.
- Being known around the world for agriculture, engineering, architecture and veterinary science — just to name a few.
- Being away from Manhattan and seeing someone with a K-State sweatshirt or license plate.
- The manual scoreboard at Frank Myers Field.
- Putting K-State on the map with our Debate Championship and knowing that it is undebatable.
- The thumping of the "Cheers" episode that leads into "We Will Rock You."
- Driving over the new bridge and seeing the familiar KS on the side of the hill.
- The elitist feeling you rightfully get when you put on a purple sweatshirt.
- Seeing the signs on Interstate 70 that advertise the greatness of K-State.
- Being able to wave the wheat more than KU fans when our football team obliterated them four years in a row.
- The feeling of accomplishment after working up an honest sweat at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.
- The luring sound of the K-State Marching Band playing "The Wabash Cannonball."
- Walking under the arch of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.
- Making most sportswriters eat their words when the women's basketball team, expected to finish 11th in the Big 12, clawed its way into the NCAA tourney.
- School spirit accentuated by alumni support.
- Everyone singing the words to "Wildcat Victory."
- Drinking a Wet Willie.

That 1st day at K-State remembered

I like to tell friends about my first day at K-State.

My high school sent 10 students to campus for a day-long journalism workshop the fall of my junior year. During the 256-mile trek from western Kansas, our adviser (a purple-blooded alum) enticed us with stories from his college days.

He told us about what helped him decide to be a teacher, the college friends who were still in his life and meeting his smart wife in a large lecture class.

CLAUDETTE RILEY

CLAUDETTE RILEY is a senior in English and is news editor for the Collegian. You can e-mail comments to Claudette at (criley1@ksu.edu).

Never one to be confined to the messages of classes, resume-building and extracurricular activities, he also included accounts of his partying excursions in Aggieville.

In retrospect, I can only say that our wide eyes were brimming with the passionate pursuit of possibility with which the wily 'Ville tempted us.

A couple friends and I agreed to skip lunch on a quest to find the promised land.

Never known for my sense of direction or compromise, I separated from the group and found myself lost (and in a fog of confusion) behind Farrell Library.

Almost as soon as I realized I was lost and couldn't recall the building where the workshop was being held, panic set in. A few minutes later, three upperclassmen stopped to help me.

As far as I could tell, they weren't part of student government or any admissions team. They were just plain ol' extraordinary K-State students who not only explained how I could get back to Kedzie Hall but took the time to walk with me.

Along the way they told me the names of buildings and what types of classes were taught in each. They asked if I was coming to K-State and which major I planned to pursue.

That was the day I decided to come to K-State.

It sounds corny, and each time I tell about my first day here I make a mental note: Fudge parts of the story so I sound like less of a naive, awkward geek.

It's too late for this column.

After I enrolled at K-State, I found more than my way around sprawling limestone buildings.

I gained an enhanced perspective of who I was and began to understand the elements that gave my life meaning.

Even if college doesn't give you all the answers, you'll eventually learn which questions matter.

My first months were an exercise in intolerance and closed-mindedness — mine. I shied away from parties and exploratory outings when the unknown quotient of different people or ideas would be present. As a result I spent more than a few wasted weekend nights in my solo room on the third floor of Ford Hall.

Don't let anyone fool you into believing that college, or this next year of your life, will be perfect. In fact, it's unsafe to approach it as anything less than an adventure through rough terrain, fire swamps and fire-breathing dragons.

No one told me to expect the unexpected and improbable. To embrace experiences beyond the realm of my comfort level. To test what I had been taught and believed against the grain of real-world experience.

Eventually, I started uncovering small, significant truths. I found a community of friends in the newsroom, in small creative-writing classes and in my apartment complex.

I've learned that there are plenty of experiences and people at K-State that will embrace you without wanting to strip your individuality. They applaud original thought.

Friends and experiences have helped me learn who I am and what is important — even if, on occasion, I still have to ask directions.

State Legislature gambles with campaign-finance odds

▶ Gambling PACs put more than $108,000 into campaign funds.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — In recent weeks, they have often clustered outside the House or Senate chambers or around the rail of the third-floor rotunda, commiserating, plotting strategy, buttonholing legislators.

They are the lobbyists behind the organized effort to expand legalized gambling by allowing race tracks to operate new games. Four are former legislators, and the group has members of all political stripes.

The lobbyists are a reminder of how pervasive gambling has become as an issue for the Legislature.

So, too, is money.

In 1995 and 1996, gambling companies and their lobbyists contributed about $108,000 to legislators, their leadership fundraising committees, other elected state officials and state party organizations.

Critics sometimes describe the gambling industry as if it is a monolith, but the players who contributed the money have different interests.

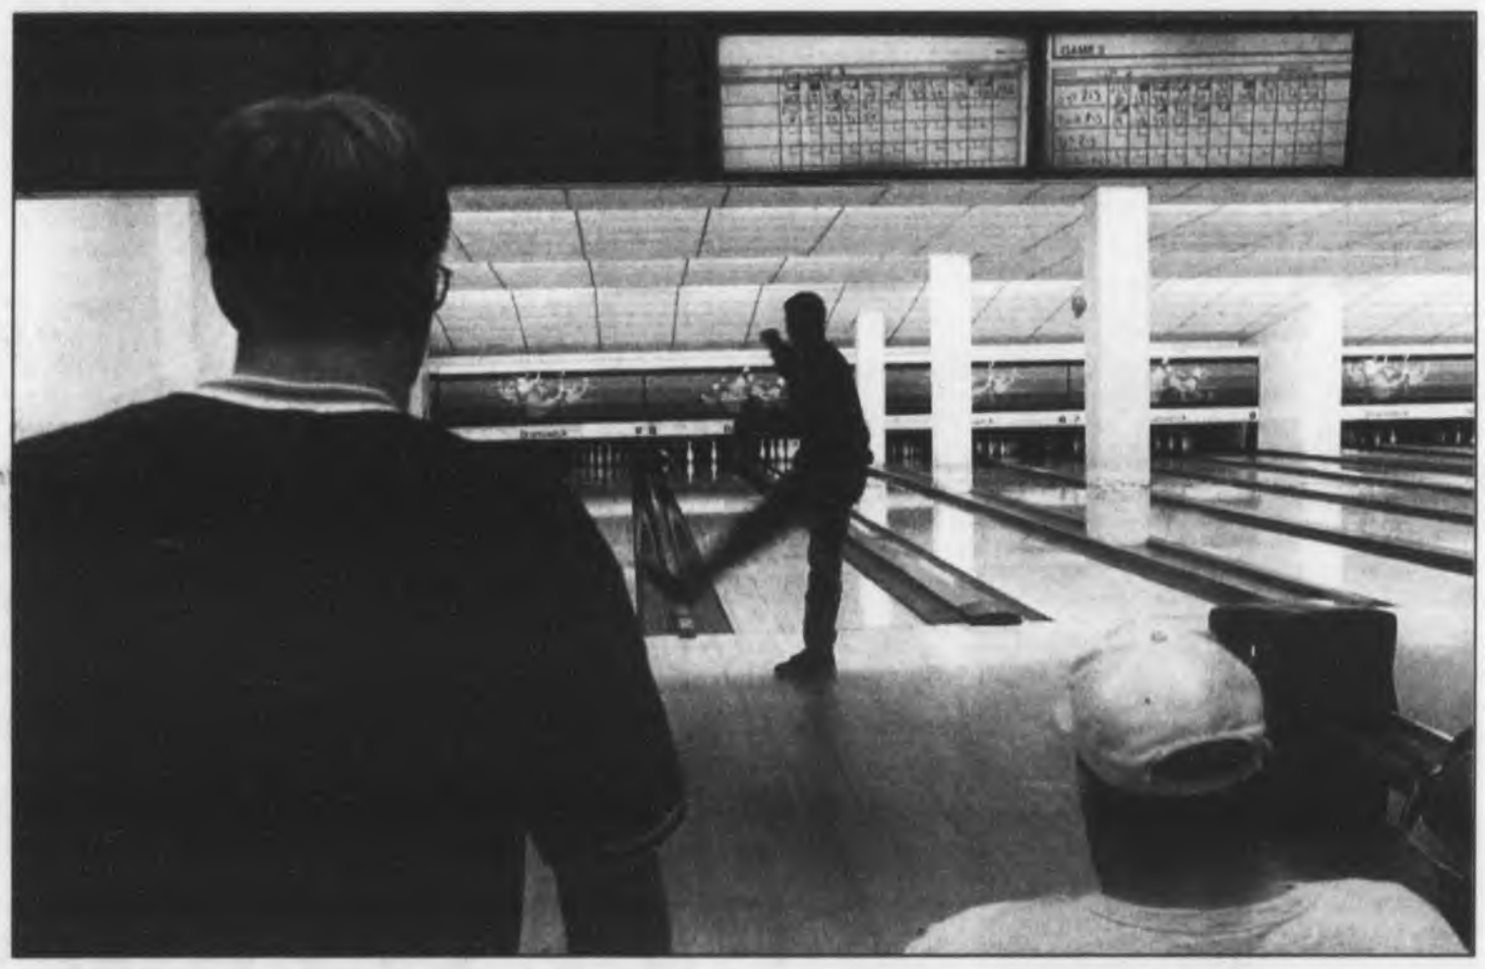
For example, one generous donor is Harrah's Entertainment of Memphis, Tenn. It has a contract to build a $37 million casino for the Prairie Band Potawatomi tribe in northeast Kansas, to complement its two riverboats in the Kansas City, Mo., area.

Bally's Entertainment of Chicago and Mirage Resorts of Las Vegas each gave the state Democratic Party $15,000, the maximum allowed by Kansas law.

And, of course, there is the biggest source of campaign funds in the gambling industry, Wichita Greyhound Park. Even as they worried about posting their first monthly losses, their operators and lobbyist contributed almost $38,000.

"With this issue, as in all issues that deal with money, you find people who become very active to protect their issues and perceived issues," said Rep. Doug Spangler, D-Kansas City, a supporter of new forms of gambling at the race tracks.

Legislators, other state officials, state parties and fundraising committees must file reports listing their campaign contributors with the secretary of state's office. They filed four reports for 1995 and 1996.



A review of those records showed that 29 of 40 state senators and 82 of 125 House members received campaign contributions, as did Gov. Bill Graves. More than $56,000 went to caucus fundraising committees and the state Republican and Democratic parties.

Democrats, who have provided proportionally more support for expanded gambling, received 62 cents of every dollar contributed. The state Democratic Party received more than $32,000.

K-State athletic teams bowl for Special Olympics

▶ Need more info? Special Olympics is looking for volunteers to help with a variety of events. Call Debbi DeVenuto at 537-7328

The K-State golf team bowled over the football team as they went head to head Sunday afternoon during a bowling competition to raise money for Special Olympics.

"It's a pig, pig, pig, pig win for the K-State golf team," Keith Eyestone, team sponsor and owner of the Purple Pig, said. "We just visualized before we shot. It's like golf."

Even though they beat the football team, those involved said there were no hard feelings.

"They're good sports," B.J. Walter, junior in marketing and golf team member, said. "They had a tough final line."

These athletes, along with others from every K-State varsity sport, raised $1,100 for Special Olympics as part of National Student Athlete Day.

K-State's Student Athletic Advisory Committee sponsored the event, which was at the K-State Student Union. Teams consisting of members from each of K-State's varsity sports took part, with Special Olympics coming out the real winner.

Missy Decker, SAAC president and member of the women's basketball team, said Special Olympics was chosen to receive the money raised because of the association it has with the Big 12.

"We picked Special Olympics because they work with the conference so much, and we thought it would help them," Decker said.

Even though Special Olympics received the money, Decker said the event was also a good chance for the athletes to interact.

"This is a lot of fun," Decker said. "Everyone knows each other, but we don't get a chance to see each other. So this is a great chance, and also we helped someone out."

Debbi DeVenuto, area 3 director for Special Olympics, said the continual help from the K-State athletic department is beneficial to the organization.

"This is totally wonderful. They have helped us so much," DeVenuto said. "This check will totally pay for our track meet."

The track meet, which will be April 12 at Bishop Stadium in CiCo Park, will attract 130 athletes. While the track meet will have competition, DeVenuto said that is not the focus.

"With Special Olympics, no one loses," she said. "Everyone is a winner."

This is the first time SAAC has sponsored an

Search for boy missing from home ends in discovery of dead body

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BURLINGAME — An 18-hour search for a young boy who disappeared from his home has ended with the discovery of his body in the south branch of the Wakarusa River.

Lucas Brady, 4, had been playing outside his rural Burlingame home Thursday afternoon, Osage County sheriff's authorities said. His mother, Sandra Brady, noticed him missing about 5 p.m. Neighbors helped her search, and then authorities were called.

About 100 people, including relatives, neighbors and law enforcement officers from three counties, searched a heavily-wooded area in northwest Osage County.

About 40 people using flashlights formed a sweep line and scoured a 500-yard area north of the Brady home. Some said steep slopes and rough terrain made the search more difficult. At times, some got lost in the darkness.

The search extended one mile into Wabaunsee and Shawnee counties.

A Topeka police helicopter scanned the area for about four hours with infrared equipment Thursday night but found no signs of heat from a body. Search dogs were also used; and after dawn Friday, neighbors went through muddy fields with all-terrain vehicles.

Divers found the body about 11:10 a.m. Friday in the river, submerged in about four feet of water. A narrow, winding path leads from the Brady home to the river, about 300 yards away.

The exact cause of death remained under investigation late Friday. District 4 Coroner Paul Adams said there were no signs of trauma on Lucas, and Sheriff Ken Lippert said foul play wasn't being considered.

SGA swears in executive officers, approves changes

BENJAMIN YODER

The newly elected 1997-98 Student Senate swore in the student body president and vice president and elected executive officers Thursday, but not before the 1996-97 Senate completed unfinished business.

The president, vice president and executive officers will help determine the direction this year's Senate will take and what is accomplished.

Before the 1996-97 Senate adjourned for the last time, it unanimously passed a bill requiring changes in the University Activities Board constitution to be approved by both Senate and UAB. Under the previous legislation, UAB did not have to get Senate approval to change its constitution.

The constitutional revision also classifies all UAB groups as a sports club, academic competition team, college council, campus-wide organization or an institutional service.

Chris Hansen, former student body president, swore new Student Body President Tim Riemann into office to begin the new Senate term. Jennafer Neufeld, student body vice president, also took her oath of office.

Senate elected Jeff Dougan, senior in electrical engineering, as the Senate chair. Dougan was a College of Engineering senator and the Academic Affairs Committee chair last year.

Dougan said the chair needs to have a clear vision for the year and effectively manage Senate meetings. He said he would have Senate focus on its goals and set deadlines to get business finished.

"I believe the chair is the leader of Senate," he said. "The Senate chair is the figurehead of this body."

Nicole Johnson, Faculty Senate representative, said Dougan has proven himself worthy and conducted committee meetings effectively.

On-campus offices offer students advice on landlord, tenant issues

HEATHER PERKINS
staff reporter

Signing a lease can be a simple process. But for those who run into problems, there is help available.

The Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs and the Students' Attorney can help students with a range of problems.

"Ninety percent of the services we provide deal with landlord and tenant issues. Most of the problems students come to us with deal with leases. For a lot of students it's their first time renting. They often don't read the lease before signing it. We can tell them what the landlord can hold them liable for," Todd O'Donnell, director of Consumer and Tenant Affairs, said.

Dianne Urban, students' attorney, is available to offer legal advice, explain the fine points of the law and answer technical questions.

Urban said landlords might try to hold the tenant responsible for damages they did not cause by withholding part or all of the security deposit.

"If a deposit is not returned for some reason, we can take the case to small claims court," Urban said.

Consumer and Tenant Affairs offers an inventory sheet for tenants and landlords to go over so they can determine the condition of the apartment and its contents.

"A lot of the problems could be prevented if students were more educated on the moving in and moving out process. Lots of disputes can be prevented if the tenant and landlord go through an inventory report," O'Donnell said.

If a tenant has difficulties getting a landlord to make necessary repairs on an apartment they can seek Urban's assistance.

"If repairs haven't been made or there are problems with the apartment, we can help get the repairs made or terminate the lease agreement if that is what the party wants," Urban said.

Urban said she handles other problems with landlords besides leases.

"There can be a problem with landlords just walking into the apartment without a viable reason. I will write a letter to the landlord and ask them to stop. I also tell the tenant to call the police if they keep it up. It is breaking and entering," Urban said.

Urban said she can also assist if the landlord places unnecessary responsibilities on the tenant.

"Once in a while landlords will try to shift responsibility onto the tenant. For instance, with many houses that have been converted into several apartments, the landlord is supposed to have the electricity in his name, but often he will have it in a tenant's name. Then, they will have the responsibility of collecting the money from the other tenants," Urban said.

Both Consumer and Tenant Affairs and the Students' Attorney help with roommate disputes.

"I explain how the system works but rarely can solve the problem. If one roommate moves out they are still liable to the landlord," Urban said.

Consumer and Tenant Affairs can give options for the course of action to take with a troublesome roommate. It can also help you find a new roommate. Roommate-selection forms are available at the office, and there is a book students can look through find a suitable roommate.

O'Donnell said students are welcome to bring in leases before signing.

The staff at Consumer and Tenant Affairs can help clear up questions about leases and help renegotiate points of the lease.

"We can help them rewrite or omit portions of the lease. For instance, if a lease states that the tenant is responsible for yard work, we can try to get around that. College students typically don't have the tools to do yard work," O'Donnell said.

• SIMPSON'S LAWYERS ALLEGE ERRORS, DEMAND NEW TRIAL.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Accusing the judge and jurors in the O.J. Simpson civil trial of misconduct and legal error, his lawyers have demanded a new trial and the dismissal of the $33.5-million damage award.

In a brief filed Friday, lawyers said the jury clearly wanted to destroy Simpson financially.

Simpson was acquitted of murder but found liable for the deaths of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman by the civil jury. He was ordered to pay $8.5 million in compensatory damages to Goldman's parents and $25 million in punitive damages to all plaintiffs.

The defense asked Judge Hiroshi Fujisaki to overturn the verdicts. The judge, who can also reduce the awards, set an April 25 hearing.

Plaintiffs' attorney Daniel Petrocelli said he would continue to seize Simpson's assets to satisfy the judgment, and disputed the defense claims.

• ARAFAT DEMANDS INITIATIVE TO STOP JEWISH SETTLEMENT.

JERUSALEM — Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat has written to President Clinton demanding that any U.S. peace initiative contain an Israeli pledge to stop building Jewish settlements on disputed land. His Cabinet said Saturday that U.S. credibility was at stake.

Their appeals came two days before Clinton is to meet in Washington with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

Israeli TV reports said Clinton was expected to ask Netanyahu to freeze settlement construction for the duration of the peace talks with the Palestinians. State Department spokesman Sharon Bowman said she couldn't comment on the report.

Clinton is trying to find ways to restart peace talks that broke off when Israel began construction last month of a Jewish neighborhood in disputed east Jerusalem, which the Palestinians claim as a future capital.

Arafat sent Cabinet minister Hanan Ashrawi to Washington to meet with Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and Dennis Ross, the U.S. coordinator for the Middle East. She was to arrive Sunday.

• BOMBS INJURE 15 AT AIR FORCE BASE NORTH OF MANILA.

MANILA, Philippines — Several bombs exploded at an air force base north of Manila, injuring at least 15 people and damaging several houses, officials said Sunday.

Officials and witnesses said a bush fire Saturday night apparently triggered the explosion of the bombs stored at Basa air base in Floridablanca town, about 45 miles north of Manila.

The blasts scattered shrapnel and debris over a large area, shattered windows in houses in and around the base, and ripped a deep crater in the depot area.

Witnesses said one explosion sent a mushroom-like cloud into the night sky. Officials said at least 15 people were injured by shrapnel and glass shards.

Mayor Pedro Capulong said he ordered hundreds of people in nearby houses and an evacuation camp for victims of the 1991 eruption of the Mount Pinatubo volcano moved temporarily to other locations while bomb experts inspected the depot and surrounding areas.

• ARAFAT DEMANDS INITIATIVE TO STOP JEWISH SETTLEMENT.

WASHINGTON — A leading Republican said Sunday that Attorney General Janet Reno will have no choice but to request an independent counsel to investigate allegations about Democratic fundraising wrongdoing.

"I think the case is overwhelming that she should," Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Jamie Gorelick, who left the Justice Department's No. 2 position last week, declined to say which way Reno is leaning, but she professed confidence in the careful deliberations on the legal issues involved.

International Week to exhibit 100 countries through events

HEATHER PERKINS
staff reporter

A sea of colorful international flags will descend upon the K-State Student Union today in celebration of International Week.

International Week begins today with the parade of flags and concludes Saturday with an international night and party.

"We would like for people to recognize and appreciate the number of international students and the number of countries represented on campus. There are about 1,000 international students from 100 countries attending K-State. I don't think people realize this," said Jim Endrizzi, international student center program coordinator.

International students are encouraged to wear costumes from their native countries throughout the week.

"We are trying to get international students to dress in their native costumes all week to show it is International Week," Amarnath Poola, an International Week coordinator, said.

Various events are scheduled throughout the week, including a children's fashion show, international music and dances.

International films from Africa, China, Brazil and India will be shown today through Wednesday at Forum Hall.

There will be a silent auction Friday from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Union courtyard. Twenty to 40 items from a variety of countries will be auctioned off. Items include a small wooden trinket box, necklaces, key chains and various other things.

"The international students donated items from their native countries. The money earned from the auction will go towards the expansion of the International Student Center," Endrizzi said.

International Week will conclude with a dinner and cultural show on Saturday night. The cultural show will feature international dances, music and a fashion show.

"It is an opportunity for the international community to celebrate its culture and to share their cultures with others students," Endrizzi said.

Jesus Week to spread awareness, hope

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN
staff reporter

Bibles, prayer cards and religious surveys are among the items to be distributed to students as KSU Student Fellowship members sponsor the third-annual Jesus Week.

KSU Fellowship committee member Richard Larson said he hopes with a week of campus activities, students will gain an awareness of Jesus and will realize Jesus gives them hope for today and hope for eternity.

"A lot of people on campus have a false idea of who Jesus is," he said. "He wasn't put on this Earth to add another religion, it was to give people life on Earth and joy and eternal life after they die."

Larson said the Jesus Week theme: JOY, which stands for Jesus, Others, Yourself, shows that joy allows people to see the difference between themselves in relation to Jesus. He said the only way to reach others is to put God first, others second and yourself third.

"We must care about other people to see the difference," he said. "Jesus is in us and working in us."

▶ Look it up in the E-Collegian. The schedule of activities for Jesus Week is available on the E-Collegian.

KSU Student Fellowship member Kelly Robinson said the week is not just for fellowship, but to let people know why they believe in Jesus.

Jesus Week activities begin at 8 p.m. Monday in Union 212 with the discussion "Developing a Christian Mind in a University Setting" and conclude with an all-campus praise and worship fest at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Umberger 105.

"The activity people tend to enjoy most is the rally on the final night," Robinson said. "Everyone

Open house shows off K-State to visitors

STORY BY TANYA NISLY • PHOTOS BY IVAN KOZAR

Mr. Peanut, the Minute Maid mascot, the Subway Sandwich and Willie the Wildcat were found wandering around campus Saturday. These special visitors were greeting guests at the All-University Open House.

More than 2,000 K-State stickers were given out in the first hour and a half, Sara Throne, student coordinator of open house, said.

"Crowds have been phenomenal," Throne said.

New events such as taking pictures with Willie and having some of the student athletes sign autographs were added this year, she said.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said promotions for open house targeted middle schools and elementary schools because they have found high-school seniors are fewer in number at open house, so the emphasis was changed.

"We've modified marketing strategies and programs to attract younger audiences," Bosco said.

▶ Want to see more? High-school photojournalists from all over Kansas covered open house this weekend. To see their work, see page 5.

One of the more popular booths on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union was the chemistry booth where slime was being made. At least 600-700 people visited it by noon.

"It's one of the more popular things with the kids here. Except it's very messy," Matt Kreps, junior in biochemistry and public relations, said.

Keith Buszek, associate professor of chemistry, agreed.

"People are 10 deep waiting to make slime," Buszek said.

The slime was made by mixing polyvinyl alcohol and borax. Kreps said the slime they were making is the same as the kind that can be bought in vending machines.

"Lots of teachers like this and use it in their classrooms," Kreps said.

Another popular event was Miracle Mile. This was a fundraiser sponsored by the Theta Xi fraternity and the Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority. They were raising money for multiple sclerosis and hospitalized children by collecting a mile of quarters.

About 63,000 quarters make up a mile, which is $16,000, Kurt Wooten, member of Theta Xi and freshman in mechanical engineering, said.

At press time fraternity members said they were not sure how much money had been raised.

Participants came to open house for different reasons.

"We mainly came because we home school," Maureen Fike, Walton resident, said.

"It's pretty interesting," Nick Fike, 7th grader from Walton, said.

Sarah Finney, junior at Manhattan High School, said she wanted to learn what to expect of college life.

There was a variety of favorite events among the children in attendance.

"My favorite part was the paint-gunning," Herman Diaz III, 9th grader from Junction City, said.

Diaz said that they were given guns with paint in them, and they were supposed to shoot a guy before he shot them.

Diaz said if he and his friend succeeded they were given a prize.

He won a water bottle, and his friend won a pen with a highlighter.

The chemistry magic show was also popular.

"They blew up balloons, shrank balloons and lit rocks on fire," Andy Marietta, 5th

AARON MOORE, 13, from Junction City, is taught the procedures of roping by Ryan McDonald, senior in construction science. Moore was with a group of students from Junction City Middle School who visited open house.

UPC's drive-in movie proves valiant effort, needs repeating

The drive-in movie was a valiant effort by the Union Program Council to broaden the spectrum of entertainment options Saturday night in Manhattan.

Complete with big screen and two classic movies, the event was a terrific idea. About 500 vehicles filled the parking lot of Bramlage Coliseum. Too bad Mother Nature wasn't in a cooperative mood.

Despite threatening clouds, cold temperatures and windy conditions, UPC waited until the last possible minute to cancel the event. When the rain finally did start — 15 minutes into the first film — they had to call it quits.

UPC members, soaking wet and probably freezing, quickly and efficiently refunded money to each carload of folks as they left the parking lot.

Though there was a contingency plan to show the movies in Forum Hall, it was clear that the drive-in experience itself, and not the movies, was what had drawn the crowds. Only a few people showed up to see "The Blues Brothers" and these people had to wait quite a while before the movie began.

UPC Special Events chair Scott Hussey said UPC plans to try sponsoring the drive-in again next year. We certainly hope it does.

Judging from the turnout Saturday, the amount UPC spent on the event (just less than $3,000) could easily be obtained from entertainment-starved college students and community members the next time around. In fact, we think the event should be repeated at least annually, if not more often.

The only other thing missing, besides clear skies, was the popcorn.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a consensus opinion is reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and students.

VIEWPOINT

BRANDI HERTIG

BRANDI HERTIG is a sophomore in print journalism and English/creative writing. You can e-mail your comments to Brandi at (blh0377@ksu.edu).

My friend, Zach, thinks Notorious B.I.G. faked his death and will soon be resurfacing on the rap scene.

It's just his opinion.

Having opinions are fun, and everyone has one about something. We as humans should enjoy questioning our surroundings and forming our own ideas.

Then there are those folks who are so adamant, so hard-nosed about their beliefs, they take the fun out of opinion.

These people bother me with their approach to expressing themselves.

There I was about a week ago, prancing off to class, when I noticed fresh chalkings all over the sidewalk. They held such cheerful messages as "Abortion Kills Children" and "It's a child, not a choice." What, oh what did I do to deserve such an inundation of blatant, pious opinion so early in the morning?

It's not so much the message that was there as the fact that it was thrown at my feet every two steps or so.

Later that very same week, while passing through the free-speech zone, I noticed a man "preaching the gospel" to anyone within earshot. As a Christian, I was embarrassed by the blimey guy. Are we so hard up for followers that we need to scream at unsuspecting people on their way to class?

Both situations are very similar in their scope. Both were obtrusive and, from what I could tell, served no real purpose other than to let people know that whatever they might have thought or believed was wrong.

Of course, all sorts of tired arguments can be used to reason there was a purpose to all of the brouhaha. Perhaps the involved parties were merely trying to educate the ignorant masses of K-State.

Give me a break. I seriously doubt someone looked down at the sidewalk, saw "Abortion: One dead, one wounded" and said, "Gee. I think I'll change my view on that because the sidewalk says so."

And the guy in the free-speech zone was probably turned more people off to Christianity than converted them.

This all hearkens back to the good ol' days when Bible caravans would roll into towns and stage a few revivals, heal a few lepers and roll back out again. No one knew where the preachers came from, and I'm sure no lepers were really healed.

These people and anyone else most certainly have the right to chalk up the sidewalks and preach their opinions in public. It's called the First Amendment, and it's a wonderful thing. But I seriously have to question the intentions behind the actions.

After all, is it realistic to think that if someone stood in the free-speech zone and preached about the Islamic faith, a whole slew of Christians would suddenly convert?

An opinion is nothing but an opinion unless there is some sort of real action involved. Merely saying what you believe is just as good as believing nothing at all.

Aye, there's the rub!

If people are actually interested in making their point to others, they should do a little more than just use a big ol' bucket o' chalk to express themselves. Accolades to the witty person who coined the phrase "Actions speak louder than words."

Or, as every writing teacher has pounded into the head of every student, "Show, don't tell."

Trite as they are, both are true and necessary if anyone wishes to convert others to his or her way of thinking. And convert is the word here. After all, if people didn't want people to join their way of thinking, would they bother saying anything in the first place?

A much more convincing argument for one's opinion can be made when real action can be shown. Pro-life advocates working at a pregnancy crisis center or Christians doing service in the community says much more about them than chalk ever could.

Persecution of Christians past, present shames western believers

Corrie and Betsie ten Boom. Jim Elliot and Nate Saint. Richard Wurmbrand. John Joseph.

What do these people have in common?

They were — and are — persecuted for their faith.

Corrie and Betsie ten Boom were sisters who were imprisoned in Nazi labor camps for aiding the Jews during World War II. Corrie and Betsie were starved, beaten and forced to live in a room that swarmed with fleas. Eventually Betsie faded away and went to be with her beloved Jesus.

Corrie lived on.

Jim Elliot and Nate Saint were missionaries to the Auca Indians. After several days of seeming friendly interaction, the two men, along with three fellow missionaries landed their plane near the Aucan's coastline. They went ashore in peace.

All five died by the Aucan spear.

Richard Wurmbrand made the mistake of believing in Jesus in Communist Russia. He was tortured for more than 14 years by the Communists who could not understand his faith.

His body still bears the scars from his faith.

John Joseph, a Pakistani Christian, was shot through the mouth and neck by Muslim extremists. His crime? He was charged under Pakistan's controversial blasphemy law. This is a capital offense that is frequently leveled at Christians in Pakistan.

He was found not guilty, and believes still.

These men and women loved Jesus in the face of more suffering and death than the western Christian can imagine.

Eric Black — graduate of Youth With a Mission — tells of Christians in Honduras walking for miles to attend church underneath what was essentially a large piece of propped up tin.

The westernized Christian oftentimes can not drag himself from a soft bed to sit on a padded pew in an air-conditioned sanctuary.

The men and women in Germany during Corrie and Betsie ten Boom's era risked their lives for the sake of God and the Jews.

Many men and women of this country, in this era, hide their faith because, after all, it's considered a very private matter.

Jim Elliot, Nate Saint, John Joseph and thousands upon thousands of moms, dads, brothers, sisters and friends have suffered and often died for what we can not even live for.

Why?

What makes the difference?

In "The Glory of Christ," Peter Lewis says:

"The early Christian martyrs, for instance, were not tortured and put to death for worshiping Jesus, but for refusing to worship anyone else — including the Roman emperor." [author's emphasis]

I believe this reveals the key to the problem of the western Christians.

It is not that we do not worship Jesus. We do.

It is not that we do not love him. Some do.

It is simply that we love and worship so many other things.

Sports.

Sex.

Drugs.

Food.

That wonderful member of the opposite sex.

A "cause."

Our religion.

Our intellect.

Ourselves.

There are so many things other than Jesus to fall in love with that I find it easy to put my love for him on the shelf when the slightest pressure arrives.

From the first- and second-century martyrs to the persecuted Yugoslavian Christians in Marie Chapian's book, "Of Whom the World was not Worthy," these "Jesus-lovers" have stood the tremendous trials of their faith.

We, as western Christians, can not say that we would do the same.

These people loved and worshiped only Jesus.

Who (and what) do we worship?

These heroes stood their ground, sometimes even dying for the Jesus they loved.

Can we not even live for him?

• OPC THANKS STUDENTS FOR SUPPORT OF DRIVE-IN MOVIE

Editor,

Thank you. I wanted to thank everyone at the Collegian for supporting Union Program Council in its endeavor to sponsor a drive-in movie for All-University Open House. Your support was very helpful.

I must say that I was surprised to see two articles in the same issue of the Collegian last Friday dedicated to the drive-in.

To all the people who came to the show, you have both my deepest thanks, and my most heartfelt apologies.

Thank you for coming to see the movies, and for showing us in UPC that this kind of event can be a success. We appreciate all your attendance, not just at the drive-in, but at any UPC event.

I am sorry we were not able to provide you with the movies in the venue we had promised.

Now I would like a chance to explain what happened on Saturday night. The whole thing comes down to one issue — the weather.

It has been said that if you don't like the weather in Kansas, wait for half an hour, and it'll be different. Unfortunately, for the drive-in, this was too true.

We got a late start, because the equipment got wet in the first shower that evening. Then, just as the first 20 minutes of "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" came to life on the screen, and in our AM radios, the clouds sent us a second present, more rain. The company we had contracted with to provide the screen, projectors and sound had no way to protect its equipment in the rain, so we had to pull the plug (quite literally).

So, for those of you who piled into your vehicles, waited in line, waited in the parking lot, and were patient with us, that is why we couldn't deliver as promised.

Once again, thank you all for being there, and watch for another drive-in sometime next semester, when it's warmer and drier.

Now I'd like to extend my thanks to the many UPC volunteers who helped us every step of the way, and got more than a little soaked at the end; and to the guys at Bramlage Coliseum who donated their time and dryness to our cause. Thank you, all of you, we could never have made it as far as we did without you!

• CHRITIAN FAITH SHOULD NOT BE DISMISSED

Editor,

I am writing in response to Kevin Bailey's column, and also in response to Brad Seabourn's letter.

Bailey, I want you to know that you did the right thing in writing your column. I, too, am a Christian, and I completely agree with what you wrote.

To Seabourn, I just want to say I'm not surprised with your response, but nevertheless, you are wrong. Jesus died on the cross and was resurrected not only to provide us with the one and only way to get to heaven, but he also "was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities ... and by His stripes, we are healed." (Isaiah 53:5).

He already bore the pain of all our sicknesses when he was beaten on the cross. No amount of human disbelief will ever be able to make that fact void.

I don't know for sure, Seabourn, why you insist that God won't do what he says he'll do. (Check out Matthew 11:23-24). That is calling God a liar, even though you probably didn't think about it that way.

Maybe you have tried to trust God before, and it seemed he didn't come through for you. I just want you to know that if that is the case, the Bible says that when you ask for something in prayer, you must ask in faith with nothing wavering, because he who doubts is like a wave of the sea, driven and tossed by the wind.

Those people should not think they will receive anything from the Lord (James 1:6-8). In other words, if we ask God to do something, yet don't have the faith to back it up, we are better off not asking. This might seem harsh or unfair on God's part, but that's just the way it is. Maybe you really do think that the faith Bailey talked about is just a fairy tale.

Well, that's what faith is all about — believing in the impossible, because with God, all things ARE possible (Matthew 19:26).

Bailey, I want to encourage you to keep up the good work. What you wrote took guts, and I want you to know it encouraged me to take a stand for Jesus even more in my own life.

Thank you for being bold and writing the truth. And keep trusting in God, because he will come through for you if you don't let your faith be shaken. I'll be praying for your father, too.

• RELIGIONS SHOULD BE CONSIDERERED

Editor,

I find it ironic that Christians are writing that another's religious views should not be ridiculed. Often, my beliefs, morals and sanity have been called into question by Christians because I do not believe as they do.

Kip Traynor pointed out that humans do not know everything, yet I am often told that there is only one true God and only one true way to worship.

If humans do not know all, then how can they be certain that maybe I am not also correct?

To be sure, I don't support Brad Seabourn's attacks on religion in his letter to the editor, but I understand his viewpoint. I've conversed and been good friends with atheists, agnostics, Christians, Wiccans, Druids, Buddhists, Jews and many others, so I've learned to tolerate views that don't coincide with my own.

Joshua Belland wrote, "Seabourn thinks because he does not believe in God, there is no reason for anyone else to, either." I ask you, Traynor, Belland and those who agree with them: Just because you don't believe in my god or my goddess, why shouldn't I?

Exposing Open House

Award-winning high-school photographers from all over Kansas spent K-State Open House taking pictures of visitors while learning about K-State photojournalism themselves.

STORY BY HEATHER HOLLINGSWORTH

Huddled around the Collegian negative scanner, a crowd of high-school photographers watched their photos appear on the screen. The film scanner was a big hit with these photographers, who are used to spending hours in the dark room.

"I wish we had one," Aisha Lindt, senior at Kingman High School, said. "It seems like it would make it a lot easier."

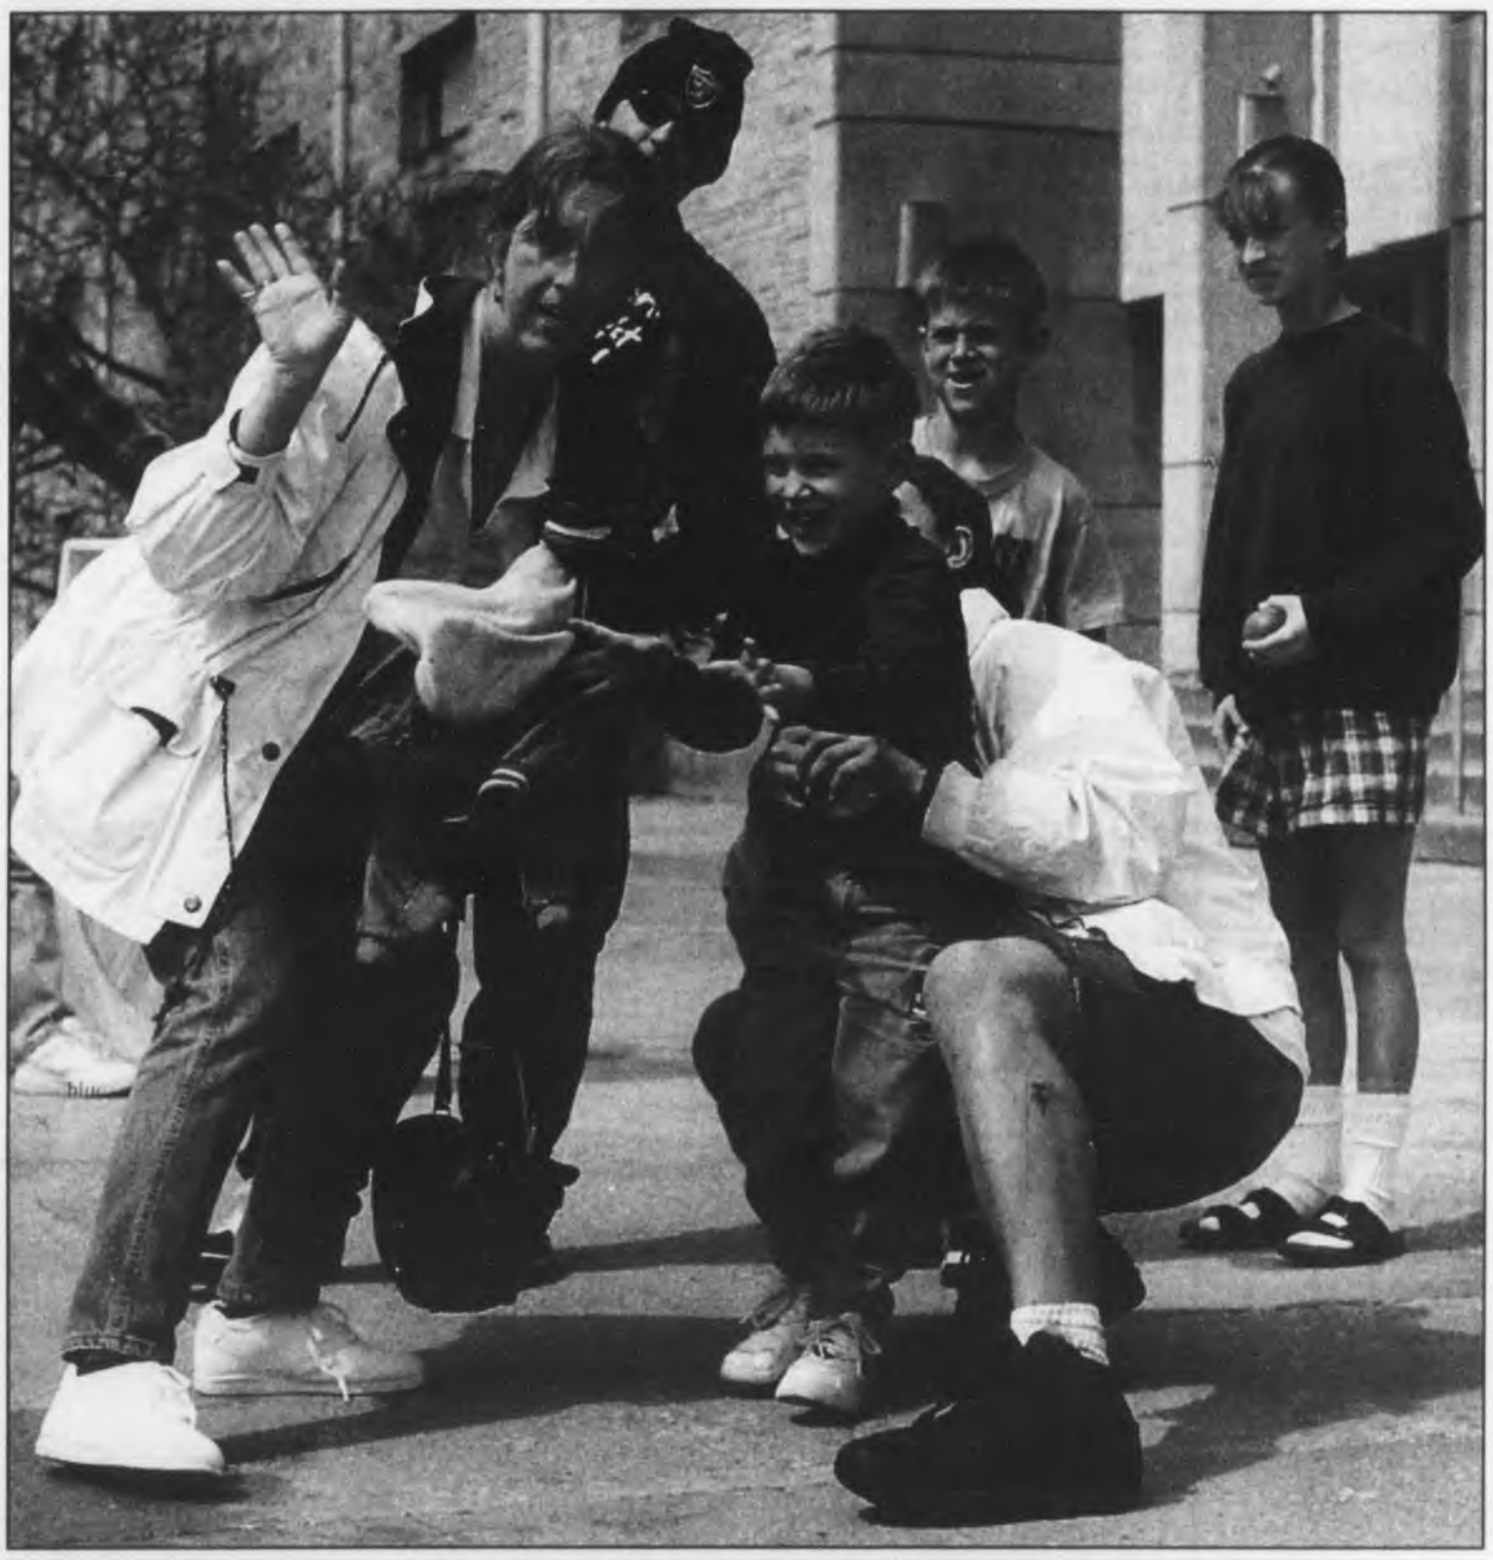
Lindt was one of 12 high-school photographers attending the KSU Photo Workshop. In its third year, the workshop helps students who placed first, second or third in the Kansas Scholastic Press Association regional photography contest prepare for the April 19 state contest.

"It gives students the opportunity to polish skills before the state contest," Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc., said. "It also allows them to sample the sights and sounds of K-State Open House."

Sometimes these trips result in an increased interest in Student Publications.

"I think it's a good recruiting tool for us. It's a good chance for us to show the kids Student Publications," said Brandon White, Collegian staff photographer. "When I was in high school, I enjoyed workshops like this. We got to meet the big kids and do what we wanted to do. It's weird to be the big kids now."

Arriving at 5 p.m. Friday, the high-school students were greeted by K-State photographers. The evening was spent showing slides, discussing flashes and cameras, and critiquing photographs before retiring to Jardine Terrace Apartments.



"Getting help from all these people who actually know what they are doing – that's help to us little people," Lindt said.

The next day, pairs of high-school students searched for Open House features assisted by a Collegian photographer. The best of those photos accompany this story and additional photos can be viewed on the Electronic Collegian at (http://collegian.ksu.edu).

Craig Hacker, Collegian staff photographer, led Abilene High School students Kelli Regier and Arien Richardson on a 3-1/2 hour cross-campus trek. The three hoofed it to the Veterinary Medical Sciences Building, Throckmorton Hall, Ackert Hall and mid-campus before returning to the Collegian in Kedzie Hall to process their film.

"They kept complaining about me walking four times as fast as they do," Hacker said. "It gets them out on campus. After walking around, the place doesn't seem as unmanageable."

In Young's case, NBA looking for impact players like Billups, not project players

VIEWPOINT

TODD STEWART

TODD STEWART is a junior in secondary education/English. You can e-mail comments to Todd at (toddvs@ksu.edu).

This whole Mark Young thing perplexes me.

He is not ready for the NBA. Plain and simple.

While he may be one of the more talented players in the Big 12 Conference, he still has never produced at a consistent level.

Coming out of McKinley High School, two different publications named Young one of the top-20 recruits in the nation. Another analyst hailed Young as K-State's top prep recruit since Rolando Blackman. He was going to put Wildcat basketball back on the map.

But it just hasn't happened like that.

He has shown flashes of that brilliance, but he has been, at best, consistently inconsistent.

In the three years I have watched Young, I have seen him take over games offensively and be the defensive stopper on the other end of the court. Other times, I wasn't sure he was still out there on the court.

This past season was the first in his career he averaged double figures, but less than 13 points per game won't raise many eyebrows.

He needs one more year of college basketball to prepare him for his attempt at the next level. He needs a senior year to be the coming-out party for Mark Young.

The fact is that Young will not be drafted. No matter how much I would love to see him make it, it is going to be an uphill battle.

Now, I do appreciate Young's desire to help out his family. That right there is solid reasoning for the jump to the NBA, but I think Young should have taken more time to evaluate his situation.

A solid senior season, let's say 18 points and 9 rebounds per game, and Young right there solidifies himself as a legitimate NBA prospect. He needs that eye-raising season.

Right now, Young is a project. He needs time to develop, and I am not sure how many teams are ready to give Young that time. College is the time for that development, not the NBA.

How much will Young's family really benefit if his basketball career ends in six months?

I just hope Young has prepared himself for the worst. He is setting himself up for a fall.

I hope he has no illusions, although I think his agent might.

In the Collegian last week, Young's agent, Oscar Schoenfelt, sang the praises of Young and his NBA future.

"The league is dominated by 6'6" Scottie Pippen guys. He is what the NBA is looking for," Schoenfelt said in Monday's paper.

The only thing I can see that Pippen and Young have in common is the 6'6" part. All other comparisons need to stop right there. Young will not be drafted just because he is 6'6" and can handle the ball. NBA teams are looking for impact players in the draft, not projects.

Leaving school early for the NBA is for players like Colorado guard Chauncey Billups. Billups has been the real deal every since day one in Boulder. He was a first-team all-Big 12 selection, and has elevated Colorado from the conference cellar to national prominence. NBA teams are looking for players like Billups that have the ability to make an impact right away. Billups is someone that makes everyone else around him better, and that is easier said than done.

Young, on the other hand, has been unable to do that.

He is a good player on a bad team, and those players are a dime a dozen in the collegiate ranks. That does not raise eyebrows.

Also paying for the damage done by Young's decision is the current K-State basketball team. Young's senior leadership would be a valuable asset for the very young squad. This team would be better if Young stayed for his final season. Everyone is paying for Young's mistake.

Only time will tell if Young made the right decision. Chances are, though, he didn't. While no one can question Young's talent, the numbers just have not been there.

Pippen is an all-Star, while Young isn't all-conference.

Can you say, CBA?

K-State throwers gain provisional marks in track and field meets at Emporia Relays

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

Sophomore Renetta Seiler and senior Staci Lowe set provisional qualifying marks in the Euler State Farm/Emporia Relays.

Seiler set provisional qualifying marks in the hammer throw and the discus, and Lowe set a provisional mark in the javelin throw.

Seiler won the hammer throw with a toss of 185'7". That mark was a little more than her school-record toss off 188'2" a week ago the University of Texas-El Paso.

Seiler has surpassed every record in the hammer throw to date and is literally throwing herself past all of the competition.

"Well, I try," she said. "I was surprised at how well I did this early in the season because I only had a week of practice after the outdoor season."

But Seiler isn't the only thrower who placed. Sophomore Anna Whitham came in fifth place in the hammer, third in the javelin and finished fourth in the discus.

Meanwhile in Austin, Texas, at the Texas Relays, senior Kirsten Schultz placed sixth in the javelin with a throw of 149'9". Wanita Dykstra also won the high jump in Austin leaping over all comers with a jump of 5'11.5".

"We have a lot of talent outdoors, and we have a couple more throwing events now that we are outside," Seiler said. "We're starting off pretty good, and I think as the season keeps rolling we can get some high qualifying marks."

K-State's women runners also performed well at the meet. Darrylette Bass won the 100-meter dash, and Angela Harris surpassed the competition in the 100-meter hurdles.

The women's 1,600-meter relay team of Karriema Parris, Emily Diederich, Bass and Jacque Derstein also finished second.

On the men's side, the 1,600-meter relay team of Scott Galas, Jeff Martin, Perry McBride and Keith Black finished first in the relay while the B team of Ken Dennard, Shawn Maxwell, Ryan Johnson and Kevin Lewis finished in third.

"We ran pretty well, but there wasn't all that much competition for us," Martin said. "Basically, it was just some good training for us because we know we can run faster than that."

Martin also finished second in the 400-meter hurdles and said he was trying to work on his technique in the hurdles to better prepare him for what he hopes to be a race in the NCAA meet.

"That's certainly my goal, and as long as I go out and work on the hurdles on Saturday I'll get there," he said.

At Austin, Travis Livingston came in third place in the 100-meter dash with a time of 14.26 seconds in the finals.

The K-State track and field team travels to Columbia, Mo., Saturday to compete in the Tom Botts Invitational.

Hargrove gets first ejection of season

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Cleveland manager Mike Hargrove drew the first ejection of the 1997 major league season during Sunday night's game against Anaheim.

Despite the low tolerance threatened this spring by big league umpires, there were no ejections during the opening week until Hargrove was chased by plate umpire Dale Scott after the top of the third.

Anaheim led 7-1 at the time. Jim Thome ended the inning by striking out — swinging — but Hargrove yelled at Scott, apparently about the called second strike on the previous pitch.

Scott turned toward the Cleveland dugout and delayed only seconds before throwing out Hargrove. Hargrove then left the dugout and the two had an animated, but not violent, discussion on the field.

SpringDance '97 displays talent, hard work

RACHAEL KRUEGER
staff reporter

Fun, creative and interpretive.

The dancers in SpringDance '97 set a tone to be enjoyed and remembered. The inspired spirit of the dancers, evident by abundant smiles and limber body language, invited the audience to become part of the performance.

The opening number, "Whoevercanbethereonwednesdaynight," was as fun and chaotic as the title itself. The use of hula-hoops and a parachute left it impossible to guess what would appear next.

The dancers' theatrical talent abounded in numbers such as "Lunar Cycle," "Peace by Piece" and "Un/Settled." To follow and comprehend the dancers' interpretation and meaning of the music required nothing short of serious analytical effort. The reward, given by the performers, was beautiful representations of mood and emotion.

Art Review

"Spring Waltz" emphasized the classic feeling most expect at a dance recital. Over 20 synchronized ballerinas gracefully encircled the stage and each other, their movements accented by flowing costumes.

Each number's costumes varied from jeans and tee-shirts to tutus to exotic dresses, fitting the personality of the projected mood, and aiding the interpretation of the music.

Two of the most enjoyable numbers, "Full Moon in Santiago" and "Good News," were especially impressive because the choreographers, Diana T. Yamabayashi and Kristy Jantz, are students who also performed in the program.

Jo Byrnes Miller, K-State dance alumna and guest artist, choreographed "Un/Settled." A lone cello sang out while six dramatic dancers portrayed a theme to be internally interpreted.

The whole program was full of feeling. It was upbeat and mellow, classical and modern, graceful and obnoxious. The evident contrast of the numbers stressed the dancers' diversity.

The ending number, "Rhythm and Dues," was a delightful, energetic medley of songs and dancers. Jennifer Washington and Yamabayashi, in a comical segment accentuating their personalities and talent, stole the show.

The show, however, was never stolen for very long. All of the performers proved themselves devoted and talented. The work put into the program was evident, and the result appreciated.

Arthur Dodge band solidly rocks Chance

PHIL KELLUM
staff writer

Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon was a-rockin' and a-rollin' Thursday night as Lawrence's Arthur Dodge and the Horsefeathers rolled into town to subject Manhattan to its good old-fashioned rock 'n' roll.

Dodge and the Horsefeathers recently released their self-titled debut album on Barber's Itch Records, and most of the songs played Thursday were from that very release.

Music Review

The band features vocalist and guitarist Dodge; guitarist Matt Mozier, formerly of Manhattan's own Truck Stop Love; and bassist Brock Ginther, formerly of The Homestead Grays and Tenderloin. Drummer Guy Stevens is also thrown into the mix.

They hit the stage around ten minutes after midnight, shortly after a lackluster set by opening band Chick Scaletti.

I really wanted to hear their song "Mad Dog," and Dodge and the boys kindly obliged, playing it second. Mozier's solos in that song were amazing. It wasn't like he was showing off doing flashy Eddie Van Halen-type solos, but they were just good solos that fit the groove. He made it look so easy.

Arthur Dodge and the Horsefeathers are one of those bands that should optimally be enjoyed while drinking a glass of cheap whiskey and smoking non-filtered cigarettes.

About halfway through their set, Mozier asked for some bourbon and whiskey to be brought to the stage, and Dodge was trying to bum a cigarette from those in the front.

Ginther knew how to lay down the bass lines. His riffs were very smooth, and they flowed so well that it seemed like they just went walking around the bar.

Stevens seemed like he was a little to into it. There's nothing wrong with getting into your music, but he was getting a bit carried away, with his making faces all the time and jerking around. It was distracting.

Mostly, Dodge and the Horsefeathers stuck to their recipe of rock 'n' roll with an old-school country edge to it, but occasionally they threw some rockabilly into the mix as well.

The whole band closed the set with "How You Been." On the album, it's a pretty fast song, but live it seemed like they doubled the tempo and played it at warp speed. It was a very rockabilly, Reverend Horton Heat-esque song. A fitting end to a great set.

Mozier, at the end of the song, began doing some inspired Pete Townshend-esque windmills with his guitar.

Then Mozier and Dodge performed their song "True Romance" by themselves, with just their guitars backing them up. They slowed it down a little bit and calmed the crowd down after the fireworks of "How You Been."

It seemed like the show was over before it started.

The vaunted troupe brings its modern dance back to K-State after a two-decade absence with a performance at 8 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

The evening's repertoire will include "The River," choreographed by Ailey, who died in 1989, to the score of the same name by jazz legend Duke Ellington; "Suite Otis," choreographed by George Faison with music by Otis Redding; and "Revelations," choreographed by Ailey to traditional music.

Kansas City, Mo. is the unofficial second home to the Ailey troupe, as it is the only American city with an auxiliary support organization, the Kansas City Friends of Alvin Ailey. It sponsors a summer "AileyCamp," featuring dance instruction and self-improvement opportunities, for at-risk, inner-city kids, as well as providing programs for area schools.

Barbara Morrow-Williams, executive director of the K.C. Friends, said the appeal of the Ailey troupe to them is its multicultural composition, which is still somewhat rare in the upper echelons of the dance world.

"Dance outreach is a little more rare than the other arts and that's what makes our program unique," Morrow-Williams said, "especially modern dance as opposed to classical."

The Ailey troupe performs in K.C. every year as a fundraiser for the Friends.

"The company helps us with our programs by bringing in revenue to our organization, and giving us a higher profile in the community," she said.

STUDENTS TRY to enjoy "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" as the rain starts to fall. Within minutes of the start of the movie, the drive-in was canceled and moved to Forum Hall because of rain.

UPC cancels drive-in movie because of rain

STORY BY JOHN HENDERSON • PHOTO BY CLIF PALMBERG

Union Program Council would have put on quite a show Saturday night. Two blockbuster movies were to be shown to a drive-in crowd of hundreds in the east parking lot of Bramlage Coliseum.

That is, if it hadn't rained.

Scott Hussey, chair of UPC's Special Events Committee, said he estimated 500 cars, each with one to a dozen people inside, showed up to see the double feature of "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" and "The Blues Brothers," but had to be sent away when the rain hit.

The plan was to charge $5 per carload of people, and $2 for those coming alone. The movies were projected onto a large screen, and the audio was sent over the air to AM radios in the cars. If it rained, the money would be refunded, and whoever wanted to could see the movies indoors.

The equipment was all outdoors, open to the elements, Hussey said.

"There was just no way of keeping the equipment dry when it rained," he said.

All attendees were refunded, as far as Hussey said he could tell. The movies were planned to begin around 8:30 p.m., but delays pushed the start of the movie until after 9.

Fifteen minutes into "Indiana Jones," a UPC representative with a microphone issued an apology to the attendees on account of the rain. All the cars filed out of the lot, but not all the people who were there went to Forum Hall to watch the movies indoors.

Stephanie Sapienza, who chairs the Kaleidoscope Films Committee that sponsored "The Blues Brothers," said most who showed up wanted the drive-in aspect of the event.

Sapienza said UPC chairs had been approached by a company that leases equipment for such events at a November convention of the National Association of Campus Activities. Planning began in January, with Special Events handling the equipment contract, and Kaleidoscope, along with Feature Films, paying for the two movies.

"We almost called the contract off," she said. "It was problematic from the start."

The company, Auburn Moon, told UPC they had to notify them 48 hours in advance if there was a chance of rain, she said. The company gave UPC alternate rain dates that were unworkable, she said.

"We couldn't get Bramlage on those days," she said. "We're not sure why they couldn't get it out in the rain, but they said they couldn't. We decided to take the best shot. Open House could use the shot this year."

Hussey said the contract for movie equipment was about $2,200. They also rented two portable toilets for $200 each, he said. Sapienza said the rights to show "The Blues Brothers" was about $75, and "Indiana Jones" was a bit higher, about $100. The parking lot was free, she said.

"We would have made all of our money back on this had we been able to go ahead and show both movies," Hussey said. "We plan to do this again in the fall, when it'll be warmer and drier."

The money is meant to be invested on events such as this, he said, not necessarily to make a profit. UPC was pretty certain there would be an interest, he said.

"There was a whole pack of people sitting on the ground in the front row, wrapped up in blankets," he said. "I was kind of surprised."

Deteriorating generator cuts space shuttle mission short

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space shuttle Columbia and its seven astronauts will return to Earth on Tuesday, 12 days earlier than planned, because of a deteriorating and potentially explosive power generator.

It is only the third time in space shuttle history that a mission has been cut short by equipment failure.

While NASA considered commander James Halsell Jr. and his crew to be in no immediate danger, shuttle managers did not want to take any chances with the generator and, on Sunday, cut short the 16-day science mission.

"The conservative thing to do is land on Tuesday," shuttle program manager Tommy Holloway announced at a hastily arranged news conference.

Holloway said a Monday landing was ruled out in order to allow for an orderly return, and because Columbia's two other electricity-producing fuel cells were working fine.

The fear was that hydrogen fuel and oxygen in the degraded generator could mix, overheat and blow up if voltage in the unit dropped far enough. Flight controllers decided to turn off the unit Sunday to reduce, if not eliminate, that risk.

"Our plans would be to manage this fuel cell in a way that's not a threat to crew safety and, indeed, we are extremely confident in the two remaining fuel cells and their ability to support an orderly and methodical preparation for landing, and landing," Holloway said.

To slow the decline in voltage, Mission Control first had the astronauts reduce the power load on the degraded fuel cell. But the voltage continued to dwindle. Engineers debated a few hours before deciding to shut down the unit — once turned off, it cannot be restarted in the event another fuel cell fails.

While a shuttle can land safely with two fuel cells, it's uncertain what would happen if only one fuel cell was available because of all the vital systems that would have to be shut down for lack of power.

Each $5-million fuel cell uses hydrogen and oxygen to generate electricity for the numerous shuttle systems, and produces water as a byproduct. NASA flight rules stipulate that all three fuel cells be working properly in orbit, otherwise a mission must be cut short.

Mission Control had been monitoring the mysterious decline in voltage in the fuel cell since Friday's liftoff. As it turns out, brief jumps in voltage were detected in the unit several hours before launch, but managers determined it was working properly and cleared Columbia for flight.

Holloway admitted that with 20-20 hindsight, the countdown should have been halted and the fuel cell replaced. Launch controllers made the best decision at the time with the data available, he said.

Engineers have no idea why the fuel cell slowly was losing voltage. The unit has flown before in space without problems.

A failed fuel cell forced an early landing during NASA's second shuttle flight in 1981; in that case, the unit was flooded with water. The only other time a shuttle mission was cut short for equipment failure was in 1991, because of a failed navigation unit.

Halsell did not sound surprised when Mission Control radioed up the bad news.

"That's certainly a disappointment," Halsell said, "but we know you guys put your best effort forward and you're doing the right thing and we appreciate all the work that's gone into that."

Mission Control immediately began planning for a Tuesday afternoon landing of Columbia — which wasn't supposed to return until April 20 — at the Kennedy Space Center. And the astronauts rushed to complete as many laboratory experiments in the time remaining.

Scientists who had been preparing for more than three years for the mission were devastated. They expected to complete no more than 15 percent of their experiments, if that.

Scientists are hoping their experiments will fly on a future shuttle mission.

"We're hanging on to that glimmer of hope," said NASA mission scientist Michael Robinson.

Artist provides spontaneous expression for exhibit

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Art Review

▶ More info? An exhibition of Japanese artist Kotoko Imaoka's work, "Bunraku Theatre," is at Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz Ave., until May 3. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Satuday. Admission is free. Call 537-2099 for more info.

For Tokyo artist Kotoko Imaoka, life is theatre.

Imaoka's art brings the historic culture of Japanese Bunraku Theatre, a delicate, 17th-century puppet theatre involving one master puppeteer and two assistants, to glorious life with studies of the puppets themselves and through action.

The modern ink and brush painter's work seemingly appears spontaneous — like if one shook a Franz Kline black-and-white painting hard enough to make it representational. In this style of painting, called "Gendai Suibokuga" in Japan, line becomes the basis of form, which becomes the basis of composition.

Whether Imaoka paints human expression, as in the gruff demeanor of the hulking male puppet in "Bravery," or more conventional figure paintings, as with the sweet delicacy of a female set against a flowering tree in "Thoughts of Love," her art succeeds in capturing an underlying awareness that each puppet seems to have a life of its own, apart from the omnipresent puppeteer found lurking in the background of many works.

Imaoka's show at the Strecker is the result of her husband, Setsuo Imaoka, who is teaching a course in Japanese at K-State this semester. He inquired about showing her work and, after seeing examples, Julie Strecker, owner of the gallery, happily agreed.

As she said coyly at Friday's opening, "We're so lucky to live in a college town."

The artist, who attended the opening, also offered portraits to local patrons on Saturday. Imaoka was in town visiting her husband over spring break.

Her simple process is nearly an art itself, from mixing her ink from a block of pine smoke and gelatin to choosing a delicate bamboo brush. The difficulty of the process, and the aspect which Imaoka has so obviously mastered, is in choosing the right amount of ink and applying it with the correct stroke of the brush.

Imaoka now passes her skills on to more than 50 students at her private school in Tokyo.

Setsuo, who translated for Kotoko, said her travels to Kansas and to the American southwest have inspired her to paint animals since she enjoys nature and visited the Konza Prairie.

But, in the high-tech, international city that is Tokyo, does a traditional artist like Imaoka get lost in the fray?

Kotoko said Japanese people like to pursue traditional culture.

"So many people are interested in going back to the traditional materials and culture, especially those who've worked years in the mechanized world and are now retired," Kotoko said.

Following in the footsteps of Strecker's recent wave of shows featuring Asian artists, the complex paintings of the Imaoka show provide a simple exoticism for the windswept plains.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY APRIL 7-11! Dillons holds all sorts of wonders for you on your special day. Thinking about a boring cake? Try eating the powdered whipped cream right out of the packets instead. And enough cannot be said about the powers of fried pickles.

ARIES (March 21-April 20)- Stop butting your head against things that you cannot change. Take off that do-rag and put down that electric guitar; people like you just the way you are. Revisit younger days and read the Ramona Quimby series of books by Beverly Cleary.

TAURUS (April 21-May 21)- Shhh ... do you hear that? It's spring fever creeping up behind you. You'd better get out of its way before it bumps you in the butt and out of class. There'll be time enough for playin' when the schoolin's done.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21)- Now is the time to find your twin and go rowing together. The two of you have a lot of catching up to do. Be sure to stop by your favorite malt shop and have a soda with two straws. If you can't find your twin, get the two straws in the pop anyway — a mouthless straw just might attract lonely lips.

CANCER (June 22-July 23)- Use a bit of moisturizer on those hang nails and they should go away. Crab friend, it's about time you start rummaging though all of the stuff that you decided that you just couldn't throw away. Your pincers will be much happier when your lease runs out.

LEO (July 24-Aug. 23)- Don't neglect that wonderful musical side of yours, despite the fact that a big pile of homework might be calling to you. Climb up to Make Out Ridge and bond with a guitar, or just knock on foggy car windows.

VIRGO (Aug. 24-Sept. 23)- Financial woes will befall you this week when you realize that a frothy can of pop is five cents beyond your grasp. Your people skills will be of the utmost importance in this time of need if you want your dream to be realized. And, if all else fails, grovel.

LIBRA (Sept. 24-Oct. 23)- Create your own theme week just like high school. Some fun suggestions are "Hot Dog Day," "Make Fun of Others Day" and "Chide Those Who Make Fun of Others Day." A box of Triscuits may come in handy early in the week.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)- Feeling like you missed the ship with the whole Hale-Bopp thing? Get a big tub of Legos and build your own spaceship. Invite friends over for a ride. No friends? Take your boom box and a piece of cardboard down the free-speech zone and bust a few breakdance moves.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 23-Jan 20)- Your sharp tongue might end up cutting you if you're not careful with it. If you're into that sort of thing, then this week is yours. For the more squeamish, be sure to have plenty of biohazard bags ready.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21-Feb. 19)- Blithering 19th-century tarts breathing down your neck? Consider trekking down to southeast Kansas to seek solitude in a coal shovel named Big Brutus. If that fails, search high and low for someone who loves you (or maybe someone who just sort of doesn't mind your presence) and give them a squeeze.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20)- Little fishy, this week make like a salmon and swim upstream. You may get your gills all bloody, but at least you'll get stuff done. Just watch where you lay your eggs.

MONEY TO REMAIN A VIRGIN

The University of Arizona turned down a $250,000 scholarship gift in November that was to be available to female American Indians.

Four-year Sally Keith scholarships would be given on the basis of personality rather than grades, and preference would be given to virgins, a point that caused the University to balk because, said a University official, "We can't dictate morals."

Thornton's 'Sling Blade' shows Americana in raw form

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
staff writer

Billy Bob Thornton's brilliant "Sling Blade" might just be the most American movie of 1996.

It's a Midwestern tale of family, loss, self-identity and the people we meet throughout our lives.

Movie Review

Thornton, who wrote, directed and starred in the critically praised film, has crafted an unpretentious story of a mentally ill patient, Karl Childers, who is released from an Arkansas state hospital and left to face the world with little inclination of its cruelty.

It's not "Forrest Gump," thank goodness, but a thoughtfully paced intense thriller of time and place, as Karl befriends a young boy, Frank (Lucas Black), whose tragic family life has destined him for more trouble.

Karl eventually finds work, after making friends with Frank and his mother, Linda (Natalie Canerday), being invited to live in their garage and sparring a few times with Linda's thoughtless boyfriend, Doyle, played in white-trash earnest by Dwight Yoakam.

Doyle isn't too keen on Karl invading what he sees as his rightful place as Linda's "man" and a makeshift, albeit abusive, father to Frank. Of course, this tension between Doyle and Karl slowly bubbles up to a grim conclusion.

However, while living with Frank, Karl also befriends Linda's gay co-worker Vaughn played by John Ritter ("Three's Company"). Ritter makes a fine return to film, after so many other cheesy outings.

To find a gay character so sensitively treated in an American movie is a rarity, and Ritter keeps his chin above exploitation, and plays it with as much dignity as a gay man living in a small town in Arkansas possibly can.

The underlying strength of "Sling Blade" is found in its characters, like Vaughn and several lesser roles, that are so perfectly real it's as if Thornton has invited us into his small town for a bit of eavesdropping. It's almost pure Americana — an "Our Town" with a millennial spin.

And as Karl slowly comes to diagnose the problems of his new friends, his tragic life begins to make sense to himself and us. If every human is put on Earth for a purpose, Karl has found his purpose and realizes it in the chilling climax.

Thornton makes Karl out to be sympathetic enough for our respect, allowing us to almost feel good about his crimes.

The film perhaps comments on our ability to overlook the actual deed if the circumstances prove worthy; although Karl breaks a legal law, does he really break a moral law?

It's no wonder the members of the Motion Picture Academy were compelled to give Thornton at least one award (Best Screenplay — Adapted) at last week's Oscar ceremony. This is one to catch before it drifts out of our town.

Beat-Generation poet dead at 70

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Allen Ginsberg, the counterculture guru who shattered conventions as poet laureate of the Beat Generation and who influenced the next four decades of art, music and politics, died early Saturday at age 70.

Ginsberg at 55

The bearded, balding Ginsberg died in his Lower East Side apartment surrounded by eight "close friends and old lovers," said his friend and archivist, Bill Morgan. The poet was diagnosed eight days ago with terminal liver cancer, and he suffered a fatal heart attack, Morgan said.

"He made us see that poets were pop stars," said Lenny Kaye, guitarist with the Patti Smith Group and a recent Ginsberg collaborator. "He had a sense of liberation — sexual liberation, philosophical liberation."

If you are interested in working in newspaper ad design/production you can earn one hour of journalism credit during fall semester 1997. Attend class one day a week from 8:30-11:30 a.m. You pick the day but only one student will be accepted for each day so first-come, first-served. The instructor's permission is required. No prerequisites required.

If you are a graphic design major and can work at least 12 hours per week, you can earn three hours of credit in graphic design. Prerequisites must be met and instructor's permission is required.

The experience you earn in the fall could qualify you to apply for a paid, part-time position in the spring.

Come to 113 Kedzie from 8 a.m.-3 p.m for more information and syllabus.

troupe will present a 10 a.m. Tuesday performance for school children.

The McCain stop is one of many in the group's national tour ending in late April in Boston. After a stint in Japan in May, the dancers will head to South Africa from June 17 to 29.

Julie Harris, public relations and marketing assistant with Alvin Ailey, said the Ailey troupe is the second major American dance troupe to tour South Africa.

In a March 20 New York Times article, artistic director Judith Jamison said the Ailey troupe is "pleased to represent our country as the communicator of spirit through dance. My ambition has always been that the company visit the land of our ancestors. It is important to clarify through our history who we are as human beings."

The tour, which will include master classes, special performances for children and public meetings, follows Alvin Ailey's original mission for the company.

"A lot of the philosophy behind the dance company's creation was that dance should be accessible to everyone," Harris said, "especially for people who wouldn't otherwise get the opportunity to see dance."

"He was an awesome committee chair," she said. "He is so open to everyone's ideas."

Tracey Mann, arts and sciences senator, was elected for the vice chair position. Mann was an arts and sciences senator and the governmental relations committee chair last year.

Mann said increasing the communication between senators, constituents and faculty was important.

"Communication is the heart and soul of this body," he said.

Mann said Senate needs specific goals for the year that need to be re-evaluated regularly. He said he was the right person for the position because he is organized and would be able to handle the time commitments.

"I'm very anal, which is good to a point," he said.

Arts and Sciences Senator Jason Ary agreed Mann was very organized.

"He's the only guy I know who organizes his boxer shorts by color," he said.

Johnson was re-elected as Faculty Senate representative. She was the representative during the last term as well.

The Faculty Senate representative acts as a liaison between Student Senate and Faculty Senate.

Kim Peschka, arts and sciences senator, was elected as the Senate intern coordinator.

Peschka said as intern coordinator she would expose interns not only to Senate but also to all areas of the Student Governing Association. She said it was important for interns to learn parliamentary procedure and to have a mentor program so they could learn from senators.

Bret Glendening, agriculture senator, said Peschka was the most qualified person for the job.

"She knows who to talk to when she's ready to get this intern program off the ground," he said.

GAMBLING

In sharp contrast, opponents of legalized gambling have no political-action committees. Glenn Thompson, a Wichita resident who heads the anti-gambling group Stand Up for Kansas, contributed money — a total of $500 to four legislators.

"Sooner or later, we're going to reach the saturation point with gambling dollars," said conservative Sen. Nancey Harrington, R-Clearwater, a vocal opponent of expanded gambling.

Pending in the Senate is a proposal to allow the Kansas Lottery to operate its games at pari-mutuel race tracks. The tracks, through a new organization, Kansans for Agriculture, Charities and Employment, or KRACE, have been the force behind it.

KRACE has six registered lobbyists, and joining them are three lobbyists for management of the Woodlands in Kansas City, Kan., and Wichita Greyhound Park.

Harrah's has hired the state's largest contract lobbying firm, Pete McGill and Associates. McGill, a former House speaker, has repeatedly pointed to his contract, which calls only for him to monitor gambling legislation, not actively promote or oppose it.

McGill's contract notwithstanding, Harrah's has a big stake in this year's legislation. It already operates casinos along the Kansas border and plans to operate one for the Potawatomi Tribe near Topeka.

"You could look at Harrah's as potential — well, they are — competition for the Woodlands," said Senate Minority Leader Anthony Hensley, D-Topeka. "We've got gambling in Kansas, whether we like it or not. We've got licensed race tracks in Kansas that need a shot in the arm."

The Mirage once hoped to operate a casino at the Woodlands, but the proposed constitutional amendment that would have allowed the company to do so failed. It has little chance of gaining adoption this year.

Former Rep. Doug Lawrence, a one-time gambling opponent, is KRACE's lead lobbyist. He said Kansas is known as a feeder state because its citizens make more than a million visits to casinos outside the state a year, half of them from the Wichita area.

enjoys singing and praising God."

The Tuesday prayer concert, consisting of circles of small groups of students, will give students the chance to pray for classmates, professors and friends. The groups will then participate in a campus walk-around, where they can pray for students and faculty throughout campus.

At noon Wednesday in Union 208, World Christian Fellowship and International Student Friendship will be host to a prayer meeting for countries around the world followed by informational presentations about various countries.

"We hope Muslims come to know Jesus and that people around the world come to realize Jesus is the only way," Larson said. "He loves them while their gods do not."

In addition to various activities, individuals can stop by the Danforth Chapel prayer room between 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. and fill out a prayer-request card or pray for someone else's request.

A table outside Cardwell Hall is available all week for additional information or for questions about Christianity.

event like this, but Kevin Colon, adviser and assistant director of the life skills program, said the event could not have taken place without the SAAC committee.

"I think that this year the SAAC committee has grown by leaps and bounds," Colon said. "Each person took responsibility and worked hard."

The committee members went to Manhattan businesses and asked them to sponsor teams or make donations. The support from them made the event possible, Decker said.

The student athletes said they were having fun raising money with this competition.

"It's just fun and for a good cause," Monte Spiller, junior in social science and a strong safety on the football team, said. "And it's good to do it with other athletes and for the kids."

and gut-wrenching autobiography first emerged during the 1950s, spent several days in a hospice after his diagnosis. On Thursday, he suffered a stroke, fell into a coma and never regained consciousness.

He returned to his apartment a day earlier after expressing a desire to die at home.

He wrote about a dozen short poems — one titled "On Fame and Death" — and wore himself out talking to friends, Morgan said.

David Cope, a friend and fellow poet, received one of those phone calls. So did Lawrence Ferlinghetti, who was charged with obscenity after his City Lights Books published Ginsberg's "Howl and Other Poems" in 1956.

Ferlinghetti, after speaking to Ginsberg, stayed up all night writing a poem called "Allen Ginsberg Dying."

"It is high tide and the sea birds cry. The waves break over him now," Ferlinghetti said Saturday, reading the poem. "... Allen, they whisper. Allen."

PURE PURPLE POWER
STUDENT SEASON TICKETS

New!

There will be a change in the sale and distribution of student season tickets beginning in the fall of 1997. The change is caused by the possibility of the demand for student season tickets exceeding the supply. There are 9,200 tickets available to Kansas State students. In an effort to be fair and equitable, the allocation of football student season tickets will be based on class standing with a preference to those students who purchase a combination ticket.

The allocation of football student season tickets will be filled in the following sequence:

1. Returning students who choose to purchase the combination season football and reduced rate season men's basketball ticket.*
2. Returning seniors and graduate students.
3. Returning juniors.
4. Returning sophomores.
5. New students, transfer students and returning students who fail to sign up before the spring deadline.

*The combination ticket includes six home football games and 12 home basketball games that occur while school is in session.

To Order

When: During pre-enrollment, April 9–25, 1997
Where: Willard Hall
How: Complete the appropriate application*
Cost: Football season ticket only.....$60
Basketball season ticket only....$66
Combination season ticket $120

*Athletic Department will validate orders as to class standing with Registrar's office.

To Pick Up

When: August 25–September 5, 1997
Where: Ahearn Fieldhouse, east lobby

ICAT

As in the past, student season ticket holders (GA) may purchase an ICAT membership at the time of ticket pick-up. For a donation of $30, the ICAT member will receive priority seating, a commemorative T-shirt, discounts at Aggieville merchants, and invitations to special events. (ICAT limited to first 2,000 students.)

Important!

1. Returning students must order in the spring to receive their priority. Students not meeting deadlines will be placed with new student group.
2. Returning students purchasing combination tickets receive priority regardless of class standing.
3. Returning students can order now and pay later by charging their season tickets to their fall bill.
4. Deadlines—To order: April 9–23, 1997; to pick up: August 25–September 5, 1997

Kinesiology 101 not offered, still required to graduate

HANG NGUYEN
staff reporter

Students have flooded the kinesiology department office with phone calls as enrollment nears. Questions about the one-credit hour kinesiology graduation requirement being phased out are numerous.

Kinesiology 101 is not being offered for the fall and is not listed in the fall 1997 line schedule, but the class is still technically needed for graduation.

"As of today, kinesiology is still a requirement," David Dzewaltowski, head of the kinesiology department, said.

The faculty in the kinesiology department have made a proposal to drop Kinesiology 101, Principles of Physical Fitness, as a requirement. The proposal will go to the Arts and Sciences faculty meeting at 4 p.m. April 17 in Denison 113A. The meeting will be open to the public.

Final decisions will be made by the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee at a later date.

"We are planning for the proposal to pass," Dzewaltowski said. "If it doesn't pass, some action, such as late enrollment, will be taken to make sure students graduate."

The proposal passed through the Arts and Science Course and Curriculum Committee on April 2.

At this point, it is circulating to different colleges and departments on a green sheet to notify them of the possible course and curriculum change, Judith Zivanovic, associate dean of Arts and Sciences, said.

If the proposal gets the votes from Faculty Senate, a white sheet will notify the colleges and departments of the change.

Zivanovic said the change could have serious consequences.

"The disadvantage could be that a significant number of students will not take any health course at all, even though health is a major concern today," Zivanovic said.

However, students will have an opportunity for an in-depth study of kinesiology instead of the one-hour overview course, Dzewaltowski said.

A three-hour class, Kinesiology 220, Dynamics of Sport and Exercise, course will be offered in the fall. This lecture and lab course will fit into the new general-education curriculum in the fall.

"We would rather teach an in-depth course to meet the needs of those who want it as part of their University experience," Dzewaltowski said. "We'd like this course to take off, and we think it's a popular course in terms of student needs."

He said the passing of this proposal will allow some graduate teaching assistants who taught Kinesiology 101 to teach the new course, while others concentrate on helping the more than 300 kinesiology majors.

Seniors graduating in December are advised to stay updated on the status of Kinesiology 101 as it goes through the voting process.

Experiments shortened by shuttle problems

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANHATTAN — A space greenhouse created by K-State researchers was among the experiments cut short by a generator problem on the space shuttle Columbia.

Researchers with BioServe Space Technologies at K-State were planning to monitor the effects of microgravity on 10 species of plants, including wheat, tomatoes and soybeans.

The 16-day mission is being shortened to four days. The shuttle was expected to land Tuesday in Florida, which is better for the K-State experiments than another landing site would have been, an official said.

"How the results of the experiments will be affected by the shortened mission, we'll just have to wait and see," said BioServe project engineer Jerry Johnson.

"There will be a significant difference in results if the shuttle is forced to land at Edwards Air Force Base in California, rather than in Florida."

The shuttle's seven-member crew was to have two attempts to land in Florida on Tuesday. If weather prevents the landing, the crew will then try to land at Edwards.

There's not enough staff at Edwards to unload the shuttle's

A K-State project will land early with the space shuttle Columbia in Florida Tuesday after a short-lived mission.

The shuttle is carrying the United State's first space greenhouse designed by Bioserve Space Technologies at K-State.

Columbia is forced to land just four days into its initial 16-day mission with a failing power generator, while Bioserve researchers are left to ponder: what if?

"We are very disappointed," said Terry Johnson, chief scientist at Bioserve Technologies. "It was going to be a 16-day flight. (Bioserve Project Engineer) Jerry Johnson is on his way to Florida right now to bring the plants back, unfortunately."

Bioserve's Plant Generic Bioprocessing Apparatus, a self-supporting space greenhouse, was installed to monitor the effects of microgravity on 10 different species of plants, including wheat, tomatoes and soybeans.

Terry Johnson said he is uncertain how the results of the experiments will be affected by the shortened mission, but he is confident with the performance of the prototype equipment.

"We'll learn a lot from the equipment," he said. "It functioned well. It's being designed for the space station that will eventually revolve around the world for up to one year."

Terry Johnson said his biggest concern was for the Columbia members.

"You don't want to lose the crew to grow wheat," he said.

This is the first time in 13 missions a shuttle carrying Bioserve experiments is forced to land early.

Terry Johnson said problems on the shuttle occurred when one of three fuel cells unexpectedly stopped creating engine power. With only two fuel cells remaining, Terry Johnson said NASA officials were not going to take a chance with losing a second cell.

"If the second one goes out, it means limited power," he said. "No space shuttle has completed a mission with one fuel cell."

Terry Johnson said he is uncertain when the Bioserve experiment will be reinstalled on another launch.

WARM UP TO DANCE

GUILLERMO ASCA, of the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater, works out with K-State dance students Monday in Ahearn Gymnasium. The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater will perform at 8 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

The Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater will perform tonight at 8 in McCain Auditorium. Tickets are available and are $30, $26 and $22 for general admission; $15, $13 and $11 for student/children; and $28, $24 and $20 for senior citizens. Call 532-6428 for more info.

The natural rhythms of modern dance echoed Monday in the hallways of Ahearn Gymnasium.

K-State dance students, recovering from the past weekend's SpringDance program, energized themselves for a master class offered by the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater.

Guillermo "Moe" Asca, who has danced with the Ailey troupe since 1994, led the students through a series of exercises, working parts of their bodies that don't get worked often.

Asca began with head-rolling exercises, working down to the arms and chest, and finally reaching the lower torso. He said the Ailey dancers work their moves from their torso, using many lateral moves.

Each pulsing move slowly built the energy in the room, until it seemed legs and arms were cantilevering themselves into weightlessness all to the thumping drone of a thumping, rhythm-heavy jazz.

When the dancers plodded along their moves ungracefully, Asca chimed in with some help.

"Walk like you are a king, a queen — the emperor of China," he said. "You're sexy — you're trying to turn someone on."

And as if on cue, the dancers' steps became more purposeful and relaxed as they floated across the studio floor boards.

"Every exercise you do, you are performing," Asca said. "You might be asked to do that exercise on stage some day. Even when you work in class, do that extra flair."

Even when the steps got more complicated, Asca kept the dancers in line with high spirits. Yells, cheers and claps were heard as separate groups of dancers spirited across the floor in repetitive fashion.

"When you mess up, keep going because the audience doesn't know the choreography," he said. "To them, it might be your solo."

To the dancers, exercising with Asca was more joy than a solo.

Kristy Jantz, senior in dance and early-childhood education, said the opportunity allowed her to dance in a different style than that taught by professors at K-State.

"We get a chance to meet some fascinating people we'd never get to meet," Jantz said. "It's an eye-opening experience that gives us a glimpse into the real, big dance world."

Jantz has been learning modern dance since coming to K-State, having practiced classical dance before.

"I'd say it is my favorite dance because it's so free," Jantz said. "There are so many different styles — you can learn one or create your own."

Vera Orlock, assistant professor of dance, danced along in the exercises with her students.

"With this particular guest artist, you can tell he's a nice, generous person," Orlock said. "What he brings is his love for dance, his incredibly well-trained body and his musical professionalism. This class was simple enough that anyone could follow."

Orlock said the Asca made the exercises accessible to the class, as opposed to showing off fancy moves.

"He kept us going — he was very skillful."

At the close of the one hour and 20 minute class, Asca told the students to cherish every day of dance.

"You never know that tomorrow might be the last day you dance," he said.

Tonight, at least for Asca, is a performance at 8 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

JV squad places 4th in national tourney

CORY MORGAN
staff reporter

Hard work really does pay off.

Just ask the junior varsity cheerleading squad.

Last week, the squad traveled to Anaheim, Calif., to compete in a national tournament for the first time.

The Wildcat squad, which consists of eight men and seven women, finished near the top of the pack, ending up in fourth place in their division.

Scott Hopper, sophomore in psychology, said that nationals was a great experience for him.

"I've never done anything like this before, Hopper said. "It was awe inspiring. I learned a lot and plan to stay on the team in the future. Our team has become a tight family since the beginning of the season and this was just a great experience."

Jeremy Holder, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, said that he liked how the team performed, and their hard work and commitment helped.

"I was extremely satisfied with our performance," Holder said. "We did really well. All of the hard work that we put into our routine has finally paid off."

Maggie Irvin, sophomore in business and captain of the junior varsity squad, agreed with Holder.

Irvin said, "We all felt like we did really well. We went out and performed to the best of our abilities, and we were very excited when we learned the results."

The team had practiced for two months prior to the event for three hours a night.

Meeting to decide fate of Laramie postponed due to attendance overflow

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN

When the City Commission meeting began at 7 p.m. Monday, members unloosened their ties and glared wide-eyed at the turnout.

Committee member Ray Weisenburger motioned the third topic on the agenda — Laramie Street closing — be tabled until a larger city structure is available to house such a large group of people. The motion passed.

With an overflowing crowd of Manhattan citizens filling the City Commission room and lining the stairwell and hallway of City Hall, Manhattan city planning committee voted to table the topic that an anxious city came to discuss: Will Laramie Street close down permanently?

More than 200 people were in attendance of the meeting.

"We are not even close to meeting the public safety code, and the spirit of participation in Manhattan, Kansas, is being ignored," Weisenburger said.

The committee moved to reconvene in the firestation on April 21, unless the building becomes available before that time.

"We were anxious to address the issue," said Cheryl Sieben, who has served eight years as executive director of Aggieville Business Association, "but I guess we'll have to wait an additional two weeks."

The question of the road closing, lingering in the mind of Manhattan residents, Aggieville merchants and Manhattan Christian College faculty and students, still is the city-wide topic of discussion almost a year after it was first proposed.

The city blockaded Laramie Street between 14th and 16th streets for Manhattan Christian College in mid-April last year to measure traffic and parking as MCC organized plans to expand their campus into the surrounding area.

Minutes before the planning committee meeting was set to begin, MCC students outlined the City Commission room, shoulder to shoulder, while citizens and Aggieville merchants filled the seats.

• ARTS AND SCIENCES DEAN TO MOVE TO WEST VIRGINIA.

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — A K-State associate dean was named dean of the Eberly College of Arts and Sciences, the largest at West Virginia University, officials said Monday.

M. Duane Nellis, who has been associate dean of arts and sciences at K-State, will take over the post at WVU on July 1, said Gerald Lang, provost and vice president for academic affairs.

Rudy Almasy, who has served as interim dean since November 1995 when Lang was appointed provost, will return to his post as associate dean.

As dean of the Eberly College, Nellis will lead a college that includes 15 departments encompassing literature and the humanities, mathematics and sciences, and behavioral and social studies.

The college is responsible for 60 percent of the university's undergraduate instruction, officials said.

Nellis has been a geography faculty member since 1980 and served as chairman of the department before he was appointed associate dean of K-State in January 1994, officials said.

He earned his undergraduate degree from Montana State University and his master's degree and doctorate from Oregon State University.

• SPRING BLIZZARD PARALYZES PLAINS, ADDS TO FLOOD WOES.

BISMARCK, N.D. — Sandbaggers in three flood-ravaged northern Plains states battled subzero wind chills Monday to fortify levees against still-rising rivers as other crews cleared deep snow from a spring blizzard.

Thousands remained without power because huge snowdrifts hampered utility workers trying to fix power poles that snapped under ice and wind.

Volunteer snowmobilers raced around Bismarck on Sunday, delivering medicine and ferrying nurses to and from the hospital.

Plows Monday were still clearing the 17 inches of snow that gave the city a record 101.4 inches since fall.

About 2 feet of snow piled up from South Dakota's Black Hills into southwestern North Dakota, and nearly 1-1/2 feet into northwestern Minnesota.

The region had already been hit with twice as much snow as normal this winter. Temperatures in the 60s last week quickly melted what was left, and rain that began Friday then turned to snow.

President Clinton signed a statewide disaster declaration Monday for South Dakota's blizzard problems and flooding. There was no immediate word on declarations for other states in the region.

• CLINTON, NETANYAHU MEET IN HOPES OF RESCUING PEACE.

WASHINGTON — President Clinton is meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, and U.S. officials are consulting with Palestinian leaders in hopes of rescuing a crumbling peace in the Middle East.

The delicate diplomatic task facing them could prove difficult: Israelis and Palestinians are maintaining hardline stances over a Jewish housing development in east Jerusalem that stalled the peace process last month.

Even as Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat insisted building must stop to lure him back to the negotiating table, Israelis speeded up construction Sunday at the Har Homa project, working around the clock.

U.S. officials, suggesting it might take an intense and private Camp David-like negotiating session to force both sides to resolve their differences, urged face-to-face talks in hopes of renewing trust.

• FORMER DRILL SERGEANT ADMITS SEXUAL MISCONDUCT.

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. — A former Army drill sergeant pleaded guilty Monday morning to 11 counts of having sex with trainees but innocent to 21 counts of rape.

The pleas, covering just some of the charges against Staff Sgt. Delmar Simpson, came after the government dropped 35 other counts, including four rape charges, against Simpson on Friday.

That left 94 counts for Simpson's attorneys to address before his scheduled trial before a military judge later this week.

Board chooses Student Pub editors, managers

MATT SPRUGIN
staff writer

The Board of Student Publications Inc. has announced their selections for advertising manager and editor of the fall Collegian and the 1998 Royal Purple.

Patrick Carney, chairman of the Board of Student Publications, said the positions are advertised and the applications are taken until a certain date.

The applicants are interviewed by the board.

"They come in and tell their highlights, why they are best for the job," Carney said.

The board members are allowed to ask the applicants questions.

"What we want is a clear understanding of their leadership styles," Carney said.

Carney said each candidate must receive a majority vote from the board members who are present in the room at the time.

The board selected Claudette Riley, senior in English, to be the editor for the summer 1997 Collegian. Scott Ladd, senior in print journalism, was selected as the editor for the fall semester.

Professor cites advantages for farmers growing straw to make particleboard

SARA EDWARDS
staff reporter

It's in the computer desk you use, under the floors you walk on and in the doors you open every day.

Particleboard provides a cheaper alternative to wood for builders, furniture makers and consumers.

Particleboard is usually made out of wood, but plants that produce particleboard out of straw have been opening in the Midwest.

Orlen Grunewald, professor of agricultural economics, said making particleboard out of straw gives farmers a value-added product. Before, there wasn't much use for straw, except letting it lay in the field or using it for bedding.

Grunewald said although it is good for the soil to leave straw in the field to provide nutrients, farmers could probably sell the straw to be used in straw particleboard every two or three years.

"It looks very promising as a product," Grunewald said.

He said the economic opportunity for straw particleboard is here because there are less wood waste products because technology is improving. Computer-guided saws make less wood shavings.

Most particleboard plants are located near areas where there is a lot of wood available. By using straw to make particleboard, more plants can be located in the Midwest. In Kansas, there is one plant operating in Minneapolis and one being built in Hutchinson.

"If we can do it based upon this product, we can have a tremendous transportation advantage for local users," Grunewald said.

He said straw particleboard has an advantage over regular particleboard because it contains no formaldehyde. He said after a while, formaldehyde can leak out of regular particleboard so it has to meet government standards. This is not a problem with straw particleboard.

"That is a real plus for it," Grunewald said.

He said another advantage of straw particleboard is that it is very resistant to moisture.

Straw has wax on the exterior, and it is easier to press down than wood shavings.

"It's going to stand up to moisture better than regular particleboard," he said.

Straw particleboard is made by combining small pieces of straw with resin and then pressing it with heat.

Particleboard can be molded, sanded, sealed, painted or have a wood veneer applied to its surface. It is used in furniture with a veneer, a thin strip of wood applied to it.

It is also used as flooring. It is applied on top of plywood, but under tile or linoleum. Many doors also are made with some particleboard.

"Its uses are growing phenomenally," Grunewald said.

Team designs, researches strategy for marketing straw particleboard

SARA EDWARDS
staff reporter

Because of an idea they got for a contest, a group of K-State students have worked to become experts on straw particleboard.

Members of the K-State Agri-Marketing Team sent out a press release looking for an idea they could use at the National Agri-Marketing Association convention April 15-17 in Nashville, Tenn.

The teams compete in a tournament at the convention by presenting their marketing strategies. The teams take an idea and prepare a presentation and written summary for the competition.

The team chose to do a plan for the 21st Century Alliance, a Kansas co-op of farmers looking for value-added opportunities, Orlen Grunewald, NAMA adviser, said.

The team has worked since last semester researching and preparing a strategy to market straw particleboard for the 21st Century Alliance.

"It's a real-life situation. They have brought the idea to us. We're using the plan for the competition," Jill King, junior in agribusiness and team member, said.

This plan is mainly to take to competition, but there is a possibility that the 21st Century Alliance would use it in real life, Chris Stockebrand, NAMA president, said.

"It's a possibility that they would take this plan or possibly purchase it from us, but right now we are focused on the competition," he said.

Scott Lynn, NAMA third vice president, has been in charge of the competition.

He said the team practices twice in the morning and twice in the afternoon.

The team members have already submitted their written summary, and they are working on their 20-minute presentation, which involves six speakers and a timed slide show presentation with computers.

Stockebrand said he expects the team to do well this year. This is the third year he has participated.

"It's by far the best I've seen K-State take," Stockebrand said.

Wavering requirements complicate schedules

That last semester is quickly approaching and, as a senior, the only thought getting you through the day is the notion that you will soon be graduating.

Now, the only thing you have to do is plan out your final semester. Barring any mishaps, you should get enrolled in all of your required classes – including Kinesiology 101.

However you, and other seniors who haven't taken this class, might be out of luck. The kinesiology department is not offering this basic physical education class.

The College of Arts and Sciences are presenting a proposal to Faculty Senate to remove Kinesiology 101 as a requirement. They're being very optimistic, too.

Kinesiology 101 is not being offered in the fall line schedule. The kinesiology department is not even reserving graduate teaching assistants to instruct the classes if they do have to offer them.

This puts all students who haven't taken this class in a frustrating position – especially you seniors.

If Senate doesn't pass the kinesiology department's proposal, you will have to scramble to revamp your schedules to include a class that is not even being offered when you enroll.

We should all urge Senate to approve this proposal. Although there's nothing wrong with taking a class like this, it's a little difficult to plan for it when Senate hands down its decision a week after most seniors enroll.

The word right now is that students should keep checking to see if Kinesiology 101 will or will not be required. Let's convince Senate not to make enrollment any more difficult than it already is.

• STUDENT GROUP BACKS ITS OPINION WITH ACTION

Editor,

This letter is in response to Brandi Hertig's column in Monday's Collegian, "All Bark and No Bite."

As the president of KSU Students for the Right to Life, the group that did the chalking that she referred to, I want to refute some points in her argument.

First, Hertig says, "I seriously doubt someone looked down at the sidewalk, saw 'Abortion: One dead, one wounded' and said, 'Gee, I think I'll change my view on that because the sidewalk said so.'"

That is not the purpose of our chalking. Our purpose is to have people read it and think about it. Why did the political candidates chalk? For the same reason that we do, to make people think about what they read and possibly look into it.

By seeing the chalkings, people think about what is written there, even if only for an instant. Obviously Hertig saw it or she wouldn't have written the column. And it might be true that no one is instantly converted, but if there are those who think about it, then our goal is achieved.

We are trying to educate our campus about the destruction of human lives through abortion. If someone is adamantly against our message, then it should not be hard for them to ignore it.

The second point that Hertig makes is that, "An opinion is nothing but an opinion unless there is some sort of real action involved." I couldn't agree more.

However, Hertig did not contact the two groups to which she referred to in the article to see if they were active. KSU Students for the Right to Life is very active in the community and on campus. Much of our actions are not publicly seen, but they are there nonetheless.

Every year, KSUSRL adopts a family at Thanksgiving and Christmas and gathers food to donate to them. Several of our members volunteer at crisis pregnancy centers in Manhattan.

Every January, we attend the March for Life in Washington, D.C. We write to our legislators and urge them to uphold pro-life, pro-family values. We also have speakers and projects on campus to educate others.

KSUSRL is devoted to protecting unborn children, and I know that we are very active in doing that. I think that Hertig needs to do a little research for her columns before subjecting the readers to her "blatant opinion."

HOPES FOR IMPROVEMENTS TO FARRELL:

Against the odds?

VIEWPOINT

JONATHAN WINKLER

JONATHAN WINKLER is a senior in mathematics, physics and English. You can e-mail your comments to Jonathan at (winkler @phys.ksu.edu).

Have you had to find a book in the library recently? If not, consider yourself lucky.

As part of the finishing touches on its massive enlargement, which includes not only more square footage but also a completely renovated computer system, Farrell Library is busily intershelving books and bound periodicals.

Thus, in perfect obedience to Murphy's Law, a book will sprout legs and walk itself down to another shelf on another floor the instant you pinpoint its call number using the computer system. If it was on the first floor, it will migrate to the fourth. If it was on the fourth floor, it will migrate to the first. If you are the sort who hunts down books not by specific titles or authors but by call number ranges, the range of interest to you will be split across floors — typically ones as far apart from each other as possible.

The sheer obstreperousness of the library and its collections does not end there. At this phase in its construction, the building has only one serviceable entrance, which always moves to the least convenient side.

If you desperately need to find the location of a book, every catalog computer on the third floor will either be in use or out of service. A bound periodical or book you desperately want will invariably be in off-campus storage, typically at the KSU Foundation building on Anderson Avenue (which is practically a whole planet away) or branch facilities on Mars or Jupiter's moons.

An unbound periodical you want to read will invariably be at one of the library's departmental satellites, usually one far removed from Farrell itself and covering a discipline only thinly related to the periodical's field.

New issues of Discover are always in the veterinary medicine library in Trotter Hall. No matter how good your memory is or how fully you rehearse a particular call number before going to hunt the corresponding book, you will always forget what you're looking for after you reach the place in the library where it's supposed to be.

Invariably, this is as far away from the catalog computers as possible. If you have the call number and other particulars printed out on a sheet of paper against just this eventuality, the paper will turn out to be blank. If you're in a hurry, the Windows 95 program, which puts a nice face on the computerized search engine, will sense your anxiety and refuse to start. (Please do us all a favor and don't look for books when you're desperate; that just puts more terminals out of service.)

Before construction began, the library offered a number of amenities that are now absent. These included text-based catalog terminals that never had to be booted up or started in search mode, a process that seems to take forever with the library's new machinery.

While the majority of these units were concentrated on the first floor, there were always a few on each higher floor so you could recheck call numbers you'd forgotten. During lightly trafficked times, one of the two elevators right off the circulation area, next to the computers, was programmed to return to the first floor.

This was so you could catch an elevator right after looking up a call number, thus keeping it fresh enough in your memory that you might not even have had to write it down.

Right now, the library is in that phase of its construction where it is only a short, maddening distance from being totally finished. There is yet hope that catalog computers will be put in convenient locations on each floor and books will quit sprouting legs and walking away from patrons who wish to read them.

Some improvements are already apparent. Periodicals are now accessible through various CD-ROM databases that can be accessed from the same computers as the card catalog, and easy access to printouts eliminates the tedious business of writing down call numbers on tiny slips of paper using too-short pencils.

If you have a complaint about how the library operates after it's finished, get on the wire and tell its bosses what you think. It will require high-level interest and a lot of money to do something about subscription cancellations, and it's probably too late to resolve the incorrigibly absurd collegiate-gothic architecture of the improved building, but every little improvement in function helps.

Murphy's Law says that your efforts will inevitably be in vain. But the law is based on averages, and it's always possible to outperform them.

There is yet hope that catalog computers will be put in convenient locations on each floor and books will quit sprouting large legs and walking away from patrons who wish to read them.

THE WORLD NEEDS DRASTIC MEASURES TO SOLVE ITS

Overpopulation problem

VIEWPOINT

JESS LOUK

JESS LOUK is a junior in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Jess at (Jess31@ksu.edu).

Let's get straight to the point. I demand the human race stop reproducing.

Yes, that means you, your parents, your brother and all your friends. I don't care if you have the economic means to support 20 kids. There are just too many humans littering this planet — period.

OK, maybe I don't want to see an end to human existence as we know it, but it is time to significantly trim the herd.

We haven't had a good war or disease that has exterminated a healthy chunk of the population in a long while. If nature is lax in its systematic destruction of us, it is imperative we do it ourselves.

At its current rate, AIDS might prove to be nature's next bubonic plague, but we will have to wait a few years to find out. Everybody keep your fingers crossed.

As this massive world population continues to destroy the Earth, nature and humankind itself are going to begin to whittle away the innumerable amounts of people. Signs of this are beginning to sprout the world over.

The blood-coated ethnic conflicts that have recently encountered an outside discontinuance in Bosnia were rooted in a lack of living space.

The ongoing ethnic conflict (as it was dubbed in the media) was about land, not religion. No, the warring factions have never cared for one another's religious preferences, but I would wager they could get along with some breathing room.

Because we can't increase the Earth's physical space, let's decrease the population. The irony here is that was what the Croats, Serbs and Muslims were in the process of doing before NATO got involved.

In order to reduce the population in Bosnia they should sterilize anyone who enters a medical facility. I don't care how it's done as long as reproduction slows down enough to allow for some healthy living room.

Shifting focus to the ticking A-bomb we affectionately call the Middle East we find a similar dilemma.

The Palestinians and the Israelis have always held about as much affection for one another as Lucifer and Gabriel.

Hatred aside, the root of the problem stems from excessive water shortages in the Jordan River basin and Israel's insistence for more space.

One to two generations from now these two conflicts would fizzle out if they would limit their reproduction to one child, but the one-child policy has some flaws.

According to a report issued by the U.S. State Department in 1996, Chinese couples have deemed it necessary to terminate a large number of female babies either after birth or while the baby is still a fetus. They kill these babies because they only get one child. A boy is of higher preference to these couples.

Maybe they should stick to being human instead of killing their young like hamsters.

Here in the United States, the population is beginning to inflate toward uncomfortable levels.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, the population of the United States in 1992 was 255 million people. By 2050, the population is projected to reach 383 million people. This statistic is only valid if the massive waves of immigration cease.

Because the U.S. is an industrialized society, it needs to assume the lead in population control.

The problem can easily be solved if we all just minimize the dilemma to a personal level.

We could start by socially condemning families like the Brady Bunch. We could all gather around the town square and stone them like they did in the short story "The Lottery."

We have all known families that have just way too many kids. One child per family. That's it.

If we don't do it, natural selection will keep coming up with all kinds of viruses and diseases to exterminate us like cockroaches.

Once we have properly eliminated the larger families, we can focus on keeping one child per person in this country. If each couple is allotted two children, one for mom and one for dad, the population will not increase, and we can all still have a sibling.

If you think we should have no concern for the future in terms of an overabundant population, then your offspring should be the ones who have to live next to the landfills when there is not enough room for all of us.

Right now, Earth has the means to support every human walking around on it.

At our levels of reproduction, this will not always be the case. Let's do ourselves a favor and decrease the amount of babies.

Researchers believe they've isolated possible orgasm-producing chemical

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — Two researchers believe they have isolated a chemical that produces orgasms in women even if they have suffered spinal cord injuries.

The finding could lead one day to a pill that would give the same sensation as an orgasm and also might have use in treating pain, Barry R. Komisaruk, a professor at Rutgers University, said.

His partner in the research was Rutgers professor Beverly Whipple, who in 1982 wrote the book "The G-Spot and Other Recent Discoveries About Human Sexualities."

Through experiments with lab rats, the researchers determined that the brain can receive signals of sexual response through a pathway other than the spinal cord.

Komisaruk found an alternate pathway through the vagus nerve, which goes directly from the cervix, through the abdomen and chest cavity, into the neck and to the brain stem.

The professors then studied 16 women paralyzed by spinal cord injuries and found that three of them were able to have orgasms through sexual stimulation.

"Contrary to what people may think, we discovered that women in the study who were paralyzed and had no feeling below the breast area were, in fact, capable of having orgasm," Komisaruk said.

Those experiments helped lead to the isolation of the vasoactive intestinal peptide, which he believes is the neurotransmitter, or nervous system chemical messenger, in the body that causes the orgasm sensation in the brain.

That same chemical might also have strong pain-suppressing qualities rivaling morphine that one day may make it a natural source of pain relief, Komisaruk said.

While investigation into the cause of sexual dysfunction is not new, research into developing a specific orgasm pill is different, said Kath Pennavaria of the Kinsey Institute, a sex research center in Bloomington, Ind.

Report details former cult member's explanation of castration, $5 bills

NEW YORK — The 39 members of the Heaven's Gate cult who committed suicide with a cocktail of drugs and alcohol acted on their own, according to a former member who discovered their bodies.

Yet Rio DiAngelo told Newsweek he felt none of the cultists wanted to be left behind should leader Marshall Applewhite die. Cult members believed a spaceship would take them to heaven.

DiAngelo, who said he left 39 of his closest brothers and sisters about a month before they killed themselves, explained some of the cult's mysteries in the magazine's April 14 issue.

States spending million to fix '00' computer date glitch

TOPEKA — It is not coming cheap, but Kansas government appears on track to fix the infamous "00" computer glitch.

It is the year 2000 problem, which is a byproduct of automation and the computer industry's efforts to be as efficient as possible.

Older computers were programmed to recognize only the last two digits of the years leading up to the end of the 20th century. They were not programmed to recognize 00 as the year 2000, but as 1900.

As an example of the problem, drivers' licenses that expire in 2000 will not be flagged for renewal unless the computers are fixed.

Governments and private industry are being forced to replace their systems or make repairs during routine maintenance to install new or fix old computers so they will recognize 00 as 2000.

While some think the state was slow to begin addressing the problem, Sen.

KANSAS CITY ROYALS HOME OPENER

Royals win home opener in 9th inning over Orioles

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — It will take more than boos and a badly sprained ankle to keep Roberto Alomar off the field.

The Baltimore Orioles lost in his first game back from a five-game spitting suspension, dropping a 6-5 decision Monday in Kansas City's home opener, but Alomar was just happy to be playing again.

"It was nice to be out there," said Alomar after getting two hits, scoring a run and making a fine defensive play. "It was good to be with the guys. I'm glad I'm coming back to play the game that I love. It was a lot of fun. It was a big step for me."

Alomar, whose spit in the face of umpire John Hirschbeck last year has been seen by millions, was booed at every plate appearance and in pregame introductions. The sellout crowd of 40,052 cheered politely for the all-Star second baseman for his nice play on a bad-hop grounder in the second inning.

"The fans, they're entitled to their opinion," he said. "I'll just leave it at that. I just want to go out there and play my game. That's all I can say about it."

Alomar said he was not sure when the boos will stop.

"I don't know. I wish I knew. I don't know," Alomar said. "The game of baseball is like my life. It was just good to be out there. I was real happy to be out there with the guys today."

The fans had cause to cheer when Jay Bell and Jeff King, the two new Royals brought in from Pittsburgh to juice up the Kansas City offense, combined to produce the winning run.

It was King's sacrifice fly with one out in the ninth that brought in the winning run after Bell had executed a perfect hit-and-run to move Bip Roberts to third after Roberts walked.

"I've been concerned all spring," said King, who also hit his first home run. "I haven't felt comfortable with my stance and this and that. I felt like I had a little better idea today. Maybe today is something I can build on."

Alomar went 2-for-3 and, still hobbled by a badly sprained ankle, left for a pinch-runner in the eighth inning.

Alomar's replacement, Jeff Reboulet, singled home the tying run with two outs in the top of the ninth, but King won it in the bottom half.

The score was tied at 5 when Bip Roberts drew a leadoff walk from Armando Benitez (0-1) in the ninth. After Goodwin popped out trying to bunt, Roberts took third on a hit-and-run single by Bell.

King drove in a run early with a double and his eighth-inning homer was the 100th of his career.

Jamie Walker (1-1) got one out for the win.

Play was halted several times in the late innings when souvenir giveaway baseballs were thrown on the field. The Royals gave out balls to the first 40,000 fans.

King's RBI tied it at 4. David Howard hit an RBI single with two outs to give the Royals the lead.

Brian Bevil, trying for his first major league save, retired the first two Orioles in the ninth. But Mike Bordick doubled and took third on right fielder Jermaine Dye's fielding error and, after an intentional walk to Brady Anderson, Reboulet had an infield hit that made it 5-all.

Happy throng of fans greet Royals in opener

ASSOCIATED PRESS

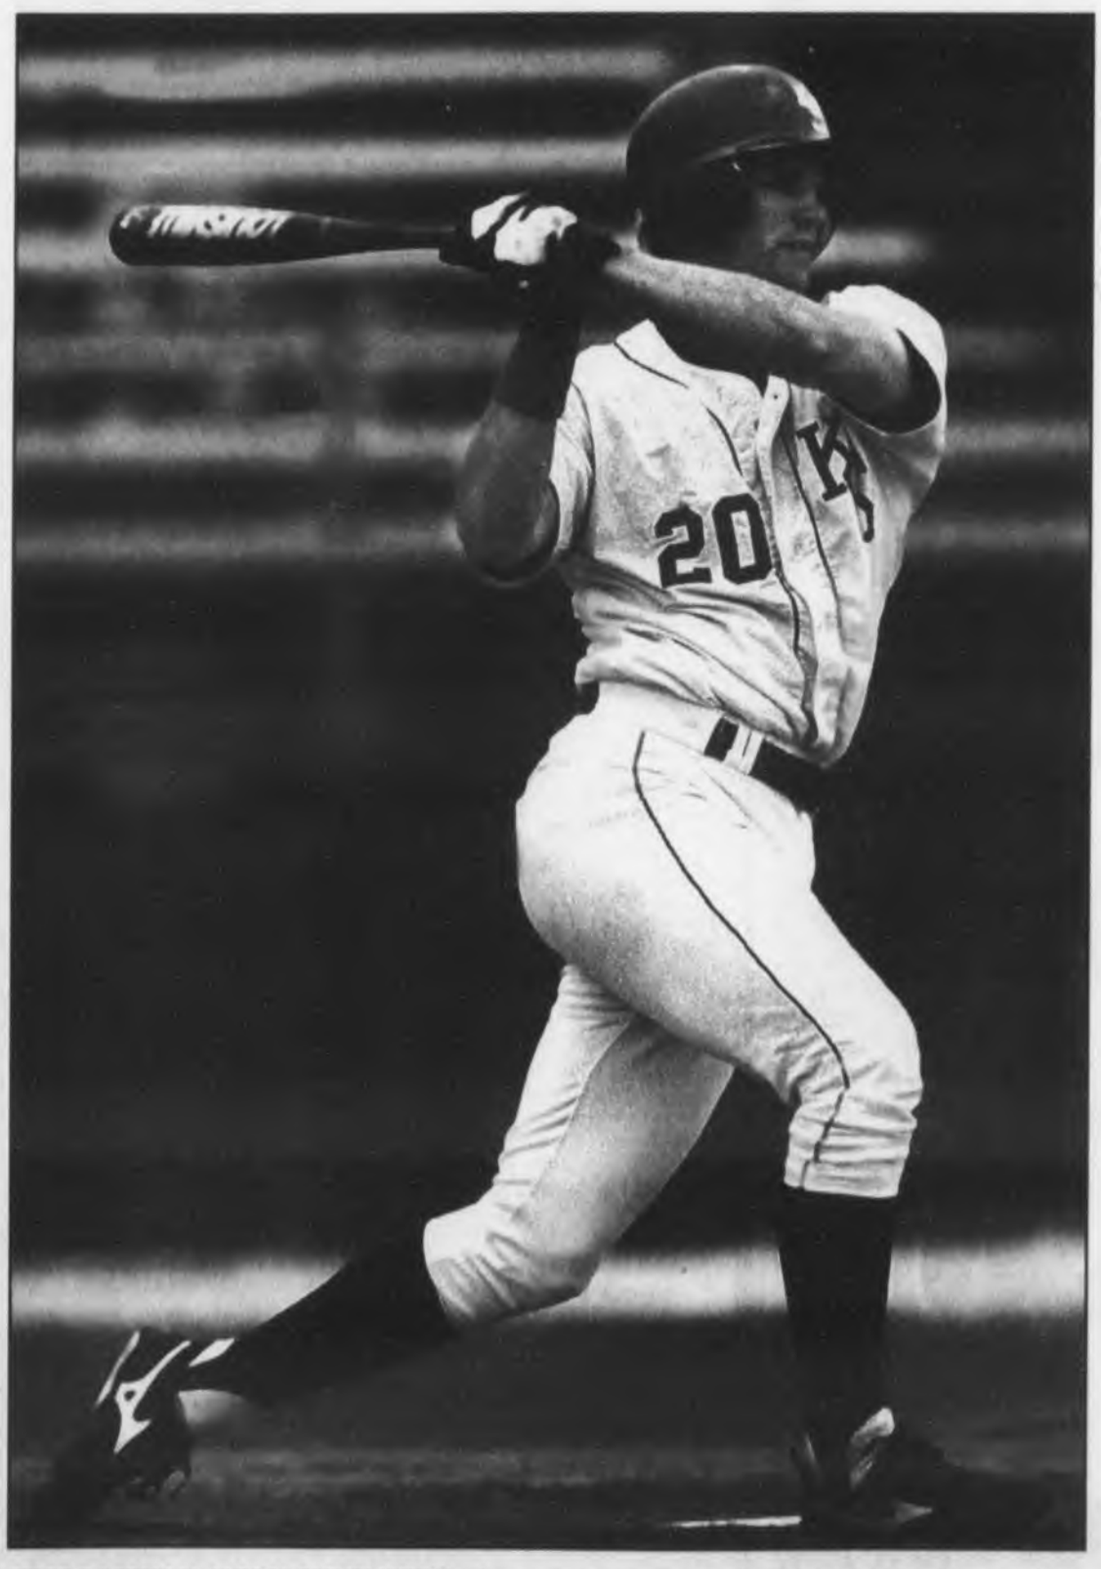
KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Twenty-five years after he helped build Kauffman Stadium, Kansas City native Frank White stood on the infield with George Brett and Nancy Howser and watched as a sellout crowd gave him a standing ovation.

White's No. 20, Brett's No. 5 and the No. 10 the late Dick Howser wore as manager in the 1985 World Series were all retired Monday in pregame festivities marking the Royals' home opener against Baltimore.

"That was awesome," said White, perhaps the greatest defensive second basemen of his era. "Seeing all the fans and so many old friends really brought back memories of the old days."

The numbers, cast in sold bronze four feet high, are now displayed just beneath the electronic scoreboard in center field.

Brett, who retired with a .305 lifetime average and three AL batting titles, was also honored earlier Monday when a bridge spanning Interstate 70 near the stadium was renamed for him.



Nancy Howser represented her late husband, who died of brain cancer in 1987 and remains the only manager who ever guided the Royals to a World Series championship.

As each one got out of a stretch limousine and walked on a red carpet to the pitchers mound, the crowd cheered as video highlights flashed on the jumbotron — a mop-haired Brett spraying

Swinging into things

STORY BY BRIAN SMOLLER • PHOTO BY CRAIG HACKER

FIRST BASEMAN JASON BICHELMEYER takes a swing against Creighton April 1 at Frank Myers Field. Bichelmeyer went 2 for 5 and had two RBI's in K-States 9-5 win over the Blue Jays.

Heading into tonight's game against the KU Jayhawks, the K-State baseball team is looking for some answers.

The queries surround the Wildcats play as the Cats are 22-11 overall, but are only 5-10 in the Big 12 Conference.

Last season the Cats finished with a 28-26 record overall, 11-16 in the conference.

This season's 22 wins put them well ahead of last year's pace, yet they are unable to beat seemingly inferior opponents.

The latest in a series of disappointments came last weekend as the Cats dropped a three-game series to the Nebraska Cornhuskers, 7-8, 18-7 and 5-12.

K-State beat the Huskers in a two-game series on March 11, 19-9 and 10-3.

So, what's up with the Cats?

"We're just not throwing strikes," said head coach Mike Clark. "I thought we played extremely well on Friday, but we went to our bullpen and a couple of guys let us down. The seventh and eight innings is where we've been hurt, and it's not hits."

Clark made sure to make it clear the Cats' effort hadn't dropped.

"You look at guys like Josh Marn, Heath Schesser, Todd Fereday," he said, "I defy you to find any one of those guys not busting their rear-end."

Clark pointed to the Cats' offense averaging eight runs a game and recording only five wins in Big 12 play as the source of K-State's problems.

"We just need to put quality wins together on the weekend," he said.

Although losing two of three to the Huskers, the K-State hitters could walk away with something positive for the rest of the season.

"Play every inning," outfielder Scott Poepard said. "We're really going to focus in and get it turned around."

Second baseman Fereday echoed Poepard's sentiments.

"We learned what not to do," he said. "We just didn't play as well as we could have."

Tonight's contest against Kansas will serve as a test for the Wildcats. K-State gets a chance to rectify its recent woes against its in-state rival.

"I only know two things about them," Clark said. "They throw strikes and play great defense. They don't have a standout pitcher, looking at their stats. They have multiple pitchers who threw three or four innings per contest."

Although the game is against a conference opponent, it is scheduled as a non-conference contest.

The last time K-State faced a Big 12 opponent outside of conference play was the two-game series against Nebraska in Manhattan.

With 21 games left on the schedule before the Big 12 Tournament, Clark needs 10 wins to reach the 300-win plateau at K-State. He is already the winningest coach in K-State history.

"Oh, I didn't even know. That's not a concern," Clark said. "I'm more interested in winning.

"I don't put a value on personal achievements. I just care what happens to my players on and off the field."

The first pitch for tonight's game against the Jayhawks is slated for 7 p.m. Brandon Peck gets his first start of the season for the Cats.

The game will be aired on KSDB-FM 91.9.

Women's tennis team struggles in 2 matches in Oklahoma

The K-State women's tennis team's losing streak stretched to six, when the Cats fell to Oklahoma and Oklahoma State during the weekend.

The first loss of the weekend was on the courts of Norman to the Sooners.

The Cats picked up just one win in the singles portion of the dual against the Sooners, at the No. 3 singles spot. There, Karen Nicholson improved her record to 8-6 with a 6-7, 6-4, 6-1 win over Stephanie Sajbet.

At No. 1 singles, Yana Dorodnova fell in the first set to Kate Dunlevy 6-1. But in the second set, Dorodnova served up five quick games to take a 5-0 lead.

"After the first set, I spoke to her about what needed to be done, and she knew what was wrong," Cat coach Steve Bietau said. "She got back on track in the second set right away."

Dunlevy made a run at Dorodnova in that second set, evening the set at 5-5. Dorodnova went on to win the set in a tie-breaker but lost the third 6-4.

"She was very up and down in that match," Bietau said. "She never did sustain a very good level of play throughout the match."

The Cats were able to pick up two wins in the doubles portion of the match, at the No. 1 and No. 3 doubles spots.

Dorodnova and Lena Piliptchak grabbed an 8-2 victory at the No. 1 spot over Dunlevy and Angela Stroup.

"They really played better than they had recently," he said. "They were executing better on points. It was the first time I had seen that level of play since Yana's injury."

Nikki Lagerstrom and Dinah Watson picked up the other win at the No. 3 spot, with a 8-5 win over Jennie Hamilton and Barbie Bayless. It was the first win for the Cat duo this season.

The Cats traveled to Stillwater on Sunday and fell to the Cowboys 5-4.

In the singles competition, the Cats fell in the top three spots but picked up wins in the bottom three spots.

"Going into the match, I felt OSU had two very good players at one and two and a very good player at three," Bietau said. "I knew we would have to play extremely well at those spots to have a chance of winning."

Watson, Chris Schulte and Lagerstrom all won in straight sets over their opponents.

In the doubles portion, the Cats were able to pick up one win, at the No. 3 spot. There, Lagerstrom and Watson picked up their second straight win with an 8-1 victory.

After Dorodnova and Piliptchak lost at No. 1, the crucial match was at the No. 2 spot, where Schulte and Nicholson fell 8-5.

"I felt like the No. 2 doubles match and the three and four singles matches were crucial before the match," Bietau said. "We split the singles matches and didn't get the doubles win. In that doubles match, we were just four games away from winning an individual match and the team match."

After jumping out to a 7-2 record to start the season, the Cats have now fallen to 7-8 and 2-4 in conference play.

The next action for the Cats will be this Wednesday when they travel to Lawrence to face Kansas.

Car shopping leads to various parting shots from the sporting world

I have spent the past two weeks at car dealerships, trying to get rid of the Tempo and get a new champaign car at a beer price. I thought I would share with you the thoughts that crossed my mind Sunday while waiting in agony in the office of a car salesman:

• How pathetic has this off season been in the NFL? This was supposed to be a year that had some big names move to places to have immediate effects. The only one we have really had is Jeff George going to Oakland where he will immediately make that team better. Speaking of Oakland, what kind of sense does it make to spend that much on Desmond Howard?

Note to Al Davis: Howard has not been able to be a contributing starter receiver with three previous teams.

Get a clue, he is not an NFL receiver. Yes, he has made big plays on special teams. But do you really need to pay him that much considering you already have a tremendous returner in Tim Brown?

And this was supposed to be the year that the Chiefs were to make big waves in the free agency pool. They really failed in not signing George, the best quarterback to be a free agent in a while. Yes, they did sign another 49er quarterback, but he is not going to do much for the Chiefs in the near future.

Steve Bono looked better when he was with the 49ers than Elvis Grbac did when he was there. And he is not going to do much with the supporting cast around him.

The Chiefs have said they were going to grab a free-agent receiver. Has anything happened? Is anything going to happen? Probably not. Brett Perriman, Qadry Ismail, Randal Hill and Andre Hastings are all available.

They are in need of a deep threat. The best answer would probably be Hill, who is the fastest of the group.

• This year's draft will be one of the dullest drafts in history. Because Peyton Manning is not coming out early, there is really no clear-cut choice for the No. 1 pick.

There are a bunch of players who are grouped in the same level of play. This will create no draft-day trades for the top picks, because no one really wants to have to make a huge payment before the No. 1 pick when he might not be worth it.

• What is up with these car salesmen? I tell them the price I have to have but they continue to come back with one I can't afford.

• Is there any way we could just fast forward through the baseball season to the playoffs. We know the Braves and Yankees are probably going to be there again. Plus, it would save a lot of misery for the Royals and the Cubs.

• How many strokes will Greg Norman choke away at this year's Masters? He is one of my favorite players, but what happened last year was truly amazing.

• Tiger Woods will not win the Masters. He might be up there for a couple of rounds, but he's still too young to wear the green jacket.

• Note: Ford Tempos do not have good trade-in value. Don't buy one. Save yourself the agony and pain.

• Saturday night, I got into watching the bull-riding championships on Fox. Doing the sideline reporting was NFL analyst Terry Bradshaw. I would like to have seen Bradshaw in a cowboy hat, though. That glare off his head was too much.

Sewing clothes an alternative to spending cash

PORTIA SISCO
arts and entertainment editor

When movie stars go to the Academy Awards, what they wear makes the front page of entertainment magazines everywhere.

Actors court clothes designers to get them to create cutting-edge fashion styles.

Most students get their clothes off the racks at department stores. Why not try making a dress for a special occasion, or maybe a new blouse or shirt instead of buying it?

McCall and Butterick pattern companies have special lines of patterns that are simpler for beginning sewers.

"We have a few students that sew all of the time," Janice Anderson, assistant manager at So-Fro Fabrics, said.

Anderson said beginning sewers should choose simpler patterns.

"Start with something basic, and talk to the sales clerks," Anderson said. "If it takes too long a time, they get discouraged. Start out simple."

A lot of students go home and talk to their mother before they start, Anderson said.

Beginners make little mistakes that can have a big effect on the outcome of the project.

"They don't always lay the pattern out right," Anderson said. "If you don't lay it out properly, it won't always hang right or look right."

Students should have an iron on hand to help keep the lines straight as they are sewing.

"The straighter you sew, the better," Anderson said. "Your iron is your best friend when you start sewing."

Garments don't look as sharp without an iron, Anderson said.

The proper threads and fabrics are important.

Beginning sewers should avoid slick materials.

"Avoid silky polyesters, satins, anything with a nap or a one-way design," Anderson said.

One-way materials that cannot be turned include velvets, corduroys and silky polyesters.

"You don't want anything with a one-way design to start with," Anderson said.

Consider simpler materials and styles.

"Solid colors are a good thing to start with," Anderson said. "Plaids are not a good thing to start with. We sewers like to see the plaid match."

Certain fabrics are harder to work with.

"Each fabric is different in its own way," said Marsha Sampson, manager and co-owner of Ausum Fine Fabrics.

Ask experienced sewers or sales clerks in fabric stores for advice on which materials and patterns work best together.

"Two fabrics aren't going to hang in the same way," Sampson said.

A larger person should avoid fabrics with a flat finish and pick materials that are not shiny, Sampson said.

"Try to chose fabrics that complement the person's figure," Sampson said.

Sampson also said it was important to choose materials in flattering colors.

"Go into a dress shop and find what colors you like," she said. "If you have to look at the color and say maybe, then it's not your color."

Shoes complete the outfit like icing on the cake

VIEWPOINT

LINDSEY FORTMEYER

LINDSEY FORTMEYER is a freshman in speech. She will review the latest in fashion trends in her weekly column. She can reached by e-mail at (lkf8410@ksu.edu).

If the shoe fits, wear it — and buy one in every color and style. That's right darlings, shoes can definitely make an outfit.

They attract. They provoke. Shoes are like the icing on the cake, the credits after a bad movie, the period after a sentence.

Why are people in such a frenzy to have more shoes?

Consumers are gluttons when it comes to purchasing shoes. How many pairs of shoes do I honestly own? Probably enough to shoe a small Treks convention.

I pass by shoe stores and automatically notice a spunky pair that would go great with my new outfit. So I buy them. Hey, they matched. That's a good enough reason for me.

Entering a shoe store can actually be fun. Men and women bring out box after box, and patiently wait for any purchasing decisions.

Just think about a day in the life of a shoe salesperson. No offense to anyone. I find the job quite interesting. Imagine the blisters and corns these poor workers see every day — toes with a striking resemblance to polish sausages. And the constant stench? No wonder they're always running off to get you another size.

The salespeople probably get mad when we try on 10 different pairs of shoes, and then leave all the boxes for them to put away. All this work for one pair of shoes. I think I'd work at Payless Shoe Source.

Take Al Bundy for example, from the TV sitcom, "Married With Children." The man works all day with shoe-crazed consumers, trying to make a sale. Bundy squeezes shoes on sweaty, puffy, swollen feet, only to go home to his sick kids and selfish wife.

What a life.

But aren't shoes worth it? I don't know what I'd do without my tennis shoes. Think of all the different kinds of tennis shoes — aerobic, cross-training, cleats — the list goes on.

The thrill of striding up and down the avenues in a pair of high-heel shoes is a great thought. If heels get any bigger, we'll be hobbling on boulders. I can't forget my riding boots. They're always fun. Sandals? They are the answer to comfort.

Shoes have a place on this Earth, whether you choose to admit it. Shoes transport us from point A to point B. Why else would the clicking of Dorothy's ruby slippers mean so much?

There's no place like home. There's no place like home.

TV industry to poll parents on new ratings system

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — The TV industry will ask parents whether major changes should be made to the 3-month-old ratings system, Jack Valenti, the executive who oversaw its creation, said Monday.

Ranging from "TV-G" for all audiences to "TV-MA," mature audiences only, the voluntary ratings have been under a barrage of criticism from lawmakers and children's advocacy groups for not providing parents with enough detailed information about shows' sexual, violent and language content.

Valenti, who also is president of the Motion Picture Association of America, made his remarks in an interview at the National Association of Broadcasters convention here.

Public Opinion Strategies and pollster Peter Hart will jointly interview more than 1,000 randomly selected parents beginning next month.

But Valenti wouldn't say what results would trigger major changes to the six-tier, age-based ratings that went into effect Jan. 1.

"Is it 51 percent or 64 percent? I don't know," he said. "There's no line in the sand."

Other studies say parents want more detailed ratings than the movie-like ones now in use.

Later, in remarks to the convention, Valenti said:

"I have said publicly that we are going to be very flexible with these guidelines. We'll make some changes here and there. But I want everybody to know we are not going to make any large revisions in these guidelines unless and until real parents with real kids tell us they want those changes to be made." Broadcasters applauded Valenti's comments.

In addition to the polls, Valenti said, the TV industry would be talking to the nation's roughly 1,600 TV stations to get parental feedback on the ratings' effectiveness.

Despite critics' complaints about the ratings, Valenti said in the interview, "I'm confident that what we're doing is right and useful. It's very easy to criticize."

Valenti also told broadcasters that TV ratings are not designed for Congress or advocacy groups, but for parents, who will be the final arbiters. Congress, he said, shouldn't interfere.

"Let me put it about as plainly as I can. Congress has no authority to lessen the reach of the First Amendment. Not now. Not tomorrow. Not ever," Valenti said, drawing applause once again.

Responding to critics, some executives of Fox, cable leaders and some trade association officials have been floating the notion of adding "V," "S" and "L" to existing ratings to note violence, sex and language that some may consider offensive.

The Senate Commerce Committee chairman, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., has signaled that unless the industry acts on its own, he will move forward on legislation that would require the TV industry to provide more detailed ratings.

Valenti said he has briefed McCain about the industry's polling plans.

"He gave no assurances or quid pro quos," Valenti said.

The wife of Dr. Michael Baden — he is the head of the New York State Police's forensics unit — filed papers in her divorce action against him in New York City.

Baden testified on behalf of O. J. Simpson that the victims' knife wounds probably were caused by more than one assailant.

According to his wife's papers, Baden once performed a pair of autopsies on the couple's dining room table, once asked her permission to impregnate his girlfriend, and once told her he could kill her and make it look like a natural death.

Downward trend in number of teaching students continues

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The number of students trained in Kansas to be teachers has declined for a third straight year, continuing a trend that has resulted in fewer than half as many teachers graduating as 24 years ago, an annual study showed Monday.

Kansas colleges and universities produced 4,445 teachers in 1972, the first year of the study. In 1996, the latest report showed, that figure was down to 2,093 — a 53-percent decline.

However, the director of the study, Jack Skillett of Emporia State University, said Kansas still has an adequate supply of teachers, but also has a chronic problem of matching them to areas that need them.

The study showed the number of new teachers dropped by 2.4 percent in 1996, by 3.3 percent in 1995 and by 0.1 percent in 1994

After declining by 45 percent between 1972 and 1979 and by 9.3 percent between 1980 and 1990, the trend reversed momentarily early this decade with increases of 9.1 percent in 1992 and 3.6 percent in 1993.

The latest report on "Teacher Supply and Demand in Kansas Public Schools," was to be presented to the state Board of Education during its meeting Tuesday in Minneapolis, Kan.

The board was meeting there to honor longtime former member Bill Musick, a Minneapolis resident.

> When you consider the fact that salaries of teachers in Kansas increased just 0.9 of 1 percent from last year to this year, I'm afraid these numbers will get worse in the future.
>
> • Craig Grant
> K-NEA's chief representative

The teacher supply report is compiled annually by the Jones Institute for Educational Excellence, a part of Emporia State's Teachers College.

Despite the decline in the number of teachers being produced in Kansas, Skillett, ESU's Jones distinguished university professor and the study's director, said the state's problem is not how many teachers there are but which specialties they are entering.

"In Kansas, we appear to have both a teacher shortage and surplus," Skillett said.

"Shortages of teachers continue to exist in the area of special education, and a modest need for teachers appears to exist in selected secondary areas.

"A surplus of teachers has emerged in the areas of elementary education, social sciences and physical education."

Skillett said it is not clear whether these trends will continue, but said new admission standards for teachers and increased attractiveness of retirement because of pension incentives may create more vacancies.

A spokesman for Kansas-National Education Association, the state's largest teacher organization, said lack of pay raises is likely to increase shortages.

"When you consider the fact that salaries of teachers in Kansas increased just 0.9 of 1 percent from last year to this year, I'm afraid these numbers will get worse in the future," said Craig Grant, K-NEA's chief representative before the Legislature.

"I believe within the next four or five years we'll feel a real crunch. As many of our teachers retire there won't be folks to replace them."

However, John Koepke, executive director of the Kansas Association of School Boards, said the new teacher report doesn't show anything startling.

"The problem is not so much in supply and demand overall, but to supply the teachers in particular service areas that have typically and historically had a shortage," Koepke said.

He said the selected shortages can be attributed to two things: Colleges not doing a good enough job of funneling students into the areas of need and teacher union contracts keeping districts from paying more to special education and other specialized teachers.

Last September, the report showed, there were 148 vacancies in special education, up from 131 the year before but down from the 203 in 1994. More than a fourth of those vacancies were in the area of speech-language.

Also, last fall there were 102 vacancies in secondary education, up from 102 in 1995. Again, language teachers were in shortest supply.

2 people die in Wichita shooting

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — A man and a woman, both 34, were fatally shot Monday, Sedgwick County Sheriff's Capt. Mitchell Paige said.

Sheriff's officials were called to the woman's rural Sedgwick County house just south of Wichita at 11:36 a.m. She had been shot three times and was pronounced dead at the scene. The man, who was shot once in the chest, died about an hour later at a Wichita hospital.

Authorities were not releasing the identity of the woman Monday evening because her relatives had not been notified. They did not know the identity of the man, Paige said.

A handgun was found at the residence. Officials are investigating the shooting as a homicide.

The couple was believed to have been together about 10 years, but authorities did not know whether they were married, Paige said.

Stan Clark, R-Oakley, chairman of the Joint Committee on Computers and Telecommunications, said Monday he believes corrective steps are progressing nicely.

"I feel pretty comfortable that we're getting up to speed," Clark said. "We hope to identify the areas where expenditures are required, so the (Senate) Ways and Means and (House) Appropriations committees have something to actually act on."

John Oliver, senior policy analyst in the office of Chief Information Architect, told Clark's committee 42 state agencies have identified year 2000 problems that need fixing and already have active programs to fix them, while another 31 say they have no critical problems and 11 have not reported.

The committee finished Monday hearing from agencies on their plans, and will meet again April 23 to make decisions on what funding to recommend for next fiscal year to pay for the needed computer upgrades or repairs.

The estimated total cost presently is $18.4 million, but the Department of Human Resources, with major computer exposure, could add as much as $9.5 million to that cost. It is the last major agency to report and is supposed to have its plan and the cost estimate ready this month.

SRS Secretary Rochelle Chronister told the committee the computer problem is obviously a major concern for her agency.

"If the (welfare) checks don't go out, we're going to hear about it, and you're going to hear about it," she said. "However, we believe with the plan we have in place we'll be ready. We believe we will be successful with that plan."

The ceremony also marked the 25th anniversary of the opening of Royals Stadium, which was renamed in 1993 in honor of the late Ewing Kauffman, the club's founder.

When Kauffman heard in 1972 that White was unemployed while awaiting reassignment in the Royals' minor league system, he ordered that he be given a job on the stadium construction crew.

The future all-Star spent the next few months pouring concrete on what is now the east concourse, and went on to set an AL record for second basemen with eight Gold Glove awards.

In '85, he became the first second baseman since Jackie Robinson to bat cleanup in the World Series.

"Being a native of Kansas City makes today really special for me," he said. "It was wonderful."

A sellout crowd was having a good time as well, excited about the prospects of a retooled offense and a pitching staff featuring Kevin Appier, the opening day starter the past six seasons.

"I can hardly believe it's baseball season already," said Jean Butler. "We've been season ticket holders for almost 15 years, and I think this could be our best team in all that time."

MCC students like Ben Perry, sophomore in music and computer science, waited to hear the outcome: Will their campus grow to support more students?

"They're trying to restructure the campus, and they're trying to expand the campus onto more ground," he said. "This is just for support. Everybody wanted to support their speakers."

David Margolies, who lives on Leavenworth Street, said he wondered if closing Laramie Street would just exchange the dangers of a busy intersection from a college campus to a neighborhood filled with children who walk everyday to elementary school.

"We have a young daughter," Margolies said. "I don't think it's fair trading off safety. They want safety for their students on Laramie. We want safety for our elementary school kids in our neighborhood. So, a bunch of us homeowners just came out."

Sieben said she wondered how the closing might affect their business district.

"We hope without the road closure, it will be a win, win, win situation. We hope it will be a win for the neighborhoods, for Aggieville and for Manhattan Christian College," she said.

mansion: Applewhite was frightened by the events in 1993 at the Branch Davidian compound near Waco, Texas, and thought the FBI was stalking his group.

"We didn't know if we were going to get caught by the FBI, or if there was going to be another Waco, or if somebody was going to shoot everybody or if everybody was going to have to do it themselves," DiAngelo said.

DiAngelo, whose real name is Richard Ford, discovered the bodies in the cult's rented mansion near San Diego on March 26, after receiving two videotapes that described the cult members' intentions.

He said Applewhite decided to get castrated a year ago after two cult members went to Mexico for the procedure. Once Applewhite got castrated, five other cultists did the same.

"They couldn't stop smiling and giggling" about the procedure, DiAngelo said. "They were excited about it."

Investigators found $5 bills in the pockets of the dead — a practice DiAngelo said started after police accused a cult member of vagrancy. After that, all members carried identification and a small sum of money.

DiAngelo said he became involved with Heaven's Gate after hearing members speak in California. He said the cult provided a way for him to escape a troubled life that included a divorce, a violent, unstable mother and other bad relationships. The group also shared DiAngelo's interest in UFOs, music and Eastern religions.

DiAngelo said that after three years with the group, he had a disturbing feeling in February and decided to leave.

DiAngelo told Newsweek he hopes to join the others someday, but suicide is not part of his plan.

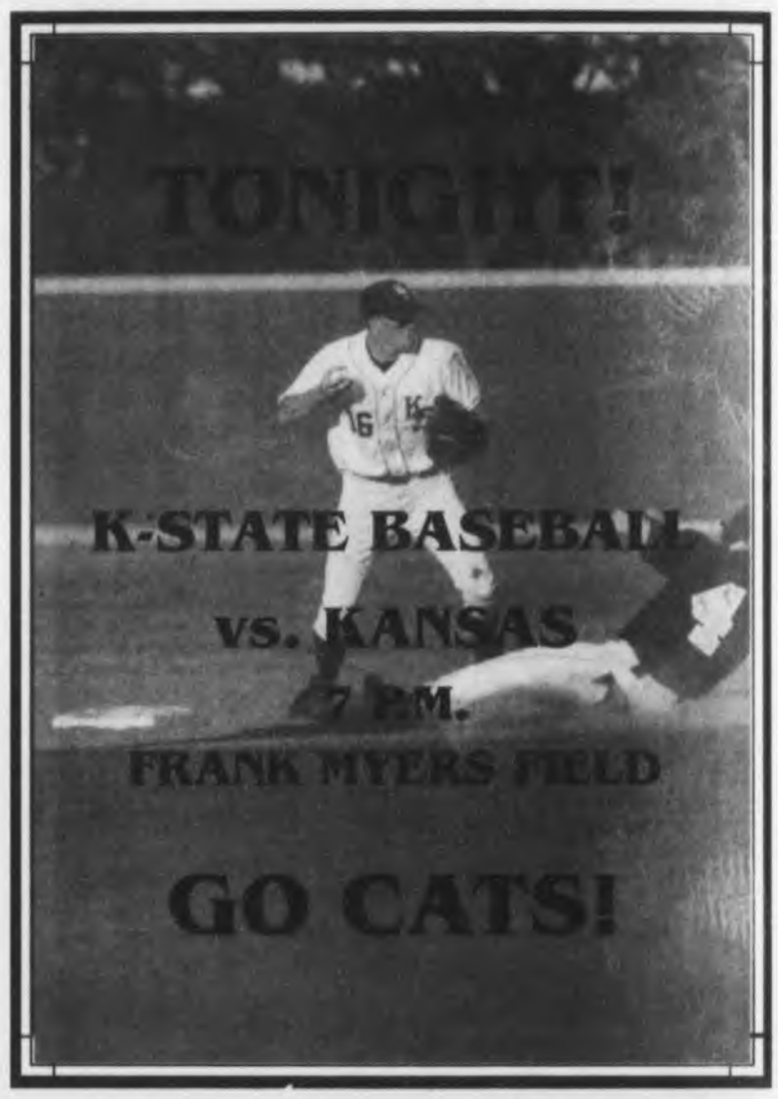
cargo bay quickly, meaning it would be shipped to Florida to be unloaded, Johnson said.



"Obviously, any plants inside the shuttle would be lost, so we're hoping for a Florida landing," Johnson said.

BioServe projects have flown on 13 shuttle missions. Johnson said this was the first BioServe space mission cut short.

Astronauts were scrambling Monday to finish as many experiments as they could before getting ready to return to Earth because of problems with a power generator.

Scientists who spent more than three years coordinating the mission hoped to get through 15 percent of the tests by the time the seven astronauts closed the shuttle's laboratory Monday night. They said they will push to get their 33 experiments — considered precursors for the future international space station — on another shuttle mission.

Besides plants, the crew was supposed to study fire, metals and crystals.

PURE PURPLE POWER

STUDENT SEASON TICKETS

New!
There will be a change in the sale and distribution of student season tickets beginning in the fall of 1997. The change is caused by the possibility of the demand for student season tickets exceeding the supply. There are 9,200 tickets available to Kansas State students. In an effort to be fair and equitable, the allocation of football student season tickets will be based on class standing with a preference to those students who purchase a combination ticket.

The allocation of football student season tickets will be filled in the following sequence:
1. Returning students who choose to purchase the combination season football and reduced rate season men's basketball ticket.*
2. Returning seniors and graduate students.
3. Returning juniors.
4. Returning sophomores.
5. New students, transfer students and returning students who fail to sign up before the spring deadline.

*The combination ticket includes six home football games and 12 home basketball games that occur while school is in session.

To Order
When: During pre-enrollment, April 9–25, 1997
Where: Willard Hall
How: Complete the appropriate application*
Cost: Football season ticket only.....$60
Basketball season ticket only....$66
Combination season ticket $120
*Athletic Department will validate orders as to class standing with Registrar's office.

To Pick Up
When: August 25–September 5, 1997
Where: Ahearn Fieldhouse, east lobby

ICAT
As in the past, student season ticket holders (GA) may purchase an ICAT membership at the time of ticket pick-up. For a donation of $30, the ICAT member will receive priority seating, a commemorative T-shirt, discounts at Aggieville merchants, and invitations to special events. (ICAT limited to first 2,000 students.)

Important!
1. Returning students must order in the spring to receive their priority. Students not meeting deadlines will be placed with new student group.
2. Returning students purchasing combination tickets receive priority regardless of class standing.
3. Returning students can order now and pay later by charging their season tickets to their fall bill.
4. Deadlines—To order: April 9–23, 1997; to pick up: August 25–September 5, 1997

Quorum problem thwarts Faculty Senate from releasing info

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

Faculty Senate would have voted Tuesday on the publication of course and teacher information, but too many senators left early to have a vote.

If Senate had retained its quorum, it might have passed the Course Information Program proposal, which would let students evaluate courses and their instructors. It would then publish the results, along with syllabus information.

Student Body President Tim Riemann moved to have a special meeting to expedite the process, but too many senators were unavailable for another date. Some expressed a desire to work with the students to hurry a vote.

Chris Hansen, former student body president, created the program with Rhett Trujillo, teacher evaluation coordinator for Hansen's cabinet, meeting with dozens of faculty and administrators to develop it.

Wayne Charney, faculty senator, had introduced an amendment to the proposal, which provided for a year-long testing period to further develop the questionnaire. The results of the questionnaires in that testing period would not be published under the amendment, which was passed by the Senate.

This amendment addressed some of the concerns of the other senators, who said some of the questions and their wording were worrisome.

Some questioned whether the results would be valid, based on students lying on the questionnaires, undisciplined freshman respondents in new courses and unclear wording.

"I think what testing needs to occur would ferret out these inconsistencies in the questions," Charney said.

Others said there was potential for the course information to lead to a popularity contest for instructors and even grade inflation. A few suggested taking out the information about the teacher and just publishing syllabus-type information.

"Although some of you may have reservations about that, that is what students want to hear," Nicole Johnson, Student Senate's Faculty Senate representative, said of the instructor information. She said students already tell each other about instructors, and that the program would make the information more reliable.

After consulting with former Student Senate Parliamentarian Patrick Carney, who was one of the 23 students who came to the meeting, Johnson told the Senate that parliamentary procedure says that if there is not a quorum, everything accomplished during the meeting is nullified.

This would void a number of curriculum changes, as well as the Senate's approval of the report of the General Education Task Force, which established a way to review and evaluate general education requirements.

However, Faculty Senate President David Balk said it had been the practice of the Senate to keep whatever had been accomplished before the senators discovered the lack of a quorum. He said he would argue that everything which was passed before that still stood.

$50-million offer made to NCAA for relocation

▶ INDIANAPOLIS MAKES bid to be home for NCAA headquarters.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — A $50 million incentive package being offered to the NCAA to relocate its headquarters includes a $10 million grant from the Lilly Endowment and as much as $20 million from the state, area officials say.

It's the first time officials have confirmed details of the incentive package intended to attract the NCAA from its current headquarters in Overland Park, a suburb of Kansas City, Mo.

Area organizing group spokesman Edward West said Monday that $25 million of the total package would come from private and philanthropic sources, including the $10 million from the endowment.

He said another $20 million was being sought from the state to be used for construction of NCAA buildings in White River State Park, and $5 million in non-cash incentives would include possible contributions from the city.

Gov. Frank O'Bannon told the Indianapolis Star and News he will ask the Legislature to support a plan to pay the state's share of the package, but he would not say whether he would support a $20 million contribution.

Court OKs end to affirmative action

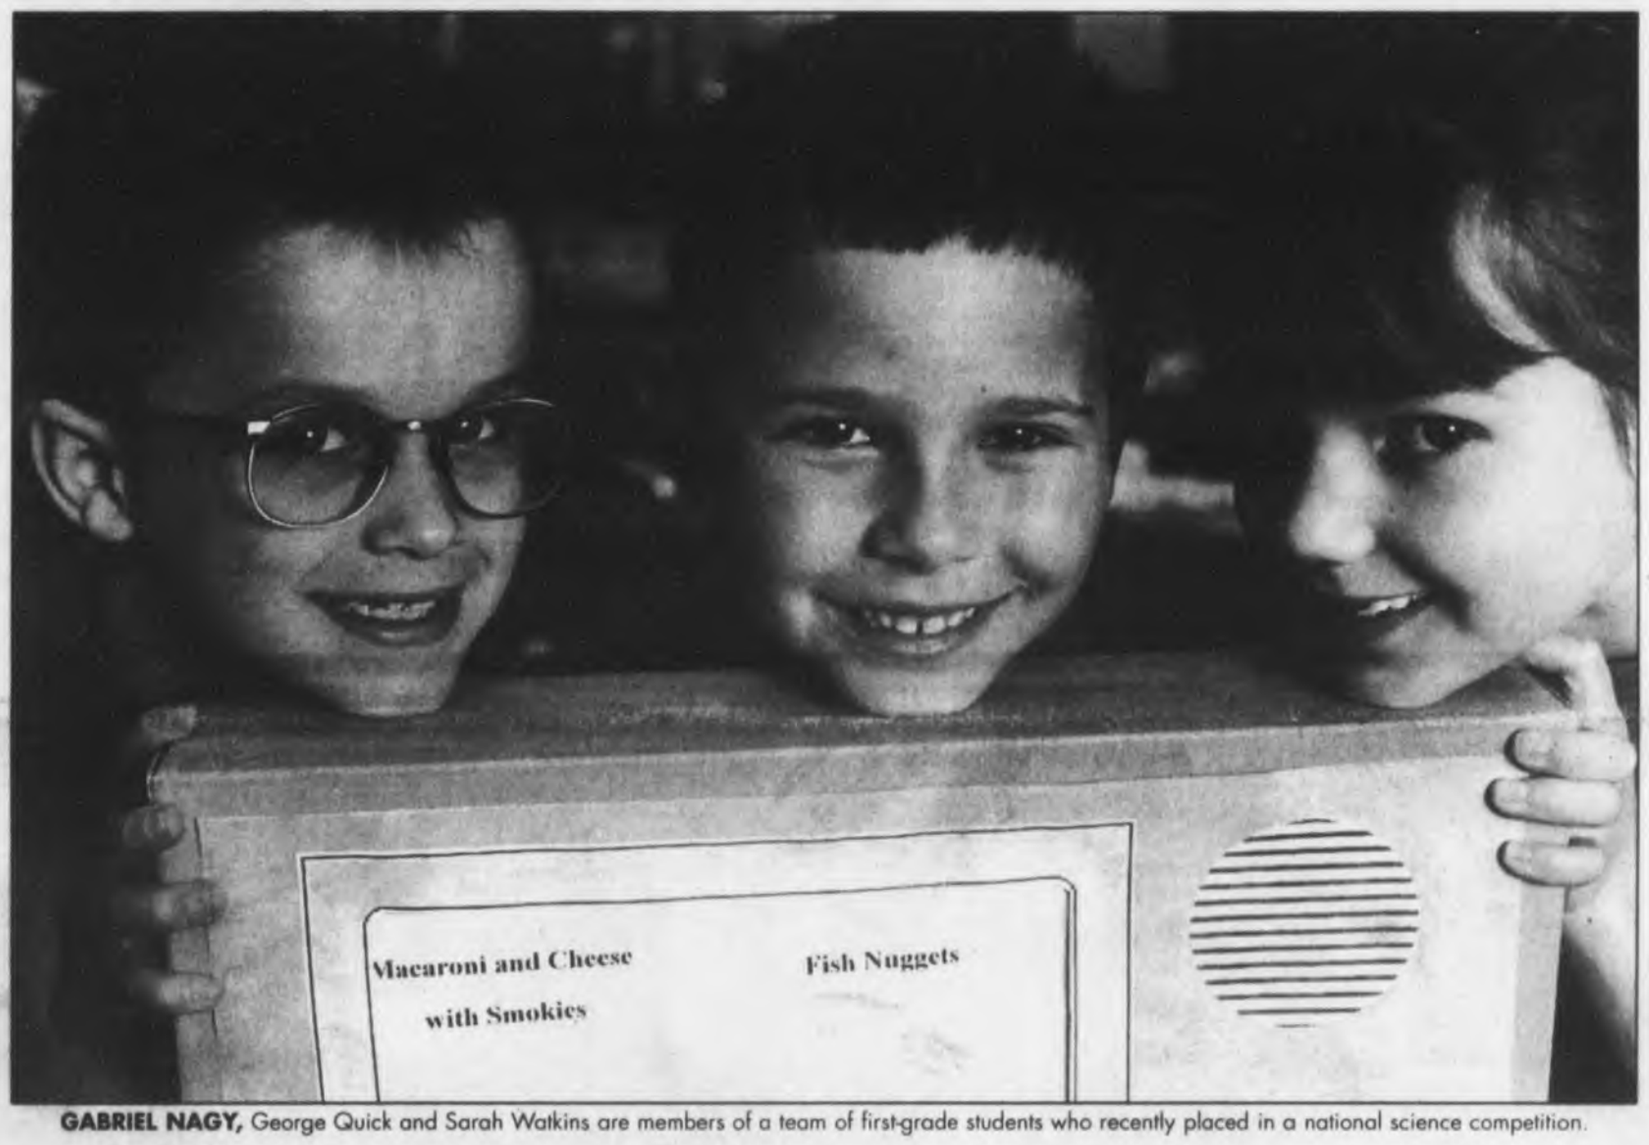
▶ APPEALS COURT lifts previous injunction of Proposition 209.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Voters have a right to outlaw affirmative action based on racial or gender preferences, a three-judge panel of a federal appeals court said Tuesday in upholding California's Proposition 209.

In a 3-0 ruling, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the lifting of a lower court injunction that had blocked enforcement of the initiative since shortly after voters passed it last November.

Proposition 209, passed by 54 percent of the voters, would prohibit racial or gender discrimination in public hiring, contracting and education, thus ending many affirmative action programs.



"A system which permits one judge to block with the stroke of a pen what 4,736,180 state residents voted to enact as law tests the integrity of our constitutional democracy," said the opinion by Judge Diarmuid O'Scannlain.

Rejecting civil rights groups' arguments, the court said Proposition 209 addresses in neutral fashion race-related and gender-related matters and does not discriminate.

Under the court's decision, the ruling is scheduled to take effect in 21 days. But opponents are virtually certain to appeal to a larger panel of the 9th Circuit and can ask the court to continue the ban on enforcement in the meantime.

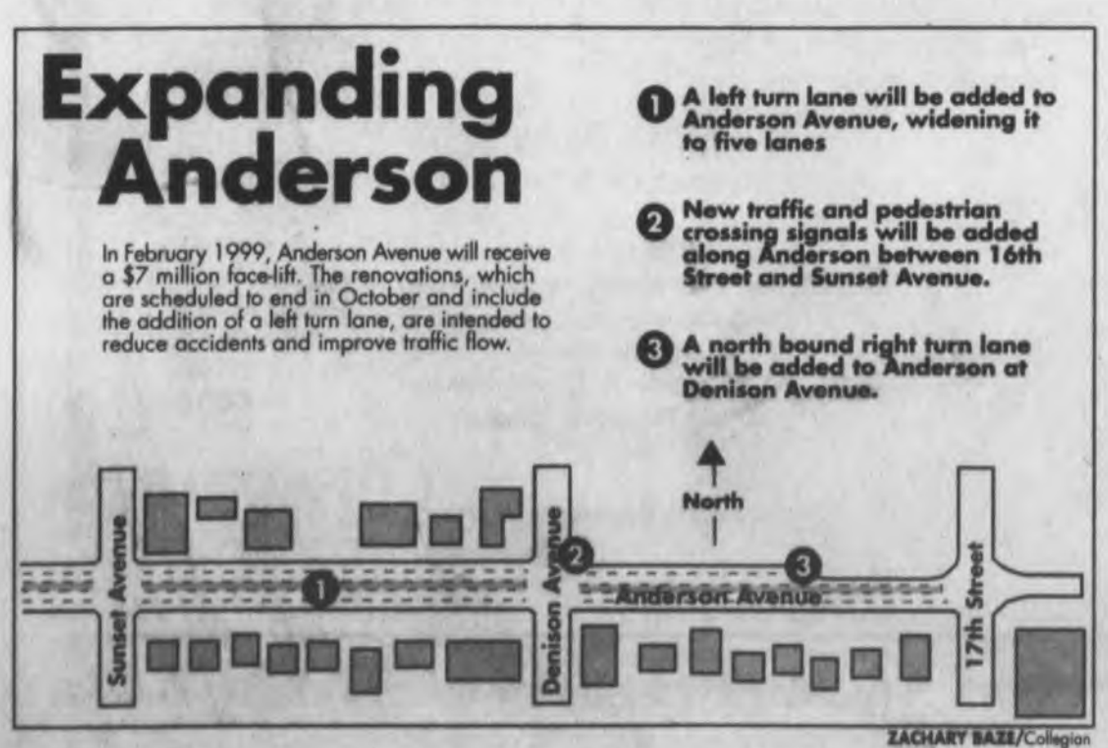
Four Manhattan students have reached the regional level for a prototype they devised for a new computer program.

They aren't K-State students. They're not even high-school students. They're first graders at Bluemont Elementary School.

Hannah Dodds, Gabriel Nagy, George Quick and Sarah Watkins created a computer program designed to take attendance, check out library books and ensure that students receive the lunch they ordered when they got to school in the morning.

They entered the ExploraVision Awards, a science competition sponsored by Toshiba and the National Science Teachers Association this semester.

To be eligible to compete, students had to come up with a new invention, submit a bibliography about that invention, make a storyboard frame describing the invention and a video detailing how their invention will work.



If the students reach the national competition, they and their parents will be given a trip to Washington, D.C.

First-place winners will each receive a $10,000 savings bond, and second-place winners will each receive a $5,000 savings bond.

Cynthia Garwick, project adviser, said Dodd's older brother, a fifth grader at Bluemont, was the inspiration for the project because he didn't get what he ordered for lunch.

"The kids started this project last semester, and they did work on it every day in class and at home," Garwick said.

City project will widen Anderson Avenue near campus to increase turning lanes, traffic lights to ease congestion

DAVID FAIRBANKS

Anderson Avenue is going to get a face lift. Manhattan will renovate Anderson Avenue from Sunset Avenue to 16th Street beginning in February 1999.

Jerry Petty, director of public works, said construction will cost $7 million and will not be completed until October 1999. He said the Anderson Avenue Improvement Project will include a number of additions.

The project will widen Anderson Avenue, put new traffic signals at each intersection and add new pedestrian crossing signals. It will also add a median to Sunset Avenue from Anderson Avenue to Fairchild Terrace and construct a new storm-drainage system from Memorial Stadium to 16th Street, Petty said.

"Anderson will be widened to five lanes from just west of Sunset to just east of 16th Street. At each intersection there will be a left turning lane added," Petty said.

In addition to a left turning lane, a northbound, right turning lane will also be added at Anderson Avenue and Denison Street.

Also, to simplify entrance onto Anderson Avenue, a left turning lane will be added to southbound Sunset Avenue, and a right turning lane will be added to southbound 17th Street, Kent Moorman, CM Engineering president, said.

Moorman said the improvements will satisfy Anderson Avenue's need for a better flow of traffic.

Moorman said traffic flow will be constricted to one lane of travel during construction.

CM Engineering conducted a traffic study to find out how much these improvements are needed. The study found there were 86 accidents at the 17th Street, Denison and Sunset intersections in 1994 and 1995, Moorman said.

Twenty-four of the 86 accidents resulted in personal injury to at least one of the parties involved.

The study also found that if left turning signals had been in place, 65 of the accidents could have been avoided, Moorman said.

Manhattan has contracted three agencies to aid in construction of the project. The lead consultant, a Nebraska company, is planning the road construction and the storm-drainage construction. The sub-consultants, both out of Manhattan, are in charge of the traffic signal system, the

• K-STATE PUBLICATIONS WIN NATIONAL AWARDS.

The 1996 Royal Purple and the Collegian took home several national awards from Columbia Scholastic Press Association.

The plaques were presented to K-State delegates at the College Media Convention on March 20. The 1996 Royal Purple received the Gold Crown, the highest award given by the CSPA, a 2,000-member educational press organization. The 1995-96 Kansas State Collegian received the Silver Crown award.

This year's awards marked the seventh-consecutive Gold Crown for the yearbook and the sixth crown award for the newspaper since 1989. Indiana University was the only other school to take home crowns for dual publications.

Linda Puntney, yearbook adviser and assistant director of Student Publications Inc., said she views entering the competition as an instructional tool.

"It's not only an evaluation of last year's book, but also an instructional document to show us what we can do better for the coming book," Puntney said.

A finalist in the Associated Collegiate Press Pacemaker Award, the Royal Purple is the only college yearbook to receive nominations in both the Crown awards and the ACP award every year since 1990.

"K-State has such a fabulous yearbook tradition," said Sarah Kallenbach, editor of the 1996 Royal Purple and senior in journalism.

The yearbook also received second in Best of Show in November of 1996 and has more All-American awards than any other college yearbook in the nation.

"The awards are fabulous, but the feedback I've gotten from the students is very positive, and that's what makes our job meaningful and worthwhile," Kallenbach said.

• MAN SENTENCED FOR PART IN FATAL SHOOTING OF ATTORNEY.

WICHITA — A Wichita man was sentenced to life in prison for his part in the killing of an attorney outside a nude dancing club.

Kenyon Campbell, 25, also was sentenced Friday to 25 years for aggravated kidnapping. He will be eligible for parole in 15 years.

A Sedgwick County District Court jury convicted Campbell of trying to kidnap attorney John Rees II, 33, and then standing by as his accomplice fired five shots at Rees on March 23, 1996, outside Fantasy Private Dancers.

The man accused of shooting Rees, Ronald Etheridge, 27, is still at large.

• SURVIVING CULT MEMBER WON'T HAND OVER VIDEOTAPE.

SAN DIEGO — A former Heaven's Gate cult member has refused to give authorities a videotape he made when he discovered the bodies of the 39 members who committed suicide.

It is questionable whether a judge will grant a search warrant to seize the video shot by Richard Ford because nobody committed a crime, sheriff's Lt. Jerry Lipscomb said Monday.

"He has given us everything else we requested but the video," Lipscomb said. "He didn't say why he wouldn't give us the video."

The 39 cult members committed suicide with a cocktail of drugs and alcohol after coming to believe that a spaceship would take them to heaven.

Ford, 43, who left the cult's rented Rancho Santa Fe mansion in late February, discovered the bodies on March 26 after receiving two videotapes that described the members' intentions.

Ford, also known as Rio DiAngelo, was scheduled to appear Wednesday on ABC's "PrimeTime Live," although it is not known whether the videotape he made will be aired.

Ford told ABC that cult members feared their families would find them through the FBI.

"We thought there was a possibility of some sort of confrontation," said Ford, who spent three years in the cult. "When we were living in New Mexico — having Waco happen — we were concerned that us being a group that the government may not understand, that the government might come after us for some reason."

KELLY ROSS, left, senior in political science, and Courtney Knapple, senior in speech, were one of K-State's two teams that made it into the round of 64 in the national debate competition.

K-State debate team finished another solid year with a top-20 finish in the nation.

The team finished with a 13th-place ranking and had two members achieve national honors. It also had two teams that qualified for the round of 64 in the national tournament. The round included the top 64 debate teams in the country.

Courtney Knapple, senior in speech, said the team's finish could be attributed to team unity.

"A lot of it was we had a good time together," Knapple said. "Our whole team bonded together and worked together this year."

The hard work and debate tradition at times led to overload for the team, Knapple said.

"It felt like sometimes we worked too hard," Knapple said. "A lot of times we worked so hard we would be tired at the tournaments."

Kelly Ross, senior in political science, and Knapple were one of the two teams who made it to the round of 64.

Knapple was also granted a spot on the Cross Examination Debate Association All American Team, which is an honor bestowed to 30 students in the nation.

Knapple said the season was a disappointing experience this year because she had reached the round of 64 her whole career at K-State, but never passed it.

Her team faced the eventual runner-up of the tournament, which was Michigan State.

But losing to the runner-up made the loss feel less painful, Knapple said.

"I felt like I gave my best speech in my career at the last debate," Knapple said.

Sarah Glaser, sophomore in pre-health professions and member of a round of 64 team, said the team had a young squad this year, with two seniors on its roster.

"The two seniors were really great and very good leaders," Glaser said.

The second team that progressed to the round of 64 was composed of Josh Longbottom, freshman in speech, and Glaser.

Glaser was named to the academic all-America team, which also is made up of 30 students in the nation.

"I wasn't expecting that and was very proud when I found out that I was nominated and selected," Glaser said.

Glaser said the team built up momentum this year and would carry over into next year.

"The momentum right now is rolling," Glaser said. "As soon as finals are over we will start over for next year."

Firebomb injures judge in Illinois courthouse

ASSOCIATED PRESS

URBANA, Ill. — With little security to stop him, a hooded man walked into court Tuesday and hurled a firebomb that bounced off a judge's head and ignited a blaze that gutted the room but caused no serious injuries.

The man fled after the attack, which came during testimony in a medical malpractice case.

Three people were slightly hurt as jurors and others in the courtroom rushed toward the only exit, and Circuit Judge George Miller suffered a cut on the scalp when he was hit by the flaming, fuel-filled bottle.

"It was obvious that he was pretty much aiming it at the judge and trying to hurt the judge," juror Abra Bonnell said. "Everybody left the jury box screaming."

"He didn't say a word," another juror, David Chambers, said. "He came in, looked around, grabbed the bottle out, lit it and then threw it. I looked back, and the judge's bench was on fire, and it went up the back wall of the courtroom."

Workers at the Champaign County Courthouse detained a man in a black, hooded sweatshirt shortly after the firebombing in the third-floor courtroom. But after he was shown to witnesses, investigators decided he was not the man who lit the rag-filled bottle containing an amber liquid.

Authorities were questioning several other people Tuesday night and had several strong leads, said sheriff's deputy Gary Turner.

The incident spotlighted concerns about security at the 96-year-old courthouse, which has at least four entrances, no metal detectors and five unarmed guards.

"There's no court security in our building," said Sheriff Dave Madigan. "He walked in. It's as simple as that."

Champaign County State's Attorney John Piland said, "We are lucky. This is a shot across the bow."

Sumo wrestling, a bungee run and an obstacle course will be open to students today and Thursday in the free-speech zone between the K-State Student Union and Seaton Hall.

On April 9 and 10, the Sports Illustrated Campus Fest will offer students the chance for an unusual study break with more than 25 activities. The Fest includes baseball speed-pitching, a basketball challenge, and booths from many campus organizations and corporate sponsors.

The eighth annual event, sponsored by the Union Bookstore, will run from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on both days.

Sheila Horinek, administrative assistant at the Union Bookstore, said she hopes the cold weather won't keep students away.

"If it is cold, we're still holding it," Horinek said. "If it should rain, it will be moved to Friday, but I hear the weather isn't supposed to be much better then."

As a sponsor, the Union Bookstore pays for security and electricity and donates prizes.

To finance the event, the Union Bookstore writes the expense into its promotions budget.

"They cut us a deal," Horinek said. "American Express will be here, and depending on how many credit card applications they get, we'll save money."

K-State is one of 10 universities hosting the Sports Illustrated Campus Fest this semester.

"They really like coming here," Horinek said. "And we're one of their favorites."

Horinek says the bookstore knows this time in the semester is crunch time for most students and hopes to give something back to the students.

"We believe that this is something good to help boost the morale of the students," Horinek said.

Collegian praises City of Manhattan for Anderson Avenue improvement plan

We at the Collegian praise the City of Manhattan for deciding on a plan to improve Anderson Avenue. It is long overdue.

Had the city decided to improve the street earlier, numerous accidents and the death of one K-State student might have been avoided. According to a study by CM Engineering, the company that developed the plans for the improvements, found that of the 86 accidents that occurred in 1994 and 1995, 65 could have been avoided.

Although the project will cause traffic congestion during construction, the result will be worth waiting for.

The turning lanes should decrease the number of accidents and improve traffic flow. The pedestrian lights will make it safer for students to cross the street.

Construction will only last nine months. If drivers plan ahead and leave a little early, they should be able to reach their destination in a timely and safe manner.

Plan on the inconvenience, but take heart that it will be easier to maneuver along Anderson Avenue eventually.

The Anderson Avenue improvement does bring up another problem, though. Because the project will eat up an area in the K-State Student Union parking lot, the University needs to find a solution to the parking problem soon. Parking will only get worse if it doesn't.

Circumnavigating the apartment-hunting pitfalls

VIEWPOINT

MARY RENEE SMITH

MARY RENEE SMITH is a junior in theater. You can e-mail your comments to Mary at (mojo@ksu.edu).

The hunt is on.

It is the time of the year when leases get close to expiring and we all have to face the cold, hard fact that we'll be here another year. Roommates are graduating, and student loans are increasing.

Whatever the reason, spring is the time to look for a new house or apartment.

The boyfriend and I have decided to take the plunge and live in sin. So we are searching together. You would think this would make things easier. Wrong. Two heads have two different ideas of what makes a good apartment, and two student incomes added together still doesn't amount to squat.

We thought this would be easy. We need a two-bedroom apartment within a reasonable distance from campus. There have got to be literally hundreds of apartments and houses that fit that description. So why can't we find a place to live?

Everyone starts out wanting something simple, but there are all those hidden things you want.

We tried to make the apartment hunt easier by listing a few things we couldn't live with and a few things we couldn't live without.

He has to have a garbage disposal. I am not sure of the connection, but apparently men must be able to grind things up at the flip of a switch. It must be the primal grinding noise and the power of destruction.

I cannot live in a trailer park. I just can't. There is no way for me to describe it, but I have a genetic repulsion to trailer parks. I think it has something to do with my hatred of paneling and windows with cranks.

There are a few other details we've discovered we can't live with. I have an aversion to green appliances. We can't live without a bathtub. We can't live anywhere with shag carpet so long it comes with a rake.

For the last three weeks, armed with the Collegian and the Manhattan Mercury, we have been doing our best to find a humble abode to call our own. But the newspapers haven't been much help.

There is a secret language used in ads for houses and apartment I have had to spend a long time deciphering. I think I've got it figured out.

A popular feature of apartments here in town is being "close to campus." I have discovered that my idea of being close to campus and some others' ideas are a bit different. In my book, Westloop is not close to campus.

Another concept I have a problem with is the "basement apartment." There is something wrong with living underground in a space usually reserved for water heaters and furnaces that smells like my grandmother's winter clothes.

I discovered years ago in my first search for my own apartment that the words efficiency, studio, cozy or quaint are code words for incredibly small. The old joke "the apartment is so small you have to go outside to change your mind" comes to mind.

So the search continues, and we wade though the misleading ads, looking for an acceptable apartment for our growing list of needs.

We did find a great place. Not too far from campus, garbage disposal, big bedrooms. It was wonderful. We called, and the man said it would be $250 per month per person. A little out of our budget, but we thought we would go look for the hell of it.

We got there, and an older gentleman began to show us the apartment. It really was everything it had said in the ad. The carpet was a little worn, but everything else was grand.

I asked the gentleman for the cost of the apartment. He said it would be $198 per person. My boyfriend and I were a bit shocked but didn't say anything. The gentleman continued to talk and mentioned some of his past tenants.

Last semester he had a "boy" living in the building who didn't understand what it meant to be quiet and they had to get a lawyer. That is when the first warning light went up.

The gentleman kept talking. He said that nowadays, if you are going to advertise an apartment in the paper, you have to rent to anyone, whether they are white, black, yellow, pink or purple.

My boyfriend and I thanked him for showing us the apartment and got in our car.

Damn, too bad we can't live there. And such a nice place, too. Everything we wanted in an apartment. I guess we have to add racist landlords to list of things we can't live with.

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

Exhibit uses art to promote hidden agenda

The thought of escaping politics in today's society sounds futile.

Post-politically correct awareness, which inoculates our senses, looms in nearly every subculture of society. It most recently invaded the museum art world in the form of history as art.

"Exiles+Emigrés: The Flight of European Artists from Hitler," at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art until May 11, is one of the scariest, most fascinating art exhibitions mounted in the last decade.

Its epic premise, an exploration and documentation of 23 well-known painters, sculptors, photographers and architects who were driven from Germany because of the cultural and racial campaigns of Adolf Hitler, spans continents and decades. The artists and architects include Max Beckmann, Vasili Kandinsky, Max Ernst, Marcel Breuer, Walter Gropius and Mies van der Rohe — the very cornerstones of modernism.

And for the most part, it succeeds in placing each artists' work in a social and political context, usually either oppression or an optimistic hope for freedom. LACMA introduces the show as an understanding of how these artists were affected by their decisions to flee Hitler, mostly as immigrants to the United States.

What is disturbing, though, is how the exhibition focuses more on the cruelty of the U.S. government in turning away thousands of would-be immigrants — a decision some feel accounted for many more deaths then necessary at the hands of the Nazis. The fact that many of the 23 artists included in the show were welcomed to the U.S. as exclusive immigrants because of their celebrity is almost forgotten. Is this exhibition about the artists or a stab at revisionist history?

While a stunning array of art and documents are included, rarely do the accompanying museum descriptions focus on the subject of art. Stephanie Barron, senior curator of 20th-century art at LACMA and curator of this show, seems more content placing the artists in the context of the Jewish Holocaust than any artistic context of the 20th century.

The show does, however, succeed at explaining the choice of subject in many of the more politically motivated examples. But again, it stops short of any greater explanation.

The show trumpets its exploration of architecture but only devotes a mere trifling segment to the contributions of masters like van der Rohe and Gropius to American architecture.

The exhibition gives brief histories of artists, but fails to place them in any American context. What did Gropius do in Germany that was so dangerous? How did Gropius affect American theories? Sadly, those questions are never clearly answered, let alone asked.

The only true interpretation of the modernists' effect on U.S. architecture is through Los Angeles architect Frank Gehry's clever installation in the final gallery — a rubber floor surrounding a chain-like inner sanctum with a hardwood floor.

It both reflects the harsh conditions of those refugees who were eventual concentration camp victims and of the severe modernism of the architecture of Gropius and van der Rohe. Why the scholarship of the show couldn't have been as clear is anyone's guess.

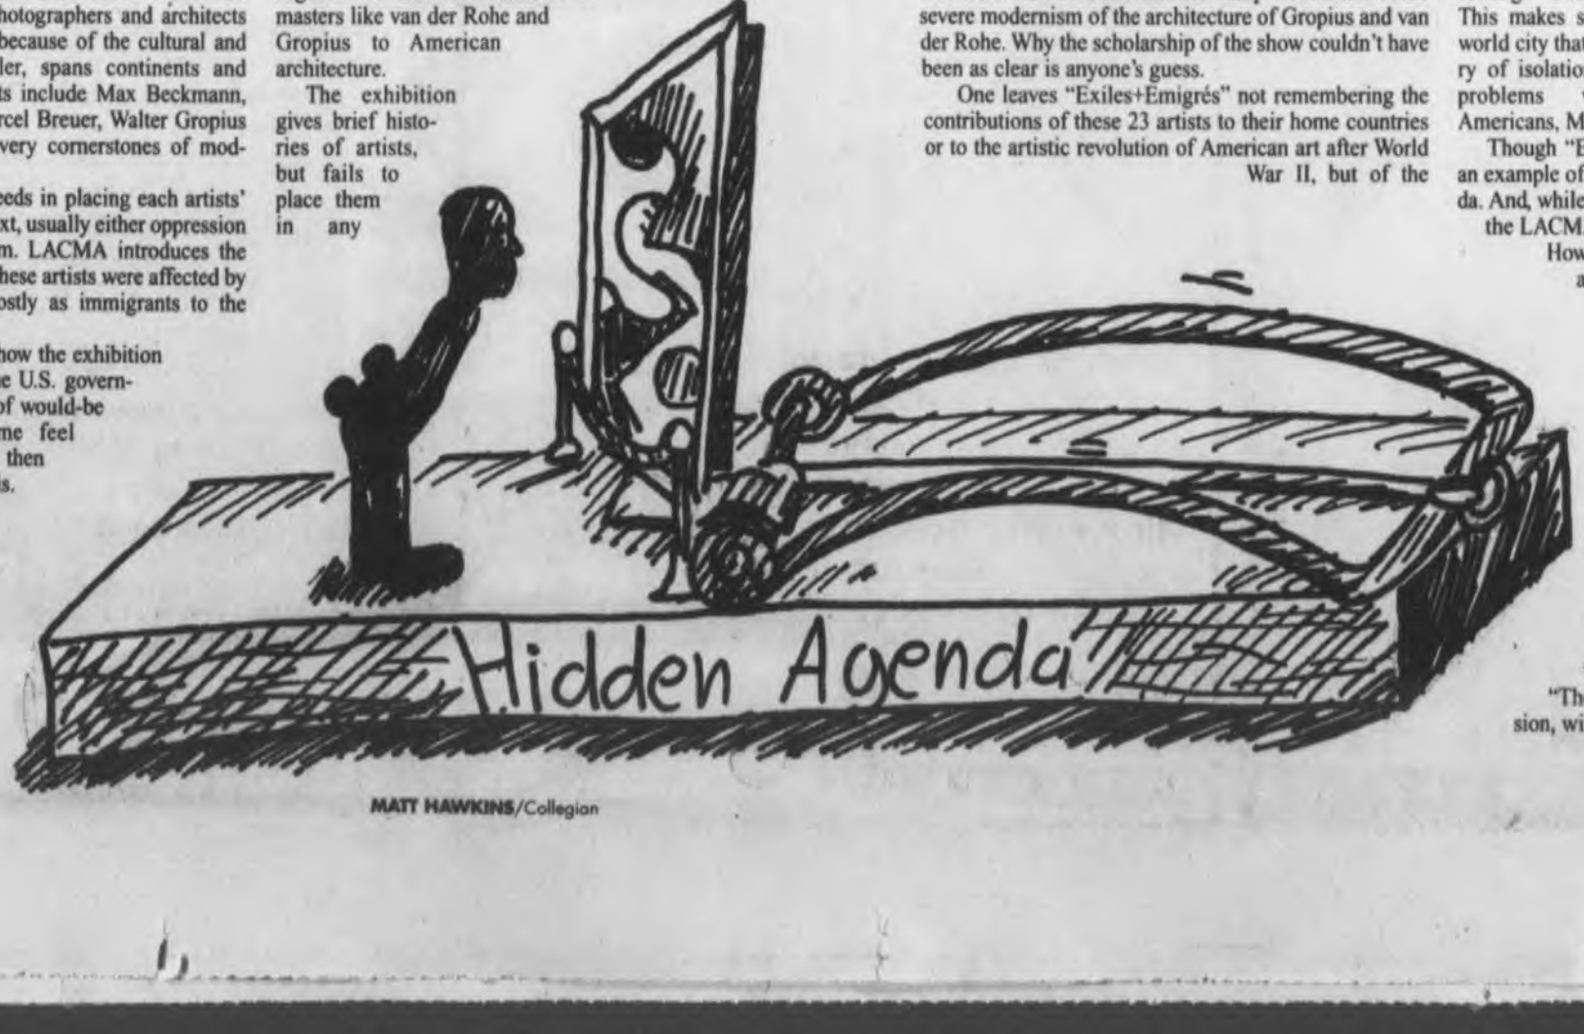
One leaves "Exiles+Emigrés" not remembering the contributions of these 23 artists to their home countries or to the artistic revolution of American art after World War II, but of the harsh life of an immigrant fleeing Hitler in the 1930s. Although this alone would make for an interesting exhibition, it is wrong to use artists as the stepping-stone for pointmaking.

Barron also explains how the show parallels contemporary American isolationist feelings toward immigrants. This makes sense in L.A., a world city that has a sad history of isolationism and racial problems with African Americans, Mexicans and Asian Americans.

Though "Exiles+Emigrés" is a fascinating exhibition, it's an example of using art for advancing a hidden political agenda. And, while I agree wholeheartedly with the agenda, I think the LACMA show sets a dangerous precedent.

How much should an art exhibition interpret history, and how much should it interpret art? There's no question one informs the other — to what degree is left to the viewer.

Perhaps K-State can answer these questions more thoroughly in its own upcoming contribution to the topic in "Austria+American: Emigrés+Exiles," occurring next week.



Events include "Perspectives on Austrian Architecture" at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Big 12 Room. After this discussion, there will be a reception for an exhibit of drawings and photographs of artists in exile 9 p.m. in Seaton Square and Weigel Library. "The New Renaissance," another discussion session, will be at 4 p.m., April 24, in Denison 222.

International WEEK

International fashion show gives children their turn on the runway

JILL JARSULIC
staff reporter

Children of international students strutted their stuff Tuesday afternoon in the Union courtyard as part of the celebration of International Week.

Zaire, Pakistan, the Philippines, Bangladesh and Nigeria were represented in the children's fashion show.

Manuri Nakkawita, vice president of the International Coordinating Council, said the council decided to have the show over the noon hour so the children could participate.

"We have a lot of young international students, and we thought it would be a good idea to get the kids involved, but so many of them are in school. We thought we'd dedicate one of the noon hours to the kids," Nakkawita said.

While some of the children gracefully crossed the stage, a few were a little skittish.

"We had to practice for a long time one night," Nakkawita said. "It was hard to convince them to walk all the way across."

Nakkawita said some children dropped out of the show at the last minute because they were too shy to do it.

After the fashion show, 8-year-old Wen Cai played keyboard for the crowd that had gathered.

"We called lots of people, and some didn't have kids for the fashion show, but they had children that could do other things," Nakkawita said.

Special Olympic athletes to compete in track competition at CiCo Park

YVONNE PEARSON
staff reporter

Area Special Olympic athletes will compete in a track meet from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday at CiCo Park.

Special Olympics is a sports organization for mentally-disabled children and adults.

Most of the athletes are recruited from schools and group homes with a small percentage coming from the general public.

"With Special Olympics, it's not so much winning as it is participation," Debbi DeVenuto, area 3 director of Special Olympics, said.

DeVenuto said Special Olympic participants take more than medals and ribbons home.

"They get activity, joy, physical fitness, self-esteem, family involvement and interaction with others," DeVenuto said. "It gives them a whole new world that sometimes isn't even open to us."

Saturday's track meet will look like any other meet, with a few exceptions.

"It looks like your standard track meet," Brian Smith, assistant area 3 director of Special Olympics, said. "You'll see, when you get down to the detailed level, there's a lot of things geared towards disabilities, so everyone can compete."

Some of the events geared toward disabilities are standing long jump, softball and tennis ball throw and wheelchair races. There will also be specially designed courses with skills geared toward electric wheelchairs.

Field events will take place in the morning and the majority of the running races will be in the afternoon.

Volunteers are important for events because many of the athletes need a one-on-one environment, Smith said.

"It would probably be one of the most rewarding things you'd ever see," DeVenuto said. "Very few don't find it a heart-warming experience. You learn a lot of self-appreciation for what you have."

Flint Hills Breadbasket requests furniture donations for local families

Don't throw away that old lumpy mattress. Don't haul the sofa home for the summer another time.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket is accepting unwanted furniture for local families in need.

"People who were homeless and are trying to get back on their feet are in need of furniture," April Hamilton, family support coordinator, said.

Beds are the most commonly needed item. Tables, chairs and other furniture items are also in demand, she said.

Flint Hills Breadbasket has a list of people who are in need of furniture, and they are trying to find these items for them.

"Lots of college students will be leaving," Hamilton said, "and we thought that it would be a good time for them to donate items rather than throw them away.

There are a lot of people out there that would be grateful for that old lumpy mattress."

"We would rather they brought the donations in, but we can make arrangements to pick things up," Hamilton said.

The Share Center, an organization operated by Manhattan High School students, will take any unwanted clothing items.

The Share Center, 905 Yuma St., is open Monday through Friday from 3:30 to 6 p.m.

Triple murder suspect taken into custody

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Mo. —The girlfriend of triple murder suspect Alis Ben Johns was ushered into court in shackles Tuesday—apparently ready to help the authorities Johns had eluded for the past 5-1/2 months.

But Beverly Guehrer-McComb left tight-lipped after her attorney advised her not to talk.

"We just couldn't get an agreement with her attorney," Benton County Sheriff Glenn Spencer said after a courthouse lunch of hamburgers, fries and soda with Guehrer-McComb.

Guehrer-McComb, 37, and Johns, 36, were taken into custody late Monday after keeping hundreds of searchers — who were armed with infrared scanners, night goggles, dogs and helicopters — at bay for six weeks.

Johns was shot once in the abdomen by a Missouri Water Patrol officer outside a burglarized house as he held a rifle to the head of Guehrer-McComb. He was in serious but stable condition Tuesday in Bothwell Regional Medical Center in Sedalia, Mo.

Johns was charged in October with murder in Pulaski County and is suspected, but not charged, in two killings in Camden and Newton counties.

Guehrer-McComb, whose fingerprints were found on a coffee cup in a home broken into during the manhunt, was arraigned Tuesday on one count of burglary.

Two officers helped the frail woman, wearing an orange jail jumper and sandals, down the courthouse stairs.

Authorities said she and Johns broke into homes every day or so to steal enough food and supplies to survive in the dense Ozarks woods.

More charges were expected against both.

After a judge explained the burglary charge, Guehrer-McComb said, "I'm going to plead guilty."

Associate Circuit Judge Larry Burditt told her he could not accept a plea on first appearance. She was assigned public defender John Lutman, of Buffalo, and scheduled to appear again April 15.

The sheriff and other officers interviewed Guehrer-McComb after the arraignment, but she changed her mind about cooperating with their investigation, Spencer said.

"I guess once she talked to her attorney, that attitude changed," Spencer said. "She was pretty quiet."

Lutman said he'd give any client the same advice.

Johns was charged with first-degree murder in the death of Tommy Stewart, 32, of Dixon. He is suspected in the Feb. 28 killing of farmer Leonard Voyles, 69, of Richland, and Wilma Bragg, 57, of Newton County the following weekend. Both were shot and their homes burglarized.

Guehrer-McComb was believed to be with Johns since the end of February. She was being held on $100,000 bond in Henry County jail.

Their capture won praise for the Water Patrol, founded in 1959 and often in the long shadow of the larger, older and better-financed Highway Patrol.

In Jefferson City Tuesday, Sen. Jim Mathewson, D-Sedalia and a native of the Benton County area where the manhunt was centered, told colleagues he wants to shake the hand of rookie officer Erik Gottman, who shot Johns with his .40-caliber Glock service pistol.

"We want to bring that young man in here and thank him personally," Mathewson said.

Gottman, 24, and Capt. Bill Swineburg, 50, who sought to distract Johns as he used his girlfriend as a shield, were kept unavailable for interviews. It was Swineburg's hunch that prompted the men to look again at the vacant house where the couple was found.

Water Patrol Col. Larry Whitten said both men were on indefinite administrative leave with pay until an outside investigation of the shooting is complete. The men have also been offered counseling, which Whitten said is standard procedure.

"Any time you are involved in a shooting situation, there is a trauma involved," Whitten said. "I know it sounds easy and maybe everybody wants to do this, but they don't understand what you have to live with afterwards."

Residents of this lakes-area retirement community breathed easier.

"It's nice now," said Sandra Pankey, who watched Guehrer-McComb leave the courthouse. "We can come to town. We can go out and walk, and we don't

K-STATE head basketball coach Tom Asbury gets the cold shoulder from an official after a questionable call during the Cats' loss to Texas Tech in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament in Kansas City, Mo.

Asbury has eyes set on combo-type player to fill few voids

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

Today officially starts the signing season of college basketball recruiting, and K-State coach Tom Asbury is looking for a few players.

"We're just plugging away," Asbury said. "We're still a ways away from any kind of decision though. We got a late start, but we don't have that many holes to fill anyway."

Even though today is the first day of signing, Asbury said he was pretty sure they wouldn't sign anyone today.

"Because we had such the late start, I know we're not going to sign anyone this early," he said."

To date, K-State has just one early signer — point guard Adam Lopez. Lopez, a 5'11", 155-pound point guard from St. Mary's High School in Phoenix, signed last fall with K-State before enjoying a banner season at St. Mary's, where he averaged 28 points, six assists, three steals and four rebounds per game during his 26-4 senior campaign.

Lopez is not the only point guard on K-State's list. Returning next year are Aaron Swartzendruber and Chris Griffin, who spent most of their time on the court at the point-guard position.

Next year, Duane Davis, who was a sophomore redshirt last season, will be eligible to play at another shooting guard spot.

In style of play, Asbury compared Davis to point guard Tyronn Lue of Nebraska who averaged 20-plus points per game last season.

"He may not be able to score like that, but he's a pretty good comparison," Asbury said.

Asbury said he has his eye on a couple of guys, but said he could not mention their names because it would be an NCAA violation.

"We're on several guys," he said. "It certainly isn't a long list, again because of the late start."

While out recruiting, Asbury said his main focus was finding that all-around combo player.

"It won't be a point guard," he said. "We're looking for more of a small forward or combo type of player."

With the loss of guard Mark Young, Asbury is left to fill that void, and he now has the scholarship to divvy out.

Of Young's departure, Asbury said he doubted Young would be drafted into the NBA, but his fortune lay overseas.

"I don't think he'll be drafted, and I think he knows that," Asbury said. "If he wants to make any decent money he'll have to play overseas, but there may be a small chance with free agency."

Rumors abound about others leaving the program for basketball elsewhere and even more rumors abound about Asbury having to pull scholarships to make room for others to come in. Asbury made it clear that he wanted a halt to any rumors.

"Manhattan is the rumor capital of the world. It is also the false rumor capital of the world," he said. "I have talked to all the guys and so far what they have told me is that no one else is leaving."

> "We're just plugging away. We're still a ways away from any kind of decision though. We got a late start, but we don't have that many holes to fill anyway."

Women's tennis team to take swing at Jayhawks

SHANE MCCORMICK
staff writer

The K-State women's tennis team will travel across Interstate 70 to face Kansas today at 3 p.m. The Wildcats, 7-8 overall, will try to end a six-match losing streak against the Jayhawks.

The Hawks swept both duals from the Cats last season, taking the first match 4-0. The second meeting of the two brought on a close 5-4 decision that went down to the final match in the NCAA Tournament.

The Hawks bring an experienced squad into this spring season with five returning senior starters. But the Hawks did suffer a big blow earlier in the season: Out for the year with an injury is senior Kylie Hunt, who finished last season as one of the country's top players with a 24-9 record.

"It's a whole different story with Hunt out of the lineup," Cat coach Steve Bietau said. "You're looking at a player who beat everyone at No. 1 singles and No. 1 doubles a lot."

With Hunt out of the lineup, senior Christie Sim has taken over the No. 1 singles position for the Hawks. Last season, Sim and K-State junior Yana Dorodnova split their two matches.

In their first conference meeting, Sim took the match in straight sets, 6-4, 6-4. But it was a different story in the second match in the NCAA Tournament. In that match, Dorodnova made a comeback to take the match in three sets and keep the Cats' hopes alive.

One of the newcomers to the Hawks squad this year is freshman Brooke Chiller. Chiller has enjoyed success this season, moving up to the No. 2 singles position in just her first year.

"They picked up a good player in Chiller. They have gained some strength in the middle and lower half of their lineup they didn't have before," Bietau said. "They are a quality team. I would say they are one of the top four teams in the conference right now."

Arnold Palmer back at Master's

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUGUSTA, Ga. — He's here again, launching drives with his familiar but peculiar lurching swing.

He's hitching up his britches, signing autographs, smiling and waving and making eye contact with the gallery.

He's brought numerous putters trying to find one that works. It doesn't matter that by all odds he shouldn't be here. At the age of 67, he still thinks he can win.

Was there ever any doubt Arnold Daniel Palmer would whip cancer and play in his 43rd consecutive Masters?

There wasn't any doubt was there, Arnie?

"I was concerned," was the way the indestructible man put it. "I had time to look at some old Masters films. You can't help but think about the highlights of your life. Being here and playing is important to me."

Palmer underwent prostate cancer surgery Jan. 15. Forty-three days later, he swung a club. Almost two months later, on March 20, Palmer played his first competitive round in his own Bay Hill Invitational.

Forget that he shot 81. What he did was shoot cancer down.

A Masters without Palmer would be unthinkable. Only Palmer thinks he can win. But just to see him play on the grounds of Augusta National Golf Club is an annual spring rite of renewal — much like spring training in baseball.

He owns four Masters jackets and the hearts of the fans.

"I want to play good," is the way he puts it. "My goal is to win. I never came here without that thought."

But what if he couldn't have played? What if he couldn't have strolled among the azaleas and the dogwoods?

"I would have missed the walk up No. 1 fairway," Palmer said. "I would have gone anyway and enjoyed the championship dinner.

"I sort of like looking down on the grass rather than looking up at it."

For Palmer to have almost missed the Masters made

Snyder looking toward fall season

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

K-STATE COACH Bill Snyder directs linebacker Deshawn Fogle during a game last season at Wagner Field. With spring practices starting today, Snyder is concentrating on devloping a quicker, more potent offense. Also on Synder's list to do, is finding a quarterback to replace Brian Kavanagh — a task Snyder said won't be easy.

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

With spring football practices slated to start today, Coach Bill Snyder remains adamant about what lies ahead.

With the loss of defensive end Nyle Wiren, wide-receiver Kevin Lockett and defensive backs Chris Canty and Mario Smith, Snyder refuses to say that this year is a year of rebuilding.

"We won't make reference to it. We don't want to do it," Snyder said. "We want to make progress. It's true, we will be young and inexperienced, but I don't perceive it as trying to rebuild this program."

It remains to be seen how the Wildcats will fare in the season to come, but the main thing Snyder will concentrate on in the spring is making every player at every position better.

"Our preparation during the spring is to try and get every player better," Snyder said. "We certainly have some weaknesses — like replacing playmakers — but we have some strengths too, and the main one is our depth. Our depth is better not just in numbers, but also in quality."

With the return of running back Mike Lawrence, Marlon Charles, Eric Hickson, Brian Goolsby and Matt Gangwish, Snyder and the rest of the coaching staff will concentrate on running the ball more this year.

"To run the ball better, but not run the ball more will be our main concern," Snyder said. "It's efficiency and effectiveness — if we can do that, we can run more."

Snyder said there have been no big position changes other than moving former right-guard Kendyl Jacox into the center spot to replace Jason Johnson.

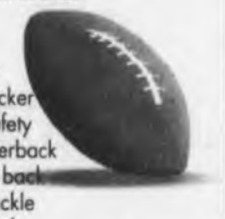
"At this particular point in time, that is the most drastic change," he said. "But Kendyl's been there. He's played backup to Jason Johnson. It remains to be seen but he has shown that he can play there."

Snyder said one of his main concerns during the offseason is finding a quarterback who can fit into K-State's system.

On the billing right now are five quarterbacks, only four of whom will compete in spring practices.

Sophomore Jonathan Beasley is the only retuning letterman who found ample time at the position last year as backup to Brian Kavanagh. Beasley saw action in eight games last year as a true freshman but has some competition this year.

Beasley said he felt fortunate last year to be under the watchful eye of Kavanagh, who constantly helped Beasley with the ins and outs of the position.



"The job's wide open right now," he said. "Kav helped me out a lot last year, and I got a better feel when I got here because of that. Kav and I would sit around last year, and he would tell me the strengths and weaknesses."

Snyder said sophomore Adam Helm and junior Casey Vidricksen will also get a clean shot at the spot in the spring. With the return of Cody Lee Smith, who has been suffering from a rare stomach disorder, and highly touted junior college transfer Michael Bishop, who will not be on campus until next fall, the competition for the starting spot will be tough.

"Whoever our quarterback is is going to have to accept the whole package," Snyder said. "But whoever comes out in the spring will have to compete with Michael Bishop in the fall."

K-State football coach Bill Snyder announced Tuesday the following players were selected by their teammates to serve as representatives for the 1997 Wildcat football season.

galleries on Tuesday realize what they almost missed.

They turned out by the thousands to watch him play a practice round.

Palmer, always the blue-collar hero with the common touch, invited U.S. Mid-Amateur champion John Miller, a beer salesman, to play along in his foursome with Fuzzy Zoeller and Tom Watson.

Palmer made a nice 10-footer on the ninth green and said to the crowd: "Who said I can't putt? Maybe I've found it."

As he walked along the gallery ropes fans slapped his back and shook his hand.

Later, he confessed that he and Watson skinned Zoeller and "Spider" Miller for a few bucks.

"We won a little money off Fuzzy and Spider," Palmer said. "I really enjoyed it. I made it all 18 holes then felt good enough to hit a bucket of balls afterward. That pleased me."

Particularly his tee shot on the devilish, Par-3 No. 12.

Palmer's 8-iron over the water finished a few feet from the hole, and he made the putt for a birdie deuce.

"It reminded me of an 8-iron I hit in a playoff with Gary Player and Dow Finsterwald in 1962," Palmer said. "I had a little flashback. I hit it close and made a 2. That was 35 years ago."

And he's still hitting the same club.

STUDENT SEASON TICKETS

New!
There will be a change in the sale and distribution of student season tickets beginning in the fall of 1997. The change is caused by the possibility of the demand for student season tickets exceeding the supply. There are 9,200 tickets available to Kansas State students. In an effort to be fair and equitable, the allocation of football student season tickets will be based on class standing with a preference to those students who purchase a combination ticket.

The allocation of football student season tickets will be filled in the following sequence:
1. Returning students who choose to purchase the combination season football and reduced rate season men's basketball ticket.*
2. Returning seniors and graduate students.
3. Returning juniors.
4. Returning sophomores.
5. New students, transfer students and returning students who fail to sign up before the spring deadline.

*The combination ticket includes six home football games and 12 home basketball games that occur while school is in session.

To Order
When: During pre-enrollment, April 9–25, 1997
Where: Willard Hall
How: Complete the appropriate application*
Cost: Football season ticket only.....$60
Basketball season ticket only....$66
Combination season ticket.....$120
*Athletic Department will validate orders as to class standing with Registrar's office.

To Pick Up
When: August 25–September 5, 1997
Where: Ahearn Fieldhouse, east lobby

ICAT
As in the past, student season ticket holders (GA) may purchase an ICAT membership at the time of ticket pick-up. For a donation of $30, the ICAT member will receive priority seating, a commemorative T-shirt, discounts at Aggieville merchants, and invitations to special events. (ICAT limited to first 2,000 students.)

Important!
1. Returning students must order in the spring to receive their priority. Students not meeting deadlines will be placed with new student group.
2. Returning students purchasing combination tickets receive priority regardless of class standing.
3. Returning students can order now and pay later by charging their season tickets to their fall bill.
4. Deadlines—To order: April 9–23, 1997; to pick up: August 25–September 5, 1997

In a burst of movement, the dancers of the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater took the stage of McCain Auditorium Tuesday night, leaving the audience breathless and awestruck.

The dance theater was founded by Alvin Ailey with the idea that dance should be available to everyone.

Incorporating dancers from different ethnic backgrounds enriched the performance, reasserting the dance theater's claim as an ambassador of dance.

Art Review

The first selection, "The River," was choreographed by Ailey in 1970, and restaged by Masazumi Chaya. Ailey worked with Duke Ellington, a renowned jazz artist, who created the original score to "The River."

The performance began with a single dancer curled up on the stage. With graceful extensions, he rose. Five couples emerged, dancing sometimes in tandem. The jazzy undertones of the music fit the dance style.

In one segment of "The River," titled "Meander," Solange Sandy, Edward Franklin and Amos J. Machanic Jr. performed a trio. Sandy danced with both men, almost in a courtship dance. Sandy's wispy skirt caught the air, never still as she danced.

Franklin and Machanic dragged Sandy across the stage, her toes pointed and dangling.

In "Giggling Rapids," Karine Plantadit-Bageot and Jonathan Phelps presented a much more upbeat side of the river. With rapid movements, Phelps strutted and leapt across the stage as Plantadit-Bageot tiptoed across the stage, watching.

The movements were quick, but they appeared effortless, and the dancers never lost their grace or poise.

Each movement was in perfect communication with the music.

In "Lake," Linda-Denise Evans danced to the music of the reedy wind instrumentals, and the low, dark sounds of a cello. Using broad, spacious movements, Evans enveloped the stage, encompassing all of it.

The music changed, adding spice as Evans' movements became sprightly. Bernard Gaddis joined Evans' dance hesitantly. As they danced together, Evans' feet hardly touched the ground. Gaddis lifted Evans' leg, holding it straight up as she turned.

Other couples joined, holding hands and encircling the couple as they embraced.

The "Falls" began with male dancers spinning and leaping across the stage. Their movements were sharp and contrasting.

They danced separately in a fiery passionate dance that had them turning different directions, yet still in tandem with each other.

"Vortex" was sharper and more defined. Soloist Vikkia Lambert performed each movement as if it had its own start and finish, yet the movements were loosely connected.

"Twin Cities" started as a duet between Toni Pierce and Leonard Meek. The dancers each took different sides of the stage, dancing in their own spotlight, never leaving their confined space. Despite the limited space, the movements never looked constrained, but always full and complete.

The dancers reached out to each other, each becoming aware of the other for the first time.

A spotlight formed in the center, connecting the two dots so that the dancers could step across and meet in the middle of the stage. Pierce stepped onto Meek's knee, and Meek lifted Pierce and rolled her very slowly over his back as her legs fanned out in a circle to meet the floor.

"Suite Otis," the second section of the performance, was a tribute to Otis Redding. The dancers used his music in their expressive, and sometimes humorous, performance.

The women wore hot pink outfits, with a single female soloist in a black wedding dress, and danced to "Just One More Day."

They danced in wide turns, their skirts flaring. Flirtatious and bossy, they pantomimed lecturing the men, who rough-housed and joked.

In a comical performance, a couple danced cheek-to-cheek to the song "Can't Turn You Loose."

Their broad movements and poses won laughter from the audience.

In a dance to "I Can't Get No Satisfaction," the women swished their skirts in circles and flashed their panties. The men strutted across the stage in quick strides.

Their lack of synchronization was sometimes disturbing and easily distracting.

The third part of the performance was a segment called "Revelations," choreographed by Ailey in 1960. The music was traditional spirituals.

"I Been 'Buked" featured a group of dancers who formed a triangle in the center of the stage, moving together as one body. Their movements were quiet and worshipful, and then they would burst into movement, to join again in the triangle.

"Fix Me Jesus" exhibited beautiful lifts in a duet by Mucuy Bolles and Don Bellamy.

Sliding his arms underneath her, Bellamy lifted Bolles straight up off the ground, her feet dangling as he turned.

With one arm connected, their bodies facing different directions, Bellamy held Bolles inches off of the ground.

Bellamy slipped to the ground, and Bolles followed. Cradled between his legs, her back facing his chest, Bellamy lifted her up and turned her and held Bolles aloft above his body.

"Rocka My Soul in the Bosom of Abraham" was the final segment of the show. The women wore yellow dresses with wide-brimmed hats. Their feet parted wide, they immodestly lifted and extended their legs as they sat on wooden stools. The men danced in front of them as the women turned their backs, fanning themselves furiously.

Standing, the women turned to join the men, dancing a final chorus filled with kicks and turns.

Perhaps the finest dance company to grace McCain's stage, their performance Tuesday night earned the Ailey dancers a standing ovation from the audience.

Moon Seven Times and Octavia bring their music to fans

LIVE AT CHANCE

REVIEWS BY JOHN HENDERSON

Moon Seven Times

The dimly lit stage at Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon was graced Monday night by Moon Seven Times in a concert co-sponsored by KSDB-FM 91.9 and Rusty's. The band followed Octavia with a 17-song set stretching into the wee hours of Tuesday morning.

The band featured songs from its third album, "Sunburnt," released by Roadrunner Records.

Lynn Canfield said the audience for the Moon Seven Times experiences something different from her experience as lead vocalist.

Music Review

"I don't hear the same thing from inside," she said.

The first three members of the band — Canfield, guitarist Henry Frayne and drummer Brendan Gamble, sort of blew together from separate projects in and around Champaign, Ill. Later, bassist Don Gerard and most recently, guitarist Todd Fletcher signed on.

Champaign is home to the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, where Frayne and Fletcher still go to school.

The name came from an encyclopedia of religions. A record company gave them a day to come up with a name. Before that they had gone without.

"We were just thumbing through, and Lynn found this phrase," Gamble said. "I think the whole sentence went, 'Tip your turban to the moon seven times.'"

Live, Moon Seven Times varied. Songs were hard and insistent, such as the bass-driven "Through the Roses," or shy and pensive like the beginning of "Some of Them Burn." The restless "Further" was about as heavy as the band got. "Crybaby" at first sounded like the wail of a child, close to searing. Then it consoled itself.

The haunting echoes of Frayne's guitar were measured by the punchy rhythms of Gamble and Gerard, and collected by Fletcher. The instrumentals were chorus to Canfield's breezy alto, bringing the gradual, warm glow where she danced.

The band gave away tiny booklets, such as "The Moon Seven Times Sticker Fun Activity Book!," and "Rules of the Road." They were mostly filled with doodles and sketchy drawings by Canfield.

The latter booklet describes how the band might find a place for Fletcher, the new member, on the tour. Suggestions include between equipment in a U-Haul, or shipped via Federal Express.

Canfield acknowledged that no music can be unique, and that maybe the band has some things in common with Cowboy Junkies and the Sundays. They've been compared to them in the past.

"I don't even listen to that kind of music, though," she said. "I'm more into old jazz and R&B ... or scarier music, like Tom Waits."

The band is on a tour of the Midwest, with 27 shows in 15 days. Some of the shows will be acoustic sets in Borders Bookstores. Frayne said he appreciates the support, even though the band traditionally plays electric sets.

"In a pinch, it's a great opportunity to play live," he said.

Canfield said the band members will play in the stores to keep Borders happy, and in clubs to keep themselves happy.

Joe Montgomery, station manager of DB92, said the station has played the band's music at times, so it made sense that they would be the group to co-sponsor the concert.

"It's been a long time since anyone (in Manhattan) has taken a chance on lesser-known bands," he said.

Canfield said she could relate to Manhattan's struggling music scene, having started in Champaign with only a little community support and fickle fans.

"I think it's hard everywhere to do live music," she said. "There are other forms of entertainment that people prefer."

She said on the way into town she heard a announcer on DB92 offer free therapy sessions, and was impressed.

"I thought, 'Wow, full service,'" she said.

Octavia

After hearing Octavia play Monday night in Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, maybe there is something in the name worth reading into.

The three members of Octavia, Jason Hammel on bass and main vocals, Dan Moore on guitar and Stacy Hoobler on drums, are like a barely contained blast of raw power, controlled enough not to do too much damage.

Music Review

Hammel said he considered Octavia to represent power of some kind, but not really.

"Octavia was a queen, and well, she was powerful," he said. "I don't want to read too much into it."

Octavia opened for the Moon Seven Times to a packed house at a show co-sponsored by Rusty's and KSDB-FM 91.9.

The band started a year ago with Hammel and Moore, who were going to school at the University of Kansas in Lawrence. Hoobler joined later through an advertisement.

Octavia has a collection of older songs such as "Carbon and Dust," and "Source 4's," and a more recent 7-inch single, "Everything Angel," released by Dean's List Records.

"I'm in pre-med at KU," Hammel said, "so this is kind of a release for me."

Up front, the tall, lanky Hammel had to fight the release to keep in check, dancing in place at the mike, leaning forward with his eyes closed. An odd contrast was Moore, who played with his back to the crowd the whole set.

"I think he does that for focus," Hammel said. "He doesn't want any distraction from the crowd."

Moore obliged the crowd with a few flamboyances, staggering in a circle, mirrored by Hammel between vocals. The two just managed to keep the necks of their instruments from hitting each other.

Hoobler kept a quick pace with rhythms so complex it was a wonder she didn't run the beat aground.

Not many drummers would try such a dynamic style, but she made it work.

At one point during the set, one of Moore's strings broke. Hoobler and Hammel changed positions, both singing vocals, with Hammel at drums and Hoobler up front on bass.

What better way to show the talent and ability of a young band than the way they control for accidents in a workable, low-tech way? Not every band can afford spare instruments, but the show must still go on.

"We've practiced that a few times and have a pretty good idea what vocals we'll sing," Hammel said of the impromptu duet. "We always hope it doesn't happen."

Running throughout Octavia's performance was a great sense of cohesiveness. Individually, all three might have seemed too chaotic, but as a band, their practiced anarchy was obvious. Octavia had its own sound.

"We just like playing together," Hammel said. "If it sounds good to us, we'll try it."

President Clinton to issue apology for victims of syphilis experiments

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government will formally apologize to the black men in Tuskegee, Ala., whose syphilis went untreated for years as part of a federal study, the White House said Tuesday.

President Clinton will issue the apology soon, said White House spokeswoman Mary Ellen Glynn.

The decision was announced as four survivors of the experiments came forward in Alabama to demand an apology. The White House did not say whether that was a factor.

"The president feels it's a blight on our record and it should be rectified," Glynn said.

The government has moved toward an apology for the Tuskegee experiment in recent weeks, spurred in part by Clinton's 1995 apology to victims of secret radiation experiments during the Cold War.

In the Tuskegee experiment, the U.S. Public Health Service withheld treatment from 399 men between 1932 and 1972 to study how syphilis spread and how it killed.

The men were not told they had the disease and were not given penicillin, the standard treatment since 1947. The study, made public in a 1972 article by the Associated Press, forced changes in government research practices, but it also generated a mistrust of public health efforts among black Americans that lingers to this day.

U.S. officials never apologized for the grim research, which was the subject of a stage production and a recent HBO film, "Miss Ever's Boys." A class-action lawsuit was settled out of court, and the government has paid roughly $10 million to victims and their heirs since 1973.

"I lived through it, and I thank the Lord for it," said Herman Shaw, 94, a farmer who joined the study in 1932 thinking it would give him access to up-to-date health care.

Shaw said an apology would be a great consolation. He also would like a monument in honor of the participants "so our children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren could see what we went through."

There are eight surviving participants — the youngest is 87 years old — and four of them met Tuesday at a church in Notasulga, Ala., that once served as an intake station for the study.

The survivors are anxious to receive an apology and a meeting with Clinton, said their attorney, Fred Gray.

"In 1932, these men were taken advantage of by being used as human guinea pigs. Their lives were placed in jeopardy ... without their knowledge or consent," Gray said. "They are now requesting that an appropriate apology be made."

Gray spoke before the White House announced its decision.

White House aides were working Tuesday on a suitable way to issue the apology and on whether there should be further compensation, said an official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Shuttle Columbia lands early due to defective part

▶ Safe return
Astronauts piloted space shuttle Columbia back to Earth Tuesday cutting the 16-day mission down to four.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space shuttle Columbia and a disappointed crew returned safely to Earth Tuesday and ended a science mission that was chopped from 16 days to four because of a dangerously defective generator.

Columbia touched down on the concrete runway at 2:33 p.m.

Commander James Halsell Jr. had to land the 235,500-pound spaceship — one of the heaviest ever — with one-third less power than usual because of the faulty electric generator.

The two remaining generators apparently worked fine during descent.

Columbia almost ended up at the backup landing site in California.

Worried about high wind, Mission Control waited until practically the last minute before giving Halsell the go-ahead to fire the shuttle braking rockets for a Florida touchdown. Flight controllers had expected the crosswind to be right at the safety limit of 17 mph.

The radio link between Columbia and Mission Control seemed quieter than usual as the shuttle descended through the atmosphere.

A cockpit camera showed TV viewers a live pilot's eye-view of the landing, with reflections of cockpit dials making a pattern of green dots on the screen as the runway came into view.

Flight controllers waited until the shuttle rolled to a safe stop before welcoming the seven astronauts home.

There were none of the usual congratulations on the mission, only a compliment for the crew's great landing.

NASA cut short the $500 million-plus mission after voltage steadily dropped in one of three electric generators, called fuel cells, that supply power for essentially all systems.

"I'm just real sorry it wasn't a longer mission," crewman Roger Crouch told researchers on the ground Monday night. "Too bad it had to end this way."

Flight controllers approved Columbia's launch on Friday even though the generator was giving abnormal readings 12 hours before liftoff.

They based their decision on similar voltage jumps during the past two countdowns for Atlantis, said Patrick Simpkins, NASA's fluids chief for shuttle processing.

In those instances, the fuel cell ended up working fine in orbit.

But two days into Columbia's flight, Mission Control ordered the crew to turn off fuel cell No. 2, which was losing voltage, and arranged an early landing.

Such a generator problem could trigger an explosion.

NASA said although the astronauts were in no immediate danger, all three fuel cells must be operating for a shuttle to remain in orbit.

Determining what went wrong with the fuel cell won't be easy because any evidence likely was tainted when it was shut down, Simpkins said.

Shuttle program manager Tommy Holloway said that in retrospect, the generator should have been replaced before liftoff.

The crew only had time to make a dent in the 33 experiments involving fire, metals, crystals and plants planned for the flight.

The astronauts were able to ignite just 14 of 142 fires that should have been set to see how flames spread in weightlessness, NASA mission scientist Michael Robinson said. Six of 25 tests were conducted in a furnace used to study the diffusion of liquid metals and four of 20 were completed in another metals experiment.

To cheer the astronauts up, Mission Control borrowed a leaf from David Letterman and sent them up a list of Top 10 reasons why they are really coming home early.

Among them: Crew forgot to do their taxes before they left. Crew left stove on back in Houston. Hale-Bopp comet aliens got way too close for comfort. And: 16-day mission, April Fool!

Ozone depletion detected over North Pole

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The lowest levels of springtime ozone ever detected over the North Pole have been mapped by instruments on a series of satellites, scientists announced Tuesday.

Ozone levels in late March and early April over the Arctic were 40 percent lower than the average March measurements made from 1979 to 1982, said Pawan K. Bhartia of NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md.

A year ago, measurements detected an ozone hole in the North Atlantic that was about 24 percent less dense than the 1979-82 period, the space agency announced.

Ozone is a natural atmospheric gas that acts as a shield against the ultraviolet radiation of the sun. The gas is eroded away by certain industrial chemicals, principally chlorofluorocarbons that are used as coolants and cleaners.

Under international treaty, the compounds are being phased out of use in most countries of the world, but the effect of chemicals already released to the atmosphere is blamed by most scientists for the thinning of the ozone layer.

Unshielded ultraviolet radiation can cause skin cancer in humans and can destroy some microscopic sea life that is thought important to the natural food chain.

Although the Arctic ozone has thinned, the loss is not nearly as severe near the North Pole as it is over the South Pole during the southern hemisphere spring in September and October.

Chemical reactions that destroy the ozone result from the combination of industrial chemicals, frigid temperatures and sunlight. These conditions usually occur for a brief period as the sun makes its first springtime appearance over the poles after winter's darkness.

NASA uses instruments aboard U.S. and Japanese satellites to measure the density and distribution of ozone. Measurements also are taken by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

On March 26, one instrument detected an ozone concentration of less than one part per million at an altitude of 12.4 miles above the Hudson's Bay area of northern Canada. Normal ozone concentrations are 3 to 4 parts per million.

On March 17, a weather bureau instrument measured ozone over Barrow, Alaska at less than 300 Dobson units, which is a measure of the gas. The March average for the region has been 413 Dobson units for the past 10 years, David Hofmann, of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, said.

NASA said the area of thinned ozone covered about 2 million square miles of the Arctic region.

Natural atmospheric ozone is found in a thin layer some 6 to 18 miles above the Earth. There is a global ozone thickness average of 300 Dobson units, which is about an eighth inch, or the thickness of two stacked pennies.

At its worst, the Antarctic ozone hole amounts to about 100 Dobson units, or about 1/25 of an inch.

Evening class option provides alternative to closed class problem

JASON ELLIS
staff reporter

If closed classes are a problem, consider attending evening college at K-State.

As an experiment last fall, K-State offered high-demand classes and closed classes as evening college, said David Stewart, continuing education's assistant dean of program development and summer school.

Evening college offered 16 classes last fall, and that number is expected to triple for fall 1997.

"We will add sections as well as increase the number of new courses," Stewart said.

All courses offered will be as applicable to degrees as their daytime counterparts.

The possibility of adding bachelor's degrees obtainable solely through evening college does exist, Stewart said, but that is still in the development process.

"There is an interest and a demand to be able to earn a degree through evening college," Stewart said. "We hope to continue to develop evening college to a point possible for folks to earn a degree during the evening. We try to respond to their needs."

Three sessions — two eight-week sessions and one 12-week session beginning four weeks into the semester — will be offered this fall.

All courses offered as evening college are coordinated through their respective colleges, Stewart said. Instructors for the courses are recommended by the college.

Both traditional and nontraditional students take the classes, but the enrollment is tilted to the traditional students. The classes provide a service to students on campus, Stewart said.

Playboy special edition spotlights 2 K-State students

SHAWN T. DENTON
staff reporter

The just-released College Special Edition issue of Playboy magazine features two K-State students.

Eva Krannawitter, senior in medical technology, and Heather Walke, sophomore in pre-law, appeared in the College Special Edition of the magazine.

Krannawitter said the prestige of the magazine was a factor in her decision to pose for Playboy.

"It's just so awesome to say, yeah, I can be in Playboy," Krannawitter said.

The photographs of the women were actually shot last spring when Playboy paid a visit to the campus.

"They told me when shooting that if the picture was not in the Big 12 issue, then it would be in the spring issue," Krannawitter said.

Krannawitter did not even know her picture was published until she received an interesting phone call during spring break.

"Some guy from UCLA called up at 10:30 at night to compliment the picture," Krannawitter said. "He didn't actually believe a college student was in the picture."

Krannawitter said she does not have any plans to use the magazine for any other career pursuits.

"It was a one-time thing to know that I could do it," Krannawitter said.

Contrary to popular belief, Krannawitter said, the shoot was difficult. The photographer went through 15-20 rolls of film, and the shoot lasted five hours.

"It was really hard work and completely not sexual at all," Krannawitter said. "If you look at the pictures, I'm standing on piles and piles of rocks. At the end of the shoot, my feet were cracked and bleeding."

Krannawitter said that in her hometown of Hoxie, 150 copies had already sold, and more are being ordered. Her mother had not seen the photograph but was waiting to get a copy. Krannawitter's father, however, had seen the issue.

"He thinks it's great," Krannawitter said. "The picture is an artsy picture almost, instead of a sexy one. And he's been a long-time subscriber of Playboy."

Garwick said the students gave up recess time, had shorter lunches and more homework every night.

"Making the video was fun even though I had to miss part of lunch and recess," Nagy said.

With their parents' help, the students accessed the Internet and went to the library to look for information on cell growth and finger print identification.

"My mom and dad both helped me read the books. I read the little words, and they read the big words," Quick said.

The students visited the Riley County Police Department to learn how fingerprint identification works and the Head Start Program to see a touch screen.

"The funnest part about it was we got to go to Head Start and look at the touch screen," Watkins said.

Garwick said the children benefited from working on the project.

"Even though this project sounds like a lot of work, it prepares the kids for the real world, and they learn how to work as a team and with people," she said.

new diet drug still not researched enough to prove overall effectiveness and side effects the story behind fen-phen

Editor's note: Names with an asterix have been changed to protect the individuals' identities.

A regimen of two diet medications, fenfluramine and phentermine, more popularly known as fen-phen, has become the newest dieting method. These drugs work together to decrease appetite and release serotonin to the brain, making people feel full longer.

*Shelli, a student, said she heard about fen-phen on the news and decided to do more research before she even considered taking the pills.

"I wanted to make sure these drugs were safe. I called the FDA, checked the Internet, spoke with physicians and read magazine articles on fen-phen.

"I found out that a doctor at Lafene Health Center was doing a study on fen-phen, and I decided I was ready to try it," Shelli said.

Fenfluramine and phentermine have been around since the mid-1970s and were prescribed separately. It was not until the early '90s that these two drugs were used together as fen-phen.

This combination is what has made these drugs new and popular to people. But not enough information is available yet. Such aspects as long-term side effects of the drugs and overall effectiveness have yet to be researched.

Like all new drugs, research must be made over time.

Despite the fact the risks are unknown, Shelli still chose to take fen-phen.

"If I chose not to lose weight, there would be worse consequences medically," Shelli said.

So far, doctors have seen side effects including dry mouth, heart palpitations, restlessness, dizziness, insomnia, euphoria, memory loss, drowsiness, agitation, sweating and blurred vision.

Doctors are not advising people to rush out and get a prescription for fen-phen, because it's not for everyone.

"I believe that fen-phen is not a quick cure, but a lifestyle change. I know that if I go back to my old self, I will gain all my weight back. Fen-phen has just made it a lot easier to lose weight," Shelli said.

Fen-phen is designed for people who have a lot of weight to lose, especially when a person's weight is harmful to his or her health — that is, patients who are found to be 20 percent or more over their ideal body weight.

This drug is not for people who have 10-15 pounds to lose.

"High self-esteem is very important. If you don't feel good about yourself, you will not be happy," Shelli said.

Dr. Larry Moeller, a physician at Lafene Health Center, was issued a permit last summer to prescribe fen-phen to patients for up to one year. Along with this permit, he has to monitor and record all new data for these patients, while reporting findings to the Kansas Board of Healing Arts.

Dianna Schalles, a professor and dietitian, works closely with Moeller in monitoring the patient progress.

Moeller refers patients to Schalles so that they can be counseled in their eating habits.

"Lifestyle changes are the toughest thing. My biggest concern is that once patients go off the pill, they maintain their healthy eating habits," Schalles said.

Along with health advice, thorough examinations are given to every potential patient.

"They checked my blood, heart pressure, medical background, as well as my current health," Shelli said.

*Travis, a student, said he received his prescription of fen-phen at a health center in Kansas City, Mo.

Travis also got a thorough physical examination before the pills were prescribed.

The difference between Shelli and Travis' prescriptions was the price.

Shelli receives her pills for $30-50 a month, depending on whether there are generics in stock.

Travis, on the other hand, pays almost triple this, at $130 per one-month.

"Fen-phen was my last resort, I had tried everything to lose weight. I may be a drug guinea pig, but I am losing weight," Travis said.

Travis has been on fen-phen for one month now and has lost 14 pounds, along with gaining a very healthy lifestyle.

"I no longer crave fast foods. I eat fruits and vegetables, and I sometimes exercise twice a day," Travis said.

But easier does not always mean safer.

*Loretta, a 30-year-old office employee in Kansas City, said she was just taking phentermine in 1995 when she started noticing shortness of breath.

A few days later, Loretta was flown to Chicago, where she almost died.

Doctors diagnosed Loretta with pulmonary hypertension, a severe form of high blood pressure.

One in every 55,000 people suffer from this painful side effect.

Loretta's family now faces the fact that they might lose Loretta.

"Every night we mix a special drug for Loretta's I.V. This drug is constantly flowing into her bloodstream, but this medicine is by no means a cure," Loretta's husband said.

The drug has potential side effects, but overweight people increase their risks of getting type II diabetes, heart disease, strokes, gout, gallstones, back problems, sleep disorders and cancer.

For some, losing weight is worth the risks involved.

For others, a healthy diet and exercise is all that is needed.

Corporation wants implant claims divided, seeks portion dismissed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIDLAND, Mich. — Dow Corning Corp. today asked a judge to separate breast implant claims into one group involving complications and ruptures and a separate category claiming that silicone caused disease.

It then asked that all the disease claims be dismissed.

The company is willing to resolve claims stemming from ruptures or other localized breast-area complications from implants, Dow Corning Chairman Richard Hazelton said in a statement.

"A prolonged debate on disease delays the resolution of local complication and rupture claims for women with breast implants," Hazelton said. "Our motions filed today ... would allow claims to move forward by separating local complications from disease claims."

A global settlement of breast implant claims reached several years ago fell apart when thousands more women than expected sought compensation.

The motion filed in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Bay City is "based on scientific evidence that other federal courts have ruled is valid in disproving claims that breast implants cause disease," company spokesman T. Michael Jackson said.

Dow Corning said federal judges in Oregon, New York and Texas have found the evidence insufficient to support claims that breast implants cause generalized disease.

Midland-based Dow Corning, owned by Dow Chemical Co. and Corning Inc., is a global leader in silicon-based material.

Dow Corning declared bankruptcy in 1995, causing breast implant suits against it to be placed on hold pending bankruptcy proceedings.

A separate class-action trial of claims that breast implants made women sick began last week in New Orleans.

That trial went forward because the women sued Dow Chemical, which never made breast implants but owns half of Dow Corning, once the largest maker of silicone gel implants. Corning Inc. owns the other half.

EXTRACURRICULAR ACTIVITIES

Buffalo State University professor Scott Isaksen, 44, was arrested in December, allegedly in connection with his coursework, which is described in the University's bulletin as "original thinking" and "approaching situations with innovative techniques."

According to police, he had given a truant male student the option of writing a paper on stress or actually meeting with Isaksen in private for a series of stress exercises, and the student chose the latter, which included allowing Isaksen to handcuff him and to put a rope around his neck in a motel room.

phasing of the construction and the groundwork around the project.

To fund the project, the city will be using money from a number of sources, Petty said.

The Kansas Department of Transportation will be giving $2.7 million to the $7 million project.

One and a half million dollars will be provided by the City/University Projects Fund and the City General Obligation Fund.

The remaining $2.7 million will be provided by the Storm Water Management fund, Petty said.

Bill Muir, assistant to the vice president at K-State, said the University will also be contributing to the project.

Muir said K-State will be giving the city 14 to 20 feet of land just north of Anderson from 16th Street to Denison Avenue. This land will be granted as a permanent easement.

"They'll be improving our property and making it easier for us to get around, so it's the least we can do. It's all a part of being a good neighbor," Muir said.

Randy Kaster, project engineer, said the project still has a number of stages to go through until construction.

"We will continue to develop a more detailed plan so everything can be accounted for when the city bids a contractor. That will take until July of 1998," Kaster said.

The project has also gone through many preliminary stages, Petty said.

"There were a number of public information meetings held for citizens to voice their views. At one meeting, residents were asked to identify the most critical issues concerning the project. Those results were used as a device to make the project as comprehensive as possible," Petty said.

Muir said the construction will cause some problems, but the results will be beneficial.

"I hope everyone has some patience during construction. We'll have to live with some more orange barrels for a while, but when it's done, it will help out so much," Muir said.

the ruling during a White House press conference, said he believed changes need to be made in affirmative action programs, "But my formulation of 'mend it — don't end it' I still think is the best thing for America."

The Justice Department had filed legal arguments opposing the proposition with the 9th Circuit.

Robert Alt of the Center for Individual Rights, the Washington legal organization that represents Proposition 209 sponsors, said he was very gratified.

Opponents of the proposition are "clearly out of step with what the Supreme Court has been saying on racial preferences," Alt said.

In issuing the original injunction, Chief U.S. District Judge Thelton Henderson of San Francisco said that although the initiative was neutrally worded, it would abolish only programs that benefited minorities and women.

Those groups would have to seek a new state constitutional amendment to allow preferential programs to remedy discrimination, he said, while other groups, such as military veterans, the elderly or children of college alumni could continue to lobby for preferences from local or state agencies.

Henderson said that difference in treatment violates standards of equal protection the Supreme Court declared in 1982 when it struck down a Washington state initiative prohibiting local school boards from ordering busing for integration, Henderson said.

The appeals court rejected that comparison.

"Unlike racial preference programs, school desegregation programs ... do not work wholly to the benefit of certain members of one group and correspondingly to the harm of certain members of another group, and do not deprive citizens of rights," the opinion said.

O'Scannlain said preferences based on race or gender are constitutionally suspect and can be abolished by a state without violating the rights of any individual. He noted Supreme Court rulings that have allowed preferential programs only in limited circumstances.

part of the gap — $20 million — that needs to be filled in," he said.

O'Bannon said his support for the project is based in large part on the fact that the NCAA would be a good addition to White River State Park. He added that his support for the project might not be as strong if the NCAA comes to Indianapolis but does not build its home in the park.

"I think overall it's something we should pursue," O'Bannon said.

Mayor Stephen Goldsmith has said repeatedly that the city is not in a position to finance the NCAA headquarters because it is working to find ways to build a new basketball arena for the Indiana Pacers and to keep the Indianapolis Colts here with a more lucrative stadium lease.

Goldsmith said the value of the city's contribution could be several million dollars.

The bidding package has been kept under tight wraps by the area organizing committee, which consists primarily of corporate leaders including Eli Lilly and Co. Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Randall Tobias and James T. Morris, who heads the Indianapolis Water Co. The group has insisted that if details leak out, the other cities would be given an unfair advantage.

Indianapolis is competing with Denver, Kansas City, Mo., and Dallas for the association's new headquarters. The NCAA is not expected to announce its choice until late May or early June.

Arrest made in Laramie shooting

▶ VICTIM EVADES INJURY; suspect faces attempted murder, attempted kidnapping charges.

LILLIAN E. BEEBE
staff writer

Gun shots rang out in front of the Delta Delta Delta house around 12:40 p.m. Wednesday. No one was injured, but a K-State student is in custody for the shooting, which is still under investigation.

According to information issued by K-State News Services, Justin DeMoss, freshman in sociology, 1020 Bluemont Ave., allegedly fired several rounds from a rifle during an incident involving his former fiancée.

DeMoss was arrested and is being held in the Riley County Jail on charges of attempted kidnapping and attempted murder. Bond was set at $200,000.

According to information issued by the Riley County Police Department, the victim was returning from class when she saw DeMoss in his vehicle.

She had been walking with two friends, but was alone when the incident occurred, RCPD Lt. Herb Crosby said.

He tried to talk to her and allegedly brandished a weapon.

He then allegedly fired several rounds toward her, according to information distributed by the RCPD.

She ducked behind a tree, Lt. Crosby said. At this point, DeMoss had gotten out of the vehicle.

DeMoss then allegedly tried to get the victim into his vehicle, but failed when a witness intervened and held DeMoss until police arrived, according to RCPD.

RCPD has not established a motive at this time.

The victim could not be contacted for comment.

SEVERAL GUN SHOTS were fired in front of the Delta Delta Delta sorority house at about 12:40 p.m. Wednesday. No one was injured in the shooting, which the Riley County Police Department is investigating.

TCI to increase cable service rates on June 1

LILLIAN E. BEEBE
staff writer

Manhattan cable subscribers will see an increase on their cable bills effective June 1.

The rate increase will affect basic and expanded basic cable services, but will not affect premium channels such as Showtime, Starz and Cinemax, Richard Cofer, general manager of TCI Kansas-Manhattan, said.

Expanded basic cable customers will see about a 7-percent increase in services, he said. Ninety percent of Manhattan cable subscribers are expanded basic cable subscribers.

The basic cable rate of $10.41 will increase to $11.41 while the expanded basic rate of $14.20 will increase to $14.94.

"Sixty percent of the increases are attributable to the increase in programming costs charged to TCI," Cofer said.

The rate increases are company-wide and affect any regulated TCI system, but the dollar amount of the increases will vary from location to location, he said.

The increase in Manhattan rates is 35 percent below the maximum rate increase allowed by the Federal Communications Commission, Cofer said.

Hourly service rates will also increase from $19.05 to $29. The fees are charged when work is done at the subscriber's residence, he said.

Equipment rates will also increase, Cofer said. Remote controls will increase from 9 cents to 30 cents a month.

Manhattan TCI rates increase annually with the last increase taking effect June 1. Premium channels were adjusted in January, Cofer said.

McVeigh blames FBI for 'slow, torturous' deaths of Davidians

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — A reporter voluntarily gave authorities a letter Wednesday from Timothy McVeigh blaming the FBI for the Branch Davidian deaths and comparing his plight in the Oklahoma City bombing to that of Richard Jewell.

"If you have trouble believing that the Justice Department are adept liars — come to one of my pretrial hearings, to the trial itself, or ask Richard Jewell," McVeigh writes.

McVeigh

At the offices of the weekly Oklahoma Gazette in Oklahoma City, an FBI agent wearing rubber gloves placed the two-page handwritten letter into a plastic envelope.

"They just asked for it. They could have gone the subpoena route, but that would have been silly," said Gazette reporter Phil Bacharach, who interviewed McVeigh in prison and received the letter from him last November.

The newspaper made the letter public Tuesday during jury selection in McVeigh's bombing trial. Bacharach said he didn't reveal the letter earlier because McVeigh's views against the government are already well known.

Prosecutors have alleged McVeigh blew up the Oklahoma City federal building in 1995 in part as revenge for the government siege at the Branch Davidian compound near Waco, Texas, two years earlier.

In the letter, dated "26 Nov. 96," McVeigh writes in his leftward-slanting hand that the FBI caused the "slow, torturous" deaths of families in Waco, then dodged responsibility with the help of its own "wizards of propaganda."

Cult leader David Koresh and 80 of his followers died April 19, 1993, by fire or gunshots after the FBI started filling the compound with tear gas during a raid that ended a 51-day standoff. Davidians and their attorneys blame the government for starting the fire. FBI officials said the blaze was started by sect members.

McVeigh is particularly critical of former FBI special agent Bob Ricks, who was an FBI spokesman from the Waco scene and who was based in Oklahoma City at the time of the bombing — although not in the federal building. Ricks now leads the Oklahoma state law enforcement agencies.

"At Waco, once the FBI blocked the Davidians abilities to communicate with the outside world, Bob Ricks could then step

Chemistry professor dies after cancer bout, was well-respected by colleagues

Paukstelis

▶ JOSEPH PAUKSTELIS DEDICATED majority of his career to K-State.

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

Tears welled up in the eyes of all the office workers in the Department of Chemistry after they received the call telling them that Joseph Paukstelis, professor of chemistry, died Tuesday morning.

"He was extremely well-liked," said Dale Hawley, professor and head of the chemistry department. "He was a friend to everyone."

Paukstelis, who died at home after a three-year battle with cancer, was a synthetic organic chemist, and the department's expert on nuclear magnetic resonance.

"He was a walking encyclopedia of organic reactions," his friend Cliff Meloan, professor emeritus of organic chemistry, said. "In addition, he was willing to help the department do departmental chores, to help with advertising the chemistry department to the world. And in general, he was just one whale of a nice guy."

This willingness to help was Paukstelis' signature. More than most professors, he went out of his way to collaborate with and advise others on research projects.

If colleagues had problems, they only had to tell Paukstelis, and he would drop what he was doing to try to solve them. A self-taught computer expert, Paukstelis was in charge of the chemistry department's computer network, so people came to him to solve their computer problems as well as their chemistry ones.

His willingness to help extended to the department as a whole. He coordinated the construction of the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building, spending 10 years talking to architects and looking at similar buildings at other universities.

Paukstelis also made himself available to help his organic chemistry students, both graduate and undergraduate.

He received all his degrees in chemistry. He got a bachelor's of science from the University of Wisconsin, a doctorate from the University of Illinois and a postdoctoral fellowship from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He joined the K-State faculty in 1966 as an assistant professor of chemistry and was promoted to full professor in 1983.

Paukstelis spent every year since then at K-State, with the exception of a two-year stint as the director of instrumentation for chemistry at the National Science Foundation and a one-year term as senior scientist for the National Cancer Institute.

He never really retired. Instead, he took a sabbatical in 1993, when he was diagnosed with cancer.

• E-COLLEGIAN STAFF INSTALLS SEARCH ENGINE FOR ARCHIVES.

With an Internet visit to the Electronic Collegian, students can now access old articles relating to a topic by typing in a single word.

The E-Collegian staff recently installed a search engine, which allows students to use key words to search Collegian archives as far back as 1994. Before installment of the program, students could only search E-Collegian archives issue by issue.

Jeremiah Shirk, Student Publications Macintosh technician, helped install the program. He said he thinks the new search engine will make searching for old articles easier for students and alumni.

"It allows people to find information on the E-Collegian by looking for key words rather than searching through issue after issue," Shirk said.

The E-Collegian is accessed daily by more than 10,000 people worldwide.

• SENATE LIKELY TO CONFIRM GRAVES' REGENTS NOMINEES.

TOPEKA — The Senate appears likely to confirm Gov. Bill Graves' appointment of two prominent businessmen to the state Board of Regents.

Its Education Committee voted unanimously Wednesday to recommend confirmation for Harry W. Craig, of Topeka; and Sid Warner, of Cimarron. Craig is chief executive officer of Martin Tractor Co., and Warner is a farmer and rancher who also owns real estate and insurance companies.

The regents oversee the operation of state universities, and an appointment to the board is considered among the most prestigious part-time jobs in state government.

The Senate plans to take up the appointments Friday, said Majority Leader Tim Emert, R-Independence.

So far, neither appointment has generated any controversy. Warner has served on the board since October 1992.

"Rarely do we find there's much of an objection," said Sen. Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, the committee's chairwoman. "I think they are both qualified, highly qualified nominees."

Both Craig and Warner were appointed to four-year terms that expire Jan. 15, 2001. Craig is a Republican and Warner a Democrat.

By law, no more than five of the nine regents can belong to the same political party.

• POLICE INVESTIGATE POSSIBLE KEVORKIAN INVOLVEMENT IN WOMAN'S DEATH.

ROMULUS, Mich. — Dr. Jack Kevorkian's attorney said he was hired by the family of a woman who was found dead at a motel in this Detroit suburb, but he refused to say if Kevorkian was involved.

Attorney Geoffrey Fieger, who was on vacation out of state, identified the woman as Heidi Aseltine of Indianapolis, and said she had AIDS, WWJ radio reported today.

She "died by her own hand," Fieger said in today's editions of the Detroit News. He said he was hired by the woman's family.

"She had discussed the option (of suicide) with her physician, her two sisters, her father, her mother and her brother," he said.

Aseltine was diagnosed with the AIDS virus while pregnant, but her baby did not contract it, Fieger said.

An autopsy was planned at the Wayne County Medical Examiner's Office, spokesman Tom Alston said.

Man arrested, charged with arson following Molotov cocktail incident

ASSOCIATED PRESS

URBANA, Ill. — Jurors leaped out of the box in panic and people stampeded out of a courthouse after a hooded man threw a Molotov cocktail at a judge, slamming him in the forehead and starting a fire that gutted the courtroom Tuesday.

The bomb bounced off the forehead of Circuit Judge George Miller, but didn't immediately explode. Miller, one of the four people who suffered minor injuries, had handled a civil case involving John E. Ewing, the man arrested later in the day for the bombing, police said.

"It was obvious that he was aiming it at the judge and trying to hurt the judge," said Abra Bonnell, a juror in a medical malpractice case that was interrupted by the commotion. "Everybody left the jury box screaming."

Ewing, 37, was arrested at a motel and charged with arson, carrying an explosive device, and using that device during a crime of violence, Champaign County Sheriff Dave Madigan said.

Federal Magistrate David Bernthal ordered Ewing held without bail today pending a hearing Friday. Ewing asked Bernthal to remove himself from the case, saying, "I feel you are a suspect in violating my federally protected rights."

Ewing also asked that he be allowed to represent himself. Bernthal said a judge would rule on that request later.

George Taseff, Ewing's public defender, told Bernthal that Ewing has "various strongly held beliefs that the court has no jurisdiction over him."

Miller had dismissed a civil lawsuit Ewing filed in 1988 against Jewel Companies, according to an affidavit filed today by Kevin Rollins, an agent for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. The affidavit did not contain any details about the lawsuit, and a copy of the lawsuit was not immediately available.

Jurors said the bomber appeared nervous or agitated.

"He didn't say a word," David Chambers said. "He came in, looked around, grabbed the bottle out (from under his clothing), lit it and then threw it."

What happened next was basic panic, Chambers said.

The bomb — a bottle filled with an amber liquid and a lighted rag stuffed in the neck — rolled around on the floor in front of Miller's bench, spewing flames and what smelled like gasoline.

The bomber escaped in the chaos.

"No one saw him fleeing from the courthouse," chief sheriff's deputy Gary Turner said. "He just ran down the steps and ran out."

The fire turned everything in the courtroom black. Charred paneling drooped from the walls, and some blackened tiles fell out of the ceiling.

Manhattan launches Internet homepage

Community Online Resource Exchange

Connecting library systems
- Expands the library community for Manhattan and K-State University
- Supported by the link at the Manhattan Public Library
- Funded by City and University Project Funds
- Some resources include:
  - *Regents' university library catalogs
  - *Government documents and full-text documents

Community interactivity
- Expands the Manhattan community through the creation of a Manhattan Community Information Network
- Any computer user will have access to information about the Manhattan community and surrounding areas
- Creates a community search engine, allowing for localized searches of community information

Connections to the world
- Links the local community to the global network
- Involves training community leaders and the public about the nature of the material on the Internet and various means of accessing this information

The proposal for CORE involves expanding access and awareness to resources through a community network.

The City of Manhattan has created its own homepage on the Internet, in an effort to establish a presence in the world of computerized information.

Director of Manhattan Public Library Fred Atchison said Community Online Resource Exchange, the Internet-based community network, has evolved from a mere vision just two years ago into an informational system that allows the public to gain information on all facets of the Manhattan area.

"The Internet is valuable because of local information — what you have locally and how you present it," Atchison said. "We have uniqueness. That's the value."

CORE is a nonprofit corporation initially formed through an affiliation between Farrell Library and the Manhattan Public Library.

The concept to design the new technology originated from the library's mutual desire to be linked on a single homepage allowing easy access to the public. The libraries publicly announced and formally displayed the homepage at the Expo Business Fair in Bramlage Coliseum in April 1995.

Associate Dean of Farrell Library Karen Cole said it was only reasonable for other agencies of Manhattan to associate the homepage with unlimited access to coordinated community information.

"What we saw was that the libraries were giving Manhattan access to information," she said. "Information is power. Everyone should become involved. We want to find a way to give it to the public as effortlessly as possible."

With an assembly of 10 members on the board of directors for the project, CORE serves as the base for expanding awareness in three areas: connections to the libraries, community interactivity and worldwide connections.

In browsing community interactivity, Internet users can access local educational resources, business and employment opportunities, health and social services information, tourist and recreational information, local government information and current events.

With all available options displayed on a single-screen menu, Atchison said CORE is the avenue to create new links and increase information pertinent to area Internet users.

"One of the things that makes CORE unique is the search engine that searches locally," Atchison said. "It's a seamless front door for everyone. CORE is the possible technology to revitalize communities. CORE is interested in opening that door."

Beach museum gives students nighttime art-related activities

It's about time. The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art has programmed an event with students in mind.

Tonight, the Beach art museum will open its doors to the BirdHouse acoustic music series.

Brooks Williams, a singer and songwriter, will perform at 8 p.m. in the Beach art museum. Williams, who integrates Celtic and blues music into his original compositions, has performed in Manhattan before. But this is a first for the museum.

The BirdHouse series usually plays at the Manhattan Center for the Arts. By moving it on campus, to the Beach art museum, it has become more accessible for students.

We hope this is a new trend for the art museum. Opening up the art museum for night activities is a service to the students.

The Beach art museum should also consider more night hours and nighttime activities for students with busy schedules. Night programming would allow more access to the art on campus.

There are also many worthy music groups and students in the performing and fine arts on campus. With this in mind, the Beach art museum should consider drawing from student groups and activities to provide more night programming at the museum. This could spark student interest, drawing in students who have busy daytime schedules.

The BirdHouse series, which has been known to draw crowds of more than 100 people, will be a good first concert for the Beach art museum, because its success can prove that student programming is valuable and necessary for the art museum.

Tickets are $8 ($6 for youth and seniors citizens) and are available in advance at the Dusty Bookshelf or at the door. The concert is limited to100 people.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a consensus opinion is reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and students.

• PARKING SERVICES NEEDS TO LOOK AT IN-LINE SKATES.

Editor,

Spring is in the air. The weather is getting warmer, which means that students are outside more often. When students are doing outside activities like bicycling and in line skating, these activities become increasingly popular.

I do not have anything against in-line skating. It is a great physical activity, but I do not believe that it belongs on the sidewalks of campus.

I have seen, and been involved in, many instances where students were walking on the sidewalks and they were not going fast enough for the skater. So, the skater knocked the walking students down.

This may not seem like a big deal to many people, but we as students have a right to safely walk across campus without worrying about being hit or knocked down by passing skaters. The fact is many of the sidewalks on campus do not have enough space to support pedestrians and skaters.

One problem I see is that there are dismount zones for bicycles in areas that are heavily populated by people. The bicyclists are to dismount so that they will go slowly and not be a danger to the pedestrians.

In line skaters are not required to slow down in these dismount zones, so they go just as fast as they had been going. If you have seen these skaters move, it is very fast. Also, many sidewalks are on steep hills. In line skaters speeding down these hills can be a frightening sight.

There is no policy about in-line skaters on campus, but I think parking services needs to look into this issue and change their policy so that in-line skaters will either have to follow the bike paths or not allow in-line skates on campus. It may not seem like there are many skaters on campus now, but one must always look towards the future.

In line skates are becoming more popular each year; and the more popular they become, the more skaters will be on campus. The time is now for Parking Services to look at this issue and decide what should be done before someone gets seriously hurt or the problem is out of control.

• SUBSTANTIAL OPINIONS MEAN MORAL ISSUES FOR STUDENT GROUP.

Editor,

I am writing to clarify a few things in Brandi Hertig's column.

After serious study of the pro-life group on the K-State campus, I have come to several conclusions concerning its amount of action and the opinions its members hold.

First, some data. KSU Students for the Right to Life sent about half a dozen students to the March for Life in Washington, D.C. The students raised money from bake sales and even used some of their own money to fund the trip.

In Washington, D.C., they met with their representatives and urged them to support pro-life legislation. This week, they planned and funded several speakers to come to our campus and talk about abortion. Many of the women in the group work at crisis pregnancy centers around Manhattan.

Why do these pro-lifers chalk sidewalks, hold signs at rallies, help at pregnancy centers and just speak to people about abortion and unborn babies?

One reason they give is that if just one baby is spared, all that effort and all that talk will not have been useless.

There is also another strange observation. It seems that pro-lifers don't actually think that abortion is an issue where you just have an opinion.

They seem to think this is an issue with moral ramifications, not an issue about personal opinions.

Having children optional for fulfilling life

Not long ago, on a little road trip with a male friend of mine, I found myself knee-deep in a disturbing conversation. You know how traveling can be. You start talking about some topic, and the next thing you know, you are lost and on a completely unrelated issue.

VALERI CRENSHAW

VALERI CRENSHAW is a graduate student in print journalism. You can e-mail your comments to Valeri at (vrc4359@ksu.edu).

Well, somehow we ended up on the topic of having children at some point in our lives. I voiced my opinion that I couldn't think of any point in my life when I would want children. That was when all hell broke loose.

I couldn't believe the things that were coming out of his mouth. I was being criticized for wanting it all and not including children in that neat little package. I have to be honest — I was completely shocked.

Now that I look back at it, I don't know why I was so naive. American society seems to be a broken record when it comes to having children.

Sometimes I feel as though I am living the "Seinfeld" episode when Elaine's friends are gaga over their newborn babies. "You gotta have a baby" still rings in my ears.

I should be used to it by now. I was the little girl who wanted to play football with the boys rather than dolls with the girls. I am the one who refuses to take a husband's last name, my greatest fear being that someone will ask me, "Didn't you used to be Valeri Crenshaw?" And I am the future employee who would care more about my job than changing diapers. I am not saying that one lifestyle is better than another, but I know what is right for me.

Women have come so far in the last few generations, but this is one hurdle that we can't seem to successfully conquer. So I don't want a child. Does that mean that I will be any less feminine or successful as a person?

I can't deny it. I don't like children. I would rather have a dog. Think of the problems that we could solve if more people owned dogs and fewer people had children. Stop rolling your eyes and think about it.

Too many people have children just because it is what you are supposed to do. You know ... white picket fence, spouse, barbecues and family gatherings.

The truth is, there are way too many children born each year. All around the world there are children starving, abused, molested and abandoned. As hard as it might be to believe, we need to accept the fact that not all of us are cut out for parenthood.

We as Americans need to stop turning our noses up at countries like China and Japan. We call them barbaric because they regulate people's reproductive habits.

That is a gross oversimplification, but is it really all that bad to give people tax breaks for limiting their number of children? Not all aspects of their systems seem desirable, but the overall concept might be worth researching.

Some people desire a large family. To those people I say, "Go for it." Have as many kids as you want, love them and care for them, but don't think of me as less of a woman because I don't want a rugrat in my life.

In the little conversation that I spoke of earlier ... OK, it really was a yelling match at this point ... I suggested adoption would be a more plausible option. A middle ground. His true colors were really showing now.

I view adoption as a way of having your cake and eating it too. You have everything wonderful associated with child-rearing but at the same time you are helping society, a child and future generations. He saw it as not good enough.

More and more women are getting higher forms of education than prior generations. We are shooting for the stars. We want to be doctors, CEOs, lawyers and maybe even journalists. Some of us want these high-powered lifestyles without children or spouses.

There is a reason I am furthering my education. I want a job. I want to see the world. That is not to say you can't have the dream job, a wonderful spouse and all the children you can fit into a minivan. I know several women in my life who serve as prime examples of doing just that. They did not have to give up any one aspect. But I am not them.

I will be the first one to admit I might have a drastic change of plans somewhere down the road. Who says my biological clock won't start ticking? Someday I might even be toting around a little K-Stater of my own.

I think my greatest fear is that I will go to all the trouble of having a child and my husband (whomever that may be) will turn the little tyke into some sort of cross-dresser who cheers for K-State football, Wichita State baseball and that losing basketball team down the road.

You know, just to spite me.

from kindergarten to college ...

GROWING UP IS HARD TO DO

While at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex during All-University Open House last Saturday, I noticed two high-school seniors wearing their letter jackets; they were walking all over the Rec Complex, eyes scanning the place like predators on the hunt.

JUSTIN WILD

JUSTIN WILD is a senior in English and education. You can your e-mail comments to Justin at (justone@ksu.edu).

They stomped about, constantly wondering where the free weights were.

"To hell with those stairclimbers, dude, they're for chicks, dude. Where the hell are the damn free weights?"

"I don't know, man, check it out: Where are the free weights?"

"I dunno — look at that girl, man! Those machines don't get the job done, man. Where are the free weights?"

Their banter continued, until they managed to spot what they were looking for. They clomped over, threw their letter jackets down, and did a few sets, all the while grunting and bellowing loudly enough so that everyone would notice what Herculean studs they were.

After that, they stalked off, flexing, commenting on the great workout.

Ah, to be young again.

The whole incident put my thought process in motion. How many of us, while visiting K-State, behaved in the same manner? Did any of us see what college was like, as well as how to behave? (I know, I know, some college seniors act the same way as the two high-school seniors in the Rec Complex.)

Regardless of that fact, however, there seems to be a mysterious invisible wall of maturity that, for most, is somehow breached during our freshman year. It is a coming of age that makes some think of the TV show "The Wonder Years," while others might only want to forget the way they behaved while discovering what it meant to be in college.

In many ways, the process of discovering oneself in college resembles the exact same process in which we discovered ourselves in kindergarten.

On the first day of kindergarten, when a person shows up, no one knows who that person is, nor does anyone, including the teacher, know what that person is capable of. Some children will excel at basic grammar, while others might be great at adding apples or coloring in pictures on paper.

By the same token, when a freshman walks the campus on his or her first day, the world is blind to them.

The talismans carried in high school, such as letter jackets, become meaningless. The straight-A report card earned through four years of high school suddenly becomes just a slip of paper.

In kindergarten, we learned how to behave toward one another. To throw dirt in a person's face during recess ended in someone's tears and another's isolation while sitting by the teacher. During further development, Susie received a note from Billy stating "Check this box if you want to be my girlfriend."

ADRIAN FLEMING/Collegian

By the time we're 18, though, we move from Big Chief tablet notebook paper to bar napkins.

Instead of hurling dirt into eyes, people throw words that damage self-esteem. In either age group, sometimes a lesson is learned and sometimes it is not.

When a little boy or girl is crabby during a day of finger-painting or sentence writing, the remedy to bad behavior is a refreshing nap in the corner.

Thirteen or so years down the line, students everywhere crash at 1 p.m. after a hard test.

Finally, we evolve in our lifetimes from socializing with graham crackers and chocolate milk to beer or espresso.

After kindergarten, a student grows. By the time higher grades come along, even to small children, kindergartners are the runts of the litter. High-school seniors visiting campus or freshmen during their difficult adjustment, are looked at in much the same way.

It makes one bittersweet; nearing graduation, one can only wonder whether the same process will begin again once in the working world. Whatever the case, if we speak to one another through whispers or cell phones, the fact remains — growing is a difficult process.

Jesus in Islam

Looking to clarify how Muslims view Jesus

I would like to thank the KSU Student Fellowship for extending its invitation to the Muslims of Manhattan to participate in the Jesus Week. Special thanks also to Fellowship member Richard Larson for inviting the Muslims to know about Jesus.

What Muslims believe about Jesus is what the Quran, the last divine message revealed to prophet Muhammad, tells.

KHALID KEBBATI

KHALID KEBBATI is a graduate teaching assistant in the College of Education. Comments concerning his column can by sent by e-mail at (collegn@ksu.edu).

"The similitude of Jesus before Allah is as that of Adam; He created him from dust, then said to him 'Be' and he was." Extract from the Quran chapter 3 verse 59.

In this statement, we first have a description of the high position Jesus occupies as a prophet, then we have a repudiation of the dogma that he was Allah (god), or the son of Allah or anything more than a man. If it is said he was born without a human father, Adam was also so born. Indeed Adam was born without either a human father or mother. As far as our physical bodies are concerned, they are mere dust.

In Allah's sight, Jesus was as dust just as Adam was or humanity is. The greatness of Jesus arose from the divine command "Be," for after that he was more than dust. He was a great Prophet and teacher.

In another verse in the Quran, Allah tells us more about Jesus: "O People of the Book! (i.e. Jews and Christians) Commit no excesses in your religion, nor say of Allah anything but the truth. Christ Jesus the son of Mary was just a Messenger of Allah, and His Word, which He (Allah) bestowed on Mary, and a Spirit proceeding from Him. So believe in Allah and His Messengers. Do not say 'He is three,' desist, it will be better for you. For Allah is One God. Glory be to Him. For exalted is He above having a son. To Him belong all things in the heavens and on earth. And enough is Allah as a disposer of affairs." chapter 4 verse 171.

Christ's attributes are mentioned clearly in this verse: 1) that Jesus was the son of a woman, Mary and therefore a man; 2) but a messenger, a man with a mission from Allah, and therefore entitled to honor; 3) a Word bestowed on Mary, for he was created by Allah's word "Be" (kun in Arabic), and he was; 4) a spirit proceeding from Allah, but not Allah. His life and his mission were more limited than in the case of some other Messengers, though we must pay equal honor to him as a Prophet of Allah.

The doctrines of trinity, equality with Allah (god), and sonship, are repudiated as blasphemies. Allah is independent of all needs and has no need of a son to manage his affairs.

In chapter 5, verse 116 we are told of the following: "And behold! Allah said: 'O Jesus son of Mary! Did you say unto men, 'Take me and my mother for two gods beside Allah?" He will say: 'Glory to You? Never could I say what I had no right to say. Had I said such a thing, You would indeed have known it. For You know in full all that is hidden."

In the above verse, Jesus disclaims any knowledge of the sort of things that are attributed to him by those who take his name. The worship of Mary, though repudiated by the Protestants, was widely spread in the earlier churches, both in the East and the West.

I hope the above verses and short explanations give a clear idea of what Muslims believe about Jesus. He is one of the greatest messengers of Allah. And his mother Mary was a chaste woman who believed in her Lord and worshipped Him.

Allah is the Lord of the universe. There is nothing like unto him (that looks like him), that we humans with our limited power and knowledge can ever imagine. He is self-sufficient, almighty, all forgiving, he needs nothing, yet he bestows on us everything. It is only him who forgives our sins and wrong doing, and he only that we worship.

There is no compulsion in religion. Everyone is entitled to worship whomever he or she pleases. It is important to know or remember that Muslims are encouraged and ordained by Allah to deal in kindness and justice with people of other faiths (see Quran chapter 60 verse 7).

Understanding and tolerance are a must for a harmonious coexistence on Earth between all people from all colors and backgrounds.

We, the Muslim Student Association, thank every one of you who contributes to making K-State a place of knowledge and serenity, where people from around the globe enjoy their day-to-day activities.

Finally, I would like to invite students, faculty members and Manhattan community members to share with us your concerns, questions and mainly your presence at our open house from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday. You are all invited. We will be honored to be hosts to you on that day at the Islamic Center of Manhattan, 1224 Hylton Heights.

BirdHouse performances begin tonight at Beach art museum

DANEDRI THOMPSON

After two standing ovations during his debut in Manhattan, Brooks Williams, singer and songwriter, will return tonight to perform at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art as part of the BirdHouse acoustic music series.

David Kamerer, associate professor of journalism and mass communications and founder of the series, said he hopes the series will reach more students with a concert on campus.

"We produce about one performance a month. Usually at the Manhattan Center for the Arts," Kamerer said.

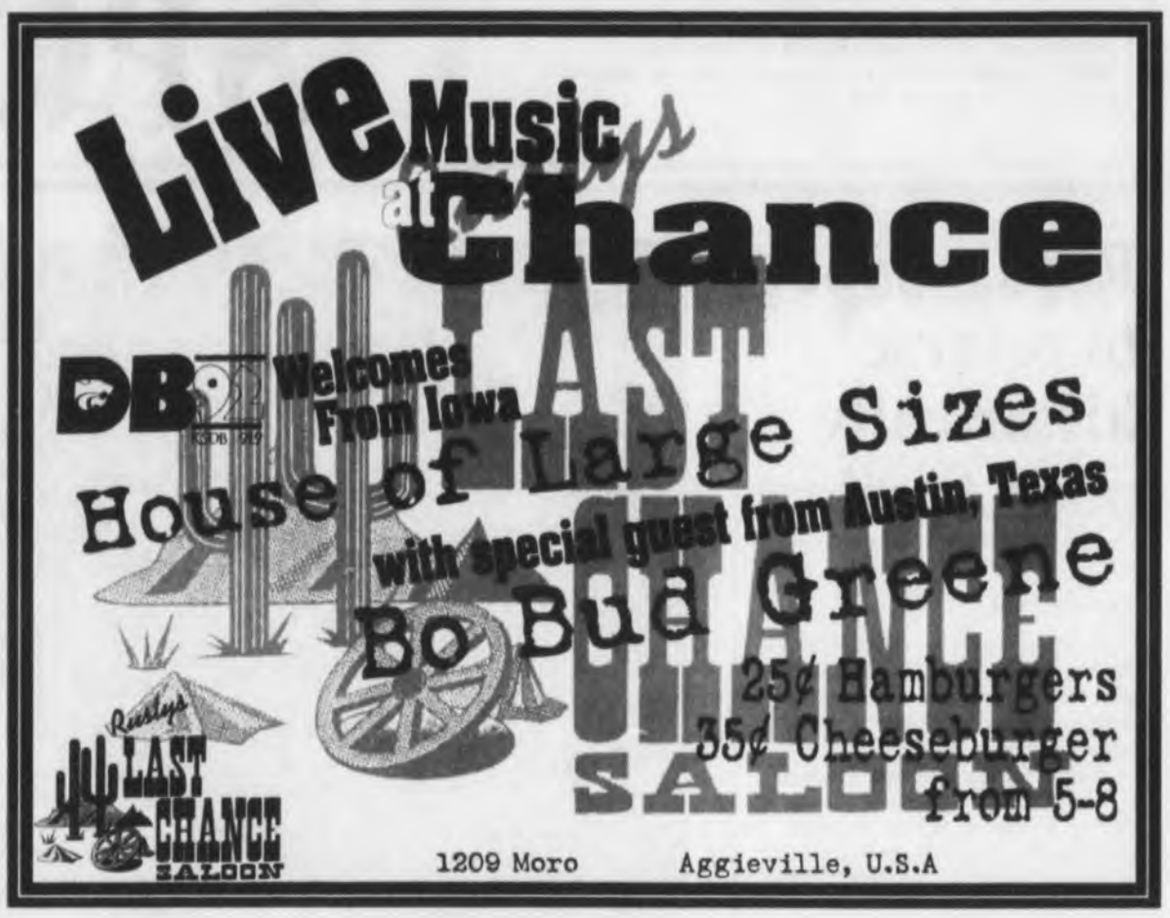
BirdHouse is a nonprofit organization that specializes in bringing in well-known, but not famous, musicians that Kamerer said he believes students will like.

An artist with six albums, Williams, who is internationally known, has often been compared to James Taylor. Tonight's concert will feature Williams playing original music with guitar and slide guitar accompaniment.

Steve Martini, associate director of intramurals and BirdHouse board member, said that Williams has a special way with audiences.

"He talks with an audience, not to them," Martini said. "He almost immediately becomes friends with the audience.

The BirdHouse tried performances in bars and coffee houses prior to sponsoring performances at Manhattan Center for the Arts, but Kamerer said the atmosphere was too distracting. Holding the concert in the museum offers a new advantage, he said.



"This is a good opportunity to sit arms length away from a really good guitar player," he said.

Williams' concert tonight is a precede for the opening of the Kansas Artist Craftsmen Association Members Exhibition.

Opening officially on April 12 at the Beach art museum, the exhibit features pottery, jewelry and textiles by Kansas artists.

The next BirdHouse acoustic music series performance, featuring Tom Kimmell, Michael Lille and Tom Prasada-Rao, will be at 8 p.m. April 26 at the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

Tickets for tonight's performance can be purchased at the door. Student tickets are $8. They will be available at the door or in advance at the Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville.

Without competition, nobody wins

Harry Watts

Thanks to the passage of legislation last year on both the federal and state level, competition for local telephone service is now a reality here in Kansas. In fact, 12 companies have already been approved to compete with Southwestern Bell to provide local telephone service to Kansas telephone customers.

What does all of this mean to you? It means that in the near future, you'll have the opportunity to make a choice about who provides your local telephone service.

The employees of Southwestern Bell are ready to meet the new challenges brought about by the competition coming to our industry. Why? Because by opening the local telephone market to competitors, Southwestern Bell will have the opportunity to get into new markets, too — like offering long-distance service to our Kansas customers.

At least, that's what was promised in the federal telecommunications reform legislation passed by Congress in 1996. And here in Kansas, we have taken the first steps toward lifting the federal restrictions that have prevented Southwestern Bell from competing for your long-distance service for so many years.

For 115 years, Southwestern Bell employees in Kansas have proven their ability to provide exceptional customer service and technological expertise in the delivery of local telephone service. Now, our 4,000 employees across the state are ready to offer you the same exceptional service in long distance.

Kansas telephone customers have a right to more choices, better service, and greater value in long-distance telephone service.

We're asking that you support full and open competition for long distance telephone service in Kansas. Because without competition, nobody wins.

Royals hope to reverse historically poor April

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — What's this? The Kansas City Royals have played six games already in this, their cruelest month, and they don't have a losing record?

Can it be true? If Bob Boone's revamped lineup conquers Kansas City's longstanding pattern of disastrous Aprils, then the 1997 Royals might be capable of just about anything.

In the past dozen or so years, and especially in the 1990s, slow starts have become as much a part of the Kansas City tradition as the Truman Library and barbecued spare ribs.

From May through September, the Royals' overall record is more than .500. They're winners. But since 1990, under managers John Wathan, Hal McRae and Boone, Kansas City's American League entry is a miserable 46-85 in April, not counting the shocking 3-3 April log they carry into tonight's home game against Baltimore.

McRae's club was the league laughingstock in 1992 with a 1-16 start.

Last year, while Boone fiddled with the lineup, the April-cursed Kansas Citians had exactly six wins to show for their first 22 outings. Their April batting average was .254 with 14 home runs, scoring 4.3 runs per game. Those were their lowest totals of any month of the season. In the warmth of the June sun, they hit .284.

But their bats weren't the only things that hardly worked last April. Neither did their gloves. The Royals committed 24 errors during April 1996.

Even when the Royals were winning two American League pennants and a World Series title from 1976-85, they almost always got off to a slow start.

The motto was always, "When the weather gets hot, so do we."

All-time in April, the franchise stands 254-277.

"I don't know what it was," said eight-time Gold Glove winner Frank White, whose jersey number was retired in opening-day ceremonies Monday. "I can remember a lot of cold nights when we just couldn't win no matter what we tried. We could usually turn it around later in the season, though."

It's getting to the point where the Royals are hoping to just survive the opening month.

"You hate to ever accept .500, but I think we would," said general manager Herk Robinson, whose busy off-season brought in four key new players. "We usually play very well after that, but the first month kills us."

Boone repaired the defense last April by moving scatter-armed Jose Offerman from shortstop to first base. This year, he's got Offerman at second, where he seems to have found a home.

"After the 6-16 start last year, I said I know our offense is still going to be one of the poorest in the league, but I can fix the defense. When I fixed the defense, we played 500 (79-80) from there on with the worst offense."

There is reason to think the Royals might not bury themselves with a typically awful April this time around. Newcomers Jay Bell, Jermaine Dye and Jeff King combined for eight hits in the 6-5 home-opening victory over Baltimore. And another big-hitting newcomer, DH Chili Davis, is waiting in the wings while a sore leg heals.

"They are all talented people," said a beaming Boone, who called Monday a great day.

If they spur the Royals to a winning April record, they're more than simple dynamite. They just might be contenders.

MITCH HOLTHUS, former voice of the Wildcats and current voice of the Kansas City Chiefs, will give young hopeful broadcasters the chance to try out the sportscasting life for a few days in the summer during the Holthus' Sportscaster's Academy's fourth annual camp June 8-12.

SUMMER CAMP

STORY BY BRIAN SMOLLER • PHOTO BY STEVE HEBERT

Imagine yourself sitting in the Dev Nelson Press Box, atop Wagner Field, broadcasting the K-State football in action.

Can't see it?

How about being in the booth at Arrowhead Stadium spreading your version of the action to the public?

If this is a dream of yours, it could be reality.

Mitch Holthus, a K-State alumnus, former voice of the Wildcats and current voice of the Kansas City Chiefs, enables young hopeful broadcasters to taste the sportscasting life for a few days in the summer.

Holthus' Sportscaster's Academy's fourth annual camp will be June 8-12.

Participants will rub elbows with the most prestigious Kansas coaches.

Marty Schottenhiemer and Bill Snyder both play active roles in the miniature camp.

"It gives a snapshot of the business in four days," Holthus said. "It's fairly intense. We account for every bit of time."

Holthus said people who take the camp leave the profession either loving it or hating it.

"We give them a glimpse of what it's really like," he said.

Those who do take the academy produce their own play-by-play broadcasts, learn interviewing skills, produce their own ESPN Sportscenter show and tour Arrowhead Stadium.

Participants also use facilities at Arrowhead and K-State to get a taste of reality.

"It's very practical," Holthus said.

"To advance in this field you have to have a network. It's the old adage. It's being in the right place at the right time and who you know."

Holthus said when he receives calls wanting broadcasters, he gives names from his list based on graduation from the academy.

"I go to my list and look for someone who I think can handle it," he said.

Joe Wilmus, a K-State student, praised the camp's benefits.

"Even if NBC needs a helper, he'll call you," he said. "They showed us how to do it and what to do behind the scenes."

Wilmus said he would do it again if given the chance.

"It looks great on your résumé," he said.

Other highlights of the four-day session include interviewing a Kansas City Chief, a mock press conference with Schottenheimer, and broadcasts of football, basketball and baseball games.

Kelly Mohler, an administrative assistant to Holthus, points to the camp's increasing numbers as a product of a high retention rate.

"Last year we had 27," she said.

"We're going to have kids all the way from Colorado and Pennsylvania."

The fee for the Sportscaster Academy is $350, which includes a spot in the K-State residence halls, free meals, use of all of the equipment and handouts and a field trip to Arrowhead Stadium.

The camp can be taken for course credit at K-State, with an increase of $80 for in-state residents and a $282 increase for those out-of-state.

For those who live in Manhattan, the price is lowered considerably.

"They can call and ask to live off campus," Mohler said. "It's at least $100 cheaper."

For more information or a brochure with an application, contact Mohler at 537-4245. All applications must be received by May 1.

Couch potato learns to appreciate hip aspects of golf on television

VIEWPOINT

JON BALMER

JON BALMER is a freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications. You can e-mail your comments to Jon at (jkb2004@ksu.edu).

Back in my days of "Saved by the Bell" loyalty and mastery of the always-challenging Pogo ball, any televised golfing event didn't stand a chance against the potent duo of my channel surfing abilities and the Sony channel changer. Any hint of clubs and caddies, and I was already partaking of the acting talents of Screech and A.C. Slater.

But as I progressed down the jumbled corridor of life and welcomed new experiences, I stumbled onto one discovery that gave me a new appreciation for the rigors of golf.

This revelation, while seemingly harmless on the outside, was a dam-breaker that flooded my brain with golfing components the likes of which I had yet to discover.

Simply put, I watched "Happy Gilmore."

Yes, Cats, with the simple sampling of Adam Sandler's two-hour golfing explosion, I awoke to the once-hidden components of the game and realized how cool and swingin' the world of televised golf really is.

Boring and time consuming, you say? Rubbish I say to you! It might seem that way to the untrained eye, but after discovering the following pieces to the puzzle, you too will recognize the funked-out side of golf.

• Club names: Where else can you find a sport whose main equipment has been dubbed Big Bertha and King Shaft? The titles of these driving weapons are all that and a fistful of beer nuts.

• Payne Stewart: The man capitalizes cool in every sense of the word. Decked out in a set of knickers at each match, Stewart represents the old school of golfing etiquette to the max. With socks hiked to knee level and cap firmly tipped, Stewart struts through each tournament in one of these outfits.

• Cigars: While every other sport would shun the stogie, the golfing community welcomes it with open arms. It's not unlikely to see one of golf's so-called premier athletes chomping away on a fine cigar while preparing for the next hole. Nothing caps off a victory like lighting up a big, fat stogie.

• Celebration techniques: Raising the roof is all the rage, but golfers have been setting the tone for wild displays of emotional celebration for years. At the moment, Tiger Woods' patented fist pump is the most recognized, but other links masters have their own brand of festivity.

It's impossible to not see Chi Chi Rodriguez perform his putter-fencing dance after a well-executed putt. Not to be outdone, Lee Trevino's sporadic jig dances always conjure up a wave of audience applause.

Although these are all worthy techniques, the best routines tend to spawn from the celebrity tournaments. Bill Murray, the acting genius behind the early golf documentary "Caddyshack," always comes equipped with a pocketful of golf-infused madness.

Anyone who witnessed his takeover at the Celebrity Challenge a couple of years ago will testify to Murray's skill of turning it up a notch at any given moment. The next time he graces the greens, turn on and dig in, because he'll give you more than your daily recommended dosage of entertainment.

• Golf carts: How can a game that prides itself on being high class and honorable explain these circus-like golf buggies? Needless to say, the carts are a welcome relief to all the strict rules surrounding the game. With these miniature automobiles roaming the course, it's only a matter of time before professional golfer John Daly goes ballistic, seizes a cart and turns a tournament into a demolition derby.

With that said, I challenge you to still view golf as a game only suited for the over-65 crowd. I too once had these feelings, but after "Happy Gilmore," I stand a changed lad.

Take a look at golf sometime, and you'll realize just how strangely cool it really is. The Master's gets underway today, so if you find yourself unfulfilled after an episode of "Moesha" or "Walker, Texas Ranger," give golf a try.

Besides, sooner or later a golfer's bound to unleash in a moment best summed up by Kevin Nealon in "Happy Gilmore": "Doing the bull dance, feeling the flow. Workin' it. Workin' it."

Options exist for health plans

SARA EDWARDS
staff reporter

Although some students are covered on their parents' health insurance, others either have to get their own or go without.

Most insurance companies allow for full-time students to stay on their parents' insurance until they are 23 years old.

Judith Mays, director of the Lafene Health Center business office, said a great many students, especially incoming freshmen, are covered on their parents' health insurance. But, for those who are not covered, there are policies available for students.

Although Lafene accepts all kinds of policies, the Student Governing Association has chosen G-M Underwriters as K-State's health insurance company.

Students can choose from either the basic or comprehensive coverage. The differences in the two coverages are the maximum benefits.

Mays said basic coverage for a student costs $613 a year and comprehensive is $987 a year. The year is defined as fall, spring and summer. There are also options for students with spouses or families.

Mays said Lafene will file any insurance students want to file. She said students have to fill out releases to send the information into their insurance company.

Lafene will automatically file with insurance unless the student tells them not to.

This applies to X-rays, lab work, more than three physical therapy visits, allergy shots and immunizations. Mays said prescriptions are not automatically filed, and students have to send that information to their insurance companies.

Many companies offer students health insurance. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Kansas offers students individual policies. Graham Bailey, director of public relations, said he recommends policies from the First Choice Series.

The kind of policy depends on the deductible and the programs offered, like dental insurance.

Bailey said students should be able to find coverage between $65-$75 a month.

He said these policies are not just limited to students, so people can take the policy with them even if they aren't students anymore.

Even if students are covered under their parents' insurance policy, Bailey said it is still a good idea for them to look at their policy and talk with their agent.

Tim Winchester, general manager of Mutual of Omaha Insurance Company, said the cost of insurance depends on things like the customer's health history, demographics and tobacco use.

Bailey said he realizes a lot of students are dealing with college expenses, and health insurance is not one of their priorities.

He said students who can not afford health insurance might want to look into Health Maintenance Organizations, which can be cheaper but offer fewer choices.

Mays said it is important to have heath insurance because health care is so expensive.

She said costs at Lafene were about 40 to 60 percent lower than at other places.

"Our feeling as a health center is that all students should have health insurance," Mays said.

She said that it is better to be prepared than to pay a lot of money when something does happen.

"There's always those instances — you don't know what could happen," she said.

Battle for Bagels

Bagels are becoming as American as white bread

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Bill Schwab knows bagels.

Zayde's Bagel & Bake Shop in Saugus has been boiling the hard, crusty rolls since his father-in-law set up shop 80 years ago. But business has been slipping lately, as the bagel goes from old-world wonder to mass-marketed commodity.

Schwab's ancestors would be shocked by what's out there now: Bagels with chocolate chips, jalapenos and cheese. And they'd be stunned to know who has become one of the nation's biggest bagel retailer nowadays: Dunkin' Donuts.

Even Dunkin' Donuts chief executive Bob Rosenberg is surprised. Rosenberg's father, Bill, founded the chain in 1950.

The younger Rosenberg, who grew up in a Jewish section of Boston, is thrilled that the food of his childhood has national appeal.

"It's surprising, and it's gratifying," Rosenberg, 59, said Wednesday.

Dunkin' Donuts' parent, Allied Domecq PLC of Britain, began rolling out the bagels nationally last June. Sold in 2,100 of the chain's 3,100 U.S. stores, they are expected to account for 15 percent of sales by the year's end.

Dunkin' Donuts claims to be No. 1 in bagels because it has more stores selling them than anyone else. But the Randolph-based chain sells only about 4 million a week; Bruegger's Bagels claims to sell about 7 million at its 480 stores.

Bagels are a $2.6 billion-a-year industry that will probably grow to $3 billion within a few years, said Patrick Kearns, associate editor of Modern Baking, a trade magazine. Fresh-baked donuts, by comparison, have annual sales of about $1.8 billion, Kearns said.

Last year was the first time the magazine tallied bagel sales.

"Nobody really used to track figures. It's only been within the last three to four years that everyone's really been smitten with bagels," he said.

Zayde — Grandpa in Yiddish — might be surprised by the bagel explosion. But popular American products often take their lead from ethnic, peasant food.

The hard, crusty bagel that was the staple of New York Jewish families' diets has been transformed into a softer, chewier product with newfangled ingredients, like blueberries, that elicit cries of "oy vey" from purists.

"It's a pretty American concept, taking something that's ethnic and tweaking it into something which may have more mainstream appeal than the product that started the trend," said Tom Vierhile, general manager of Marketing Intelligence Service in Naples, N.Y.

And we're going to see a lot more of that, he said.

Take the UnHoley Bagel — a hole-less bagel stuffed with cream cheese. No need to slice and schmeer this one. Other national, supermarket brands are experimenting with pizza-stuffed bagels and other flavors.

Many bagel customers don't even associate them with Jewish cuisine. To them, a bagel sandwich is simply New York urban hip.

"People who are baby boomers may know the history and tradition of the bagel, but the young people are seeing it as a real cool food to eat," said Audrey Guskey, marketing professor at Duquesne University in Pittsburgh.

Schwab is already seeing the effects of the competition. Sales have dropped 20 percent to about 125,000 wholesale and retail bagels sold a week, he said.

When he took over the business 20-odd years ago, he made eight varieties of bagels, traditional ones like sesame, poppy and onion. Now he makes 16. He draws the line at chocolate chip, although he does make a spinach-and-pepper.

And there's no way he'll ever steam his bagels — it's boiled-and-baked only.

"I'm making what I remember — at least, what I think I remember — a bagel should be," the 52-year-old said. "But I'm not so sure from what I see out there."

K-State Choir to perform at All Faiths Chapel tonight

DANEDRI THOMPSON
staff reporter

The K-State Choir and Chorale plans to fill All Faiths Chapel Auditorium tonight at 8 p.m. with the sounds of music dating from the year 569, to a premier piece written by Kirke Mechem for the K-State Choir.

Rod Walker, choir and chorale conductor and professor of music at K-State, said that audiences will hear a great variety of styles and sounds.

"I think the whole program is interesting," Walker said. "Each of our numbers is different."

A chant, written in 569 by Venantius Fortunatus, and sung by the chorale, will begin the performance.

Walker and choir members are especially excited about singing "Christ lag in Todesbanden, Kantate Nr. 4," by Johann Sebastian Bach.

The Bach piece will be accompanied by a chamber orchestra complete with a Baroque organ, six violins, two violas and a cello.

"The Bach cantata is one of his best known and loved pieces," Walker said.

Choir members said they were challenged by the Bach cantata, and audience members will enjoy it.

"I think they'll like it, because watching the strings makes it more interesting," Jessica Kincaid, choir member and junior in voice performance, said.

Karen Doerr, senior in music theater, agreed.

"The first chorus in the Bach cantata has been the most challenging and rewarding," said Doerr.

Walker said that audience members are in for another special treat, because the 60 member choir is performing the world premier of "Time."

"He (Mechem) is a world known American composer," Walker said.

Mechem visited campus last spring to watch a K-State cast perform his opera, "Tartuffe." Walker said that he chose to hire Mechem to write a song for the K-State choir because several members have already sung some of his work.

Chad Pape, baritone and soloist, will sing the lyrics of "Time," which were written anonymously as a poem, and found on an old bell.

The final piece of the evening features another soloist, Kevin Bishop, tenor. He will sing a verse in the song, "Cindy," which was arranged by Salli Terri, a former resident composer at Emporia State University.

TAKING AMATEUR NIGHT TOO FAR

In Betulia, Colombia, an annual festival in November includes five days of amateur bullfighting. This year, no bull was killed, but dozens of matadors were injured, including one gored in the head and one Bobbittized. Said one participant, "It's just one bull against [a town of] a thousand morons."

DANGEROUS LIASONS

The Court of Appeal of Singapore ruled that oral sex is illegal as a substitute for "natural" intercourse but permissible if it is merely foreplay leading to such intercourse. The ruling came as part of a decision against a 47-year-old man who had convinced a 19-year-old woman that the only way to disgorge poisons in her system was to perform oral sex on him.

Wal-Mart voluntarily limiting customer purchases of some drugs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — To help limit the growth of methamphetamine — feared to become the newest drug epidemic — Wal-Mart is voluntarily limiting each customer's purchase of cold, allergy and diet medications containing chemicals used to make the drug.

"We have seen that this methamphetamine problem has been spreading," Jay Allen, a Wal-Mart Stores vice president, told a news conference Wednesday at Drug Enforcement Administration headquarters. "At Wal-Mart, we want no part, we want no role in helping to contribute to this problem."

The pills involved in the program that began Feb. 1 contain pseudoephedrine or ephedrine, essential for making methamphetamine, or phenylpropanolamine, needed for amphetamine. From 75 percent to 85 percent of the nation's supply of the drugs — also known as "meth," "crank," "speed" and "ice" — is made from the pills, DEA agents said.

Available at $80 to $120 a gram, the stimulant can be inhaled, smoked, injected or swallowed, often creating delusions, paranoia and aggressive behavior, and the effects of a single dose can last 12 to 14 hours, DEA agents said.

DEA Administrator Thomas Constantine called the move by Wal-Mart — with 2,300 stores, the country's largest retailer and one of its largest pharmaceutical sellers — "a major event for us." He said he hoped other companies would follow suit.

"I have never seen a corporation work this well and be so proactive," he said, adding that it will be "more supportive than any legislation we could write."

Under the guidelines Wal-Mart is imposing on itself, a buyer will be able to get a maximum of 17.3 grams of any of the three essential drugs at one time, Allen said in an interview.

Under a law becoming effective Oct. 3, a customer could buy up to 24 grams of pseudoephedrine or ephedrine at one time. The law does not cover phenylpropanolamine.

It takes about 60 grams of pseudoephedrine to make a batch of four to five ounces of methamphetamine, a batch that could earn the producer an average of about $4,000, DEA agents said.

Asked if Wal-Mart had ever been the source for clandestine labs, Allen said in the interview: "There have been isolated cases where people have come into Wal-Marts and purchased large quantities ... and taken them to labs and used them to make methamphetamine. The same for other retailers as well."

OBIT

"Until the very end, he would be available for consulting about everything, from nuclear magnetic resonance to computers," Hawley said.

He is survived by his wife, Maria Paukstelis; two sons, Peter and Paul Paukstelis; his mother, Stase Paukstelis; and his brother, Vytautas Paukstelis.

A memorial service will take place at 10 a.m. Saturday at All Faiths Chapel.

Maria Paukstelis remembers her husband as a bridge builder between all different kinds of people and a trustworthy helper.

"If I had to sum my husband up, I would sum him up in two words — fair and honest," she said.

forward and mold the facts to fit the FBI's purposes," wrote McVeigh.

McVeigh says the FBI has launched a similar propaganda campaign against him.

"The idea is that once the FBI can control the flow of information, they can demonize their target," he writes. "In my case, I have been sealed away in federal prison and denied most visitation and free communication."

Later, he writes, "In both situations, as with Richard Jewell, you only hear one side of the story, and it is usually not truthful."

Jewell was the security guard initially identified by anonymous FBI sources as the top suspect in the Olympic park bombing. The FBI later publicly cleared Jewell and issued an apology.

Jury selection continued Wednesday with four prospects being questioned by midday. One candidate was formally dismissed.

▶ Section of Laramie Street causes debate as Manhattan Christian College seeks street's closure.

NICOLE KIRBY
investigations editor

Two or three times a day, Erik Smith, sophomore at Manhattan Christian College, finds himself standing on the curb on Laramie Street, trying to cross without being hit by one of the cars zooming by.

A few blocks away at Haynes Salon and Supply, Kathi Haynes, co-owner of the salon and president of the Aggieville Business Association, recently found that she needed to open another salon on the west side of town, where access and parking aren't as hard to come by as they are in Aggieville.

And on the nearby residential Leavenworth Street, resident David Margolies, professor of entomology, worries that if traffic increases on his street, his daughter won't be able to play as safely.

The troubles of all three Manhattan residents are closely connected.

MCC wants to close Laramie between 14th and 16th streets, turning it into a part of the campus and making way for future construction and expansion.

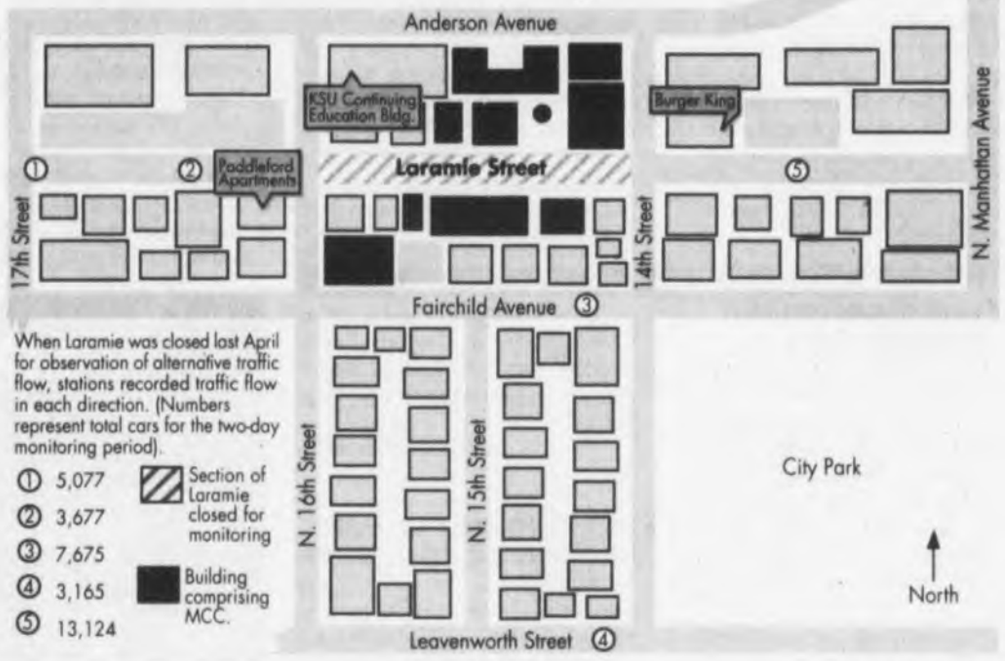
This would eliminate safety concerns and create what MCC President Ken Cable calls campus identity, or a sense of where the campus begins and the surroundings end.

Aggieville business owners say closing the street will restrict access to their salons, shops, restaurants and bars and therefore hurt their sales.

And residents on the other two streets that run from Denison Avenue to 14th, Fairchild Avenue and Leavenworth, say the huge increase in traffic if cars are diverted from Laramie will alter the complexion of their neighborhood.

The Manhattan Area Planning Board will consider all these concerns when it decides whether to approve MCC's application for a planned unit development on May 5 at the Manhattan Fire Department.

Creating a PUD would involve rezoning some of MCC's properties and designating what the architecture, site plans, signs and lighting would be for the area.



In addition to closing Laramie, the PUD proposal calls for removing the residences MCC owns on Laramie and Fairchild and creating a new chapel, a student life center with meeting rooms and a gym, a maintenance building and possibly a new residence hall, Eric Cattell, senior planner for the City of Manhattan, said.

What is now Laramie would become a landscaped

Closing Laramie — Steps toward a decision.

City commission is debating a proposal to close Laramie Street so that Manhattan Christian College may have a closed campus. The decision, to be made May 5, will be based in part on the effect of increased traffic around the campus.

When Laramie was closed last April for observation of alternative traffic flow, stations recorded traffic flow in each direction. (Numbers represent total cars for the two-day monitoring period).

ANATOMY OF THE INCIDENT

No motive established in shooting

No motive has been established in the shooting incident that occurred in front of the Delta Delta Delta house Wednesday afternoon.

Justin Ray DeMoss, who was arrested for attempted kidnapping and attempted murder in connection to the incident, remains in the Riley County Jail with bond set at $200,000.

The incident occurred when the victim, DeMoss' ex-fiancée, was walking home from class and spotted DeMoss' vehicle.

After an unsuccessful attempt to talk to the victim, DeMoss, freshman in sociology, then allegedly displayed a rifle and fired several rounds at her.

Although no one was hurt, one bullet struck a tree

Victims of domestic violence can find assistance in Manhattan for situations such as the alleged domestic violence incident Wednesday outside the Delta Delta Delta house.

▶ Need some help?
The Crisis Center offers 24-hour phone help for victims of domestic violence or sexual assault. Call 1-800-727-2785 or 539-2785 if you need help.

Victims can receive help at several places, including the Crisis Center and University Counseling Services. When a person calls the Crisis Center, a case manager's first responsibility is the safety of the victim.

"First of all, we ask if the victim is safe," Lisa, a case manager at the center, said. "If they are not safe, we call the police or have them call the police."

If victims want to get out of their homes, the Crisis Center provides assistance. A shelter, which is at an undisclosed location, houses victims and provides resources for them.

Multitude of job opportunities await students

STORY BY KARA LOWE • PHOTO BY CLIF PALMBERG

Food service, office work and retail provide many part-time jobs to college students in Manhattan. However, individuals have some other job options that provide interesting opportunities and experiences.

Jennifer Myers, freshman in business, works part time at Confetti's Party Shop in Aggieville. In addition to waiting on customers and helping decorate and arrange the store, she dresses up in costumes and delivers balloon bouquets.

"When people find out about my job, they can't believe I do it. Many think it's funny because I'm usually a shy person," Myers said. "I dress up like Supergirl or a pup and deliver balloons to people. Since the delivery is usually a surprise, many people get embarrassed."

She said she usually wears the Supergirl costume for deliveries to men. The pup costume is worn for child deliveries.

"I think the pup is fun. A lot of little kids are really happy when I give them a hug or wave at them," she said. "But one time, I had a delivery for a child who was having her first birthday. She cried every time I went near her."

Jeff Teel, senior in architectural engineering, said that many people do not believe him when he tells them he plays guitar in a Kansas City-based band called Jetenderpaul.

His band recently signed a record label with Velvet Blue Music and its compact disc will be released May 13.

"Most people think it's really cool and take an interest in the band when I tell them what I do. My job is a heck of a lot better than doing something else part time because its something I love to do. I'm enjoying the moment before a real job," Teel said.

This summer, the band plans to tour all over the United States.

"Traveling to different places is one reason I really like my job. One day the band might be playing to a group of sixth graders, and a week later we will be playing in a bar," he said.

Teel said having to commit a lot of time to his band keeps him focused because he knows

Union project gains tentative approval

The final design for the more than $10 million K-State Student Union enhancement project has been tentatively approved and should be ready for contractor bids in July.

Bernard Pitts, Union director, said the state negotiating committee has approved the final design and project architect Ken Ebert is nearly 30 percent finished with construction documents.

"Our goal is to complete the construction designs by July, put it out for R.F.P. (request for proposals) from contractors, and award the project by early fall semester," Pitts said.

Pitts said construction on the project could begin as early as the end of 1997.

There have not been many changes to the project since the initial design was unveiled to the public in January.

The art gallery, which was the subject of some controversy earlier this semester, will stay in its current location. However, the planned student lounge on the south end of the first floor will be replaced by a bank and ID center. The lounge will be moved to a

The Wildcat individual events speech team is No. 3 in the nation.

The team returned home Tuesday evening from the 20th-annual National Collegiate Speech Tournament with a third place trophy and two national champions.

For the sixth-straight year, the Wildcats have finished as one of the top-20 teams in the nation, Coach Craig Brown said. Brown also said this caps the third time in the past five years the team has finished as No. 3.

• GRAD STUDENTS TO COMPETE IN RESEARCH FORUM.

The second-annual K-State Interdisciplinary Research Forum, organized by the Graduate Student Council, will be at 1 p.m. Saturday on the second floor of the K-State Student Union.

This year, 37 students submitted abstracts of less than 300 words about their research, Joe Parcell, forum organizing committee member, said. Last spring, the first time for the forum, about 10 students entered.

Those who enter will compete against other students from their discipline, Parcell said. Five different disciplines will be represented at Saturday's forum.

"The forum is held to give graduate students a chance to intermingle and to see how colleagues present," Shannon Dermer, graduate student council president, said. "It is also used as professional development."

The council plans to have the forum annually in the spring, Dermer said. The organizers are pursuing the option of incorporating other schools from Kansas and other states.

The student who places first in each discipline will win $75, and the student who places second in each discipline will win $25. Money for the prizes comes from the various colleges the disciplines are located in and from the Graduate Student Council, Dermer said.

The graduate students will be judged on both presentation and content. Because the students will be presenting and having the content of their presentations evaluated at regional and national meetings in the future, the main focus of the forum's judges will be on presentation and style, Parcell said.

Judges were chosen based on recommendations from last year's judges and by suggestions from others involved with the forum.

• 3 DEAD IN SCHOOL COLLISION OF SCHOOL BUS, TRUCK.

MONTICELLO, Minn. — A school bus and a large truck collided at an intersection Thursday, killing two pupils and the truck driver and injuring about 10 other children, authorities said.

A Monticello School District bus was carrying about 12 elementary school students when it was struck about 8:10 a.m., said Don Lindell, chief deputy for the Wright County sheriff's department.

The empty gravel truck pulled into an intersection marked by a stop sign in its direction, the sheriff's office said. The bus, which did not have a stop sign, hit the truck's cab on the passenger side.

One pupil and the truck driver died at the scene, said Roger Oberg, a spokesman for Monticello-Big Lake Community Hospital. The sheriff's department said a second pupil died, but had no details on where.

"The bus had the right of way," said sheriff's Capt. Gary Miller. "There's a failure to yield."

Miller said he did not know if the truck stopped at the stop sign before proceeding into the intersection at two county roads just west of Monticello.

At least two pupils were in critical condition today at Hennepin County Medical Center in Minneapolis. The bus driver was in good condition at St. Cloud Hospital.

The roads were clear and dry at the time.

• HIGH-SCHOOL SECRETARY JAILED FOR HAVING SEX WITH STUDENTS.

McMINNVILLE, Ore. — A former high school secretary pleaded guilty to having sex with four 17-year-old boys and was sentenced to 30 days in jail and five years probation.

"I wish I could understand how it happened, but the truth is, I don't know. I only know it was wrong," Shelly Leann Hammitt sobbed Wednesday.

Hammitt, 28, was arrested Jan. 21 after resigning from her job at Amity High School.

She pleaded guilty to sexual abuse and contributing to the sexual delinquency of a minor.

She had sex with the four students in homes and in vehicles off school grounds. Three of the four boys have since turned 18.

House endorses state Senate bill outlawing partial-birth abortions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House today approved an amended version of a Senate bill that would outlaw partial-birth abortions in Kansas.

The House passed the bill, 87-37, after more than an hour of debate. The Senate passed a similar bill, but it was amended substantially by the House Judiciary Committee and that version was passed by the House.

"This provides a partial-birth abortion ban based on language passed by the U.S. Congress," said Rep. Phill Kline, R-Shawnee, who carried the bill during House debate.

▶ More info?
Check out the bill on the Internet at (www.ink.org/public/legislative/fulltext-bill.html)

The bill:

• Defines a partial-birth abortion as one in which the fetus is partially delivered vaginally and then intentionally killed before completion of the delivery.

• Makes it illegal to perform any abortion after 24 weeks except to preserve the life of the pregnant woman or prevent irreversible major harm to her.

"This is more than a partial-birth abortion ban," said Rep. Jim Garner, D-Coffeyville, who opposed it. "That's what the Senate passed. The bill before us does much more than that."

The House defeated an amendment by Rep. Nancy Kirk, D-Topeka, that would have restored the Senate version of the bill.

That version specified that a partial-birth abortion involved the insertion of a sharp instrument into the fetus' skull and the partial evacuation of the contents.

Gov. Bill Graves has complained about the House version of the bill, but has not said he would veto it.

The partial-birth abortion bill is SB234. It is available on the Kansas government site on the Internet at the following address: (www.ink.org/public/legislative/fulltext-bill.html).

House discusses abortions at KU Med Center, focuses on increasing hospital competition

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A bill designed to make the University of Kansas Medical Center hospital more competitive, but also containing a ban on abortions at the hospital, was approved by the Kansas House.

The bill passed Wednesday on a 101-22 vote. It would take hospital jurisdiction from the Kansas Board of Regents and give it to a 14-member board of directors.

▶ More info?
Check out the bill on the internet at (www.ink.org/public/legislative/fulltext-bill.html)

The House Appropriations Committee added the abortion ban, which is not included in the Senate version. Legislative leaders are expected to appoint a joint conference committee to draft a final version.

Officials at the Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., and pro-choice legislators said they saw little chance of removing the abortion ban during House debate and plan to ask the conference committee to remove it.

"The linkage of the two issues is unfortunate, but the chamber is so entrenched in the pro-life position that I don't see that any effort to separate the two issues would be successful," said Rep. David Adkins, R-Leawood, who supports abortion rights.

School officials fear the abortion ban could threaten the accreditation of the University of Kansas Medical Center's residency program. The Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education requires training in abortion procedures in the institution or under contract with another institution.

The House bill would prohibit the school from making such an agreement with another institution.

House Speaker Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, said the vote showed House members "believe tax dollars shouldn't be used to support abortion."

The bill also requires Medical Center officials to draft a business plan and submit it to the 1998 Legislature, then update it for legislators in 1999 and 2000.

The Medical Center bill is SB373. It is available on the Kansas government site on the Internet at the following address: (www.ink.org/public/legislative/fulltext-bill.html.)

Speaker promotes seamless learning agenda, encourages student-faculty communication

RACHAEL KRUEGER
staff reporter

Breaking barriers between institutional units and leading students to think and then apply what they learn were the implications of K-State's Chester E. Peters Lecture, said George Kuh, president of the Association for the Study of Higher Education, Thursday in Forum Hall.

Kuh said research theory and mental models are the answer to the question in his presentation, "What Matters Most in Undergraduate Education?"

"These ideas are not new to us," he said.

Kuh offered a 10-issue agenda, The Seamless Learning Agenda, to further answer the question of the hour.

Kuh said the first issue was that students need to know how to learn.

"Do they have the kind of experience to be continual learners?" he asked.

Kuh bombarded the audience with as many questions and quotes he could put up simultaneously on two overhead projectors, promoting audience discussion during and after the presentation.

Kuh said a holistic approach to talent development as the guiding institutional philosophy creates a powerful learning environment. If an institution really cares about this, he said, it is easy to see.

"Care means that the institution responds to what the students say," he explained.

Effective, instructional approaches and a balanced curricular commitment to general education were next on his list of issues.

Kuh emphasized student-faculty contact, saying that prompt feedback aids students immensely.

He also commended faculty who take the time to know each student's name.

"A remarkable thing happens when somebody knows our names," he said.

Peers also play an extremely important role in the learning environment, Kuh said.

"Students learn more from one another," he said.

Time usage is something both peers and faculty can influence, he said.

Laramie Street plans premature, need more developed study

Manhattan Christian College would like more space for its campus and a safer area for students to walk.

Residents in the area would like safer streets for their children.

Aggieville business owners would like patrons to be able to reach their businesses easily.

Everyone agrees that traffic on Laramie Street could be much better. But blocking off the street to traffic completely is too short-sighted to be a viable option. Waiting and doing more research would be better in the long run.

The first research was done in May, at a time when there were fewer K-State students to use Laramie. Plans are also being made to widen Anderson Avenue, which could reduce the traffic on surrounding streets.

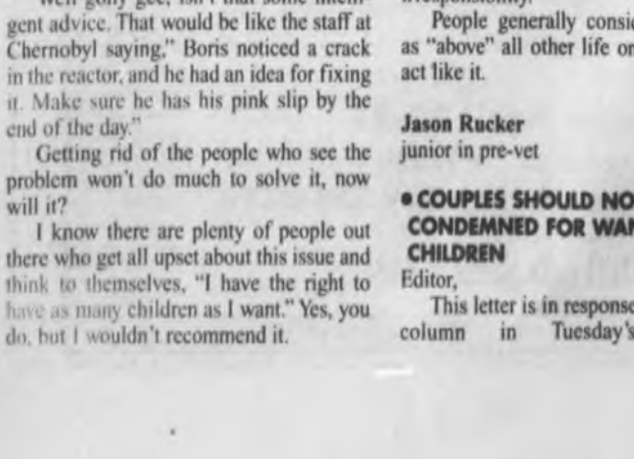
A more comprehensive traffic-flow study is needed before closing streets.

Residents need to be asked about what they think about increased traffic on their streets.

The businesses in Aggieville also need to be consulted about how closing a street leading into their area will affect business.

Other options to control traffic should also be explored. Will adding speed bumps help slow the cars on the streets? Maybe turning parts of Laramie into a one-way street would help the situation.

Either way, more time and research needs to be dedicated to this study before something as drastic as completely closing the street goes into effect.



Anyone concerned with this problem should attend the Planning Board meeting May 5 at the Manhattan Fire Department. If you have questions or concerns about the plans for Laramie, you can call the city's Community Development Department at 587-2412.

It's a small world after all

Internet opens doors to friends and companionship

KEN WELLS

KEN WELLS is a graduate student in theatre. You can e-mail comments to Ken at (sigma7@ksu.edu).

Are you afraid of computers?

I've heard several people tell me that they just don't like the infernal devices. They don't trust them. They can't figure out what's going on inside their little microchip brains. Granted, some mornings I understand that. ("But Dr. Davy, my computer went down. Yeah, that's the ticket.")

But most people don't share that attitude. And some of them should.

If you have a user ID to the campus system and haven't used it, I heartily encourage you to do so. Take it for a test drive. At the very least, check your mail. You never know who might have dropped you a line.

E-mail is the most obvious use of the Internet, but it's not the only one. As if life couldn't get convenient enough to send flowery prose to friends across the globe without twitching from your desk, there's always IRC, short for Internet Relay Chat.

IRC is a free-for-all chatfest that started some time ago and never really stops. At any given time, several thousands of users type away to each other on any number of different channels. Each channel is distinguished by its own name preceded by a number sign.

The software used to access IRC can vary, but reading help files makes life much easier. Or just find someone who does this as a habit, if you can get them to emerge from their lair.

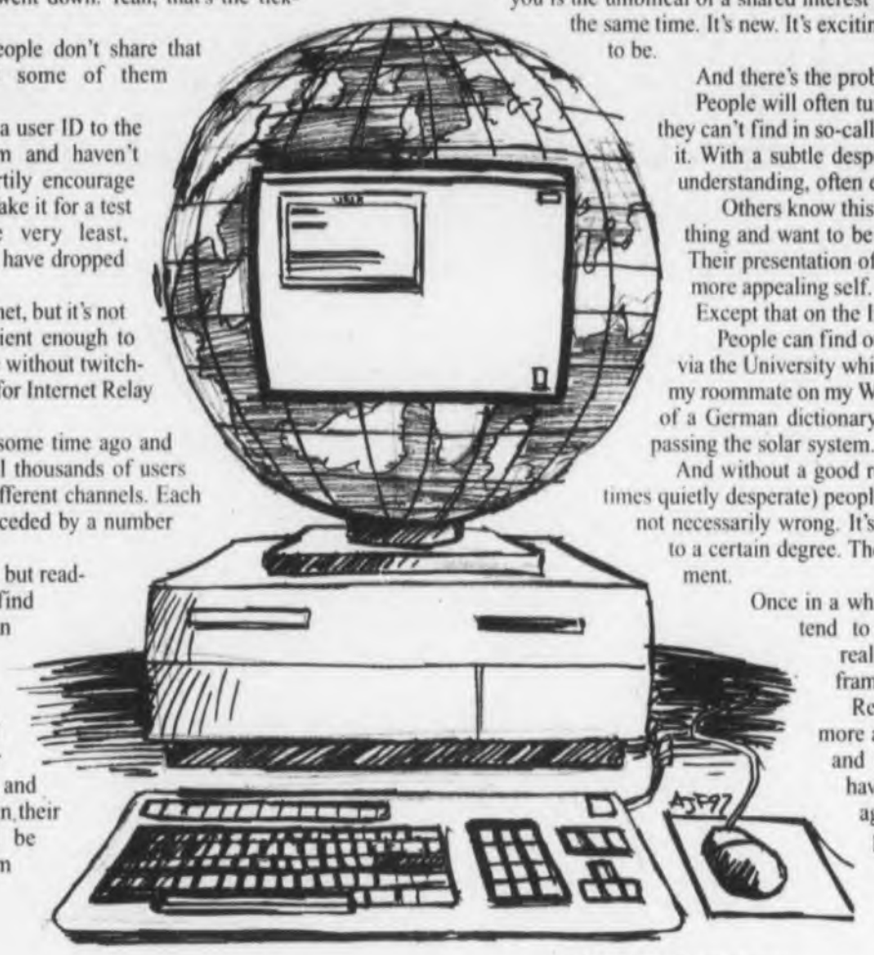
For example, the channel "#writers" is generally populated by professional and amateur writers alike. It functions as something of a support group, where users can discuss their latest projects, their frustrations and triumphs and ask questions to those who might have been in their situation before. Most of the users will be American, though users can pop up from Canada, Britain and Singapore, just to start the list.

If you're in the mood, you can start your own channel (say, for example, "#madcow") and get your friends, either on campus or on the Internet, to join you on the channel. (Yes, there is often a "#K-State.")

But the real appeal of IRC is to meet people you don't know, whose only connection to you is the umbilical of a shared interest that brought you to the same channel at the same time. It's new. It's exciting. It's alluring. It's whatever you want it to be.

And there's the problem.

People will often turn to the Internet to find something that they can't find in so-called real life, often without them knowing it. With a subtle desperation they search for companionship, understanding, often emotions even deeper than those.



Others know this. Many of them are looking for the same thing and want to be accepted as much as anyone else does. Their presentation of themselves will be adjusted to reflect a more appealing self. None of this is different than in real life. Except that on the Internet, presentation is everything.

People can find out a set amount of information about me via the University white pages. But I could still put pictures of my roommate on my World Wide Web page, type my words out of a German dictionary, or elaborate a family history encompassing the solar system.

And without a good reason to disbelieve, the trusting (sometimes quietly desperate) people of the Internet will believe. And that's not necessarily wrong. It's rather encouraging in the human spirit to a certain degree. The rub is not to lose sight of the environment.

Once in a while, for those of you — OK, us — who tend to become overwhelmed in the digital realm, pan out just enough that you see the frame of the monitor.

Realize that the computer is just a tool, no more and no less than a telephone, to be used and manipulated at your whim. It doesn't have a consciousness. It doesn't have an agenda. It doesn't have a soul. But it can put you in touch with millions of others.

Space program demands a balance of responsibility, exploration

JEFF CHAN

JEFF CHAN is a graduate student in English. You can e-mail comments to Jeff at (defcon1@ksu.edu).

I can remember, way back in 1979, all the media ballyhoo about the impending early reentry, breakup and fiery destruction of the Skylab space station, the orbiting space platform that resulted from NASA's Apollo moon program.

It wasn't all media ballyhoo, either. I myself wanted a piece of the thing to come flaming out of the sky over Topeka and crash land in my backyard. Of course, I was only 9 years old at the time.

I can remember the early-morning maiden voyage of the space shuttle Columbia, and my dad saying, "It'll never fly," not out of disbelief but in order to make the inevitable accomplishment that much more spectacular.

And, if I try, I can remember watching the final moon landing, Apollo 17, which took place in December 1972, on television before going outside and looking up at the full moon.

I admit, despite my youthful enthusiasm, I have mixed feelings about the space program. America, too, seems to have a love-hate relationship with it.

Case in point: Less than 12 days after Apollo 11 splashed down in the Pacific, Senator Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., urged the government to continue the space program, but in a smaller, scaled-down variety.

He said, "We have unmet needs elsewhere, in education, housing and so forth. (My constituents) began to see the space program as the detractor, from the standpoint of meeting other needs, rather than as the complement to our total national commitment ... "

Despite the euphoria about the successful lunar landings, Hatfield's comments summarized a growing concern amongst many. Like feelings from other legislators, coupled with growing pressures from other areas, forced NASA to abandon three more Apollo lunar missions.

Only one of the two planned Skylab stations was built, and early plans for larger, modular space stations orbiting Earth and the moon were canceled. Although the shuttle program survived, plans to go to Mars by the late 1980s were dropped.

Little has changed, it seems. There is still much talk about going to Mars. There is much talk of a permanent space station. Where are these projects? Where is that indescribable spirit that allowed John Kennedy to boldly pronounce America's intention to land men on the moon before the 1960s were out, a spirit that allowed it to happen? And, maybe even more importantly, should there be such spirit?

I asked this question of my Expository Writing 2 class last week, after reading to them a short piece out of the latest Pitch Weekly. The article, "The Top Ten Censored Stories of 1996," is a must-read. The No. 1 censored story, originally reported by the Covert Action Quarterly and the Progressive Media Project, concerns the launch, earlier this year, of the Cassini space probe to Saturn.

This probe, along with its cargo of delicate instruments, is carrying 72 pounds of deadly plutonium-238, which is being used to power the instruments, despite the fact that solar energy could be used instead.

The problem is this: Because the Cassini probe does not have the propulsion power to reach Saturn directly, it is being sent to Venus, where it will orbit twice before flinging back to Earth. In August 1999, the probe will slingshot around Earth at 42,300 mph at an altitude of only 312 miles above the surface, thereby giving it enough velocity to reach Saturn.

The running joke in my high-school physics class years ago was "Physics was a lie!" After all, the results of all the experiments we did never corresponded with the answers we were supposed to get.

No doubt the lack of decent equipment and experience contributed to this.

I only hope the same cannot be said of NASA. Three-hundred-twelve miles is not a lot, folks, no matter how you cut it. Faith in physics is fine, but when NASA reports that if the probe were to enter the Earth's atmosphere and break apart, "approximately 5 billion of the estimated 7 to 8 billion world population ... could receive 99 percent or more of the radiation exposure," I myself get a little worried.

The chances of this occurring are slim, to be sure, but it is possible. Skylab was not supposed to fall, but it did. The Challenger was not supposed to explode, but it did.

My class pretty much echoed the conflict I feel regarding our business in space. Like Sen. Hatfield, even those opposed to an expanding program did not want it abolished altogether. Defense, communication and scientific concerns seemed to be the common ground taken by both sides.

The basic human need to explore was also cited as grounds for a continued space program.

Yet the truly astronomical costs of space exploration, in the face of seemingly infinite domestic social problems coupled with the dangers of space flight as witnessed by the Cassini, seem to warrant caution.

Yet the possibilities of colonization, research and raw materials beckon.

Yet the as-yet undiscovered mysteries of our own planet call.

Yet the potential of extraterrestrial life, and finding it is overwhelmingly seductive.

Yet and yet and yet, I will continue to try to find a happy medium, I suppose. After all, it's my life-long ambition to go to the moon.

Space: It's not the final frontier. I believe the range and depth of human responsibility is.

• OVERPOPULATION NEEDS MORE ATTENTION

Editor,

Preach on, Brother Louk! I know that's right! Mmm-Hmm! We have ourselves a population problem. The biggest part of the problem is that so few people acknowledge its existence.

In my experience, whenever I, or someone else, brings up the problem of overpopulation, one of the extras from "Deliverance" pipes up and says something brilliant along the lines of, "If you think we have a population problem, why don't you kill yourself?"

Well golly gee, isn't that some intelligent advice. That would be like the staff at Chernobyl saying," Boris noticed a crack in the reactor, and he had an idea for fixing it. Make sure he has his pink slip by the end of the day."

Getting rid of the people who see the problem won't do much to solve it, now will it?

I know there are plenty of people out there who get all upset about this issue and think to themselves, "I have the right to have as many children as I want." Yes, you do, but I wouldn't recommend it.

Honestly, who needs more than two children in today's world? If you want 12 children, coach a Little League team. It's cheaper, and the kids go home when you get tired of them.

People need to consider the world their children will live in. You don't want to contribute to the ills of your children's world. It's rather obvious that we are overpopulated.

Starvation, epidemics of disease and war are running rampant around the globe. The population problem affects everything living on the earth. Therefore, we aren't the only ones who suffer for our reproductive irresponsibility.

People generally consider themselves as "above" all other life on Earth — let's act like it.

• COUPLES SHOULD NOT BE CONDEMNED FOR WANTING CHILDREN

Editor,

This letter is in response to Jess Louk's column in Tuesday's Collegian, "Overpopulation Problem."

As parents, my husband and I decided to have only two children. One reason was economic, another was the population and yet another was sanity. But it is not my place (or yours) to judge someone for wanting to have a big family.

I agree with some of your comments, but again, it is not your place or mine to decide who should be sterilized. And I am aware that there is quite a bit more behind the Middle East besides excessive water shortages in the Jordan River basin, etc.

You stated that, "AIDS might prove to be nature's next Bubonic plague ... Everybody keep your fingers crossed." Are you hopeful that it is the next plague? Because, as a parent, AIDS scares me to death.

When I was a teenager, parents worried about alcohol, marijuana and curfew. Now parents faced with the fact that the child that they bought into this world could catch this deadly disease from a medical worker who is too scared to come forward about the disease he or she caught in the very same hospital, or from a blood transfusion, or from unprotected sex.

Parents today are faced with many dilemmas and, if they choose to have one, two or more children, it is their decision to do so.

Not too long ago, there was a couple who visited K-State — beautiful, happy, educated with what they thought was a wonderful future. They married after college with such hopes to have children diminished.

The man had a female partner in college who called to tell him she had AIDS. The man tested positive and so did his wife. I certainly do not hope this disease is the next Bubonic plague. I have two beautiful children that I want to see grow up and enjoy life, love and happiness.

Until you experience the wonder of creating life with a most-special person, I don't think you can condemn a couple for having more than one child or choosing to have six.

• VIEWS OF OVERPOPULATION LACK CREDIBILITY

Editor,

This letter is in response to Jess Louk's column in Tuesday's Collegian, "Overpopulation Problem."

In Louk's column, he offers the solution that the United States should lead the world in easing the overpopulation problem by limiting children to one child per family. Had Jess done some reading, perhaps he might have learned the birthrate is decreasing in most industrialized nations.

I confirmed what I already knew by reading in my roommate's Social Problems textbook that the problem of overpopulation lies in the underdeveloped nations of the world that lack education and economic development — which are, by the way, improving.

I wholeheartedly favor helping these countries rather than the one child per family idea Louk has for Americans, which in reality would be mass genocide like what is being forced upon families in China.

A few other comments in this column also made me cringe. Louk subtly states that the conflicts in Bosnia and the Middle East would just "fizzle out" if these groups could benefit from decreased populations.

Yeah right! If only it were that simple. The problems in the Balkans have been ongoing for hundreds of years. In the Middle East, hundreds of thousands of Palestinians were forced out of their homeland when the state of Israel was established after World War II.

That fact, and the fact that Israel spans across the most holy land in the world, has much more to do with the problems in the Middle East than does overpopulation or Louk's opinion of "excessive water shortages in the Jordan River basin."

And finally, I sincerely hope Louk was being sarcastic when he wrote he hoped AIDS might become our next Bubonic plague and that Bosnians should be sterilized.

Haven't the people who have AIDS or the Bosnians who have experienced rape, mass executions and political turmoil suffered enough to have to be subjected to Jess Louk's ignorance?

Maybe in Louk's quest to relieve the world of overpopulation, he should set the standard for us all and contract the HIV virus or have himself sterilized.

Senate OKs team to pick attorney general

BENJAMIN YODER
city/government editor

Student Senate approved a five-person committee to interview candidates for attorney general at its meeting Thursday night.

The committee will begin looking at applications Sunday. Tim Riemann, student body president, must submit a candidate's name for Senate approval by Thursday.

The attorney general oversees and coordinates all University judicial boards and conducts workshops and inservices for judicial board members.

Senate also heard a first reading on a resolution that opposes the closing of Laramie Street, but senators will not vote on it until next week.

According to the resolution, student representatives believe the majority of the student body is opposed to the closing because a significant number of students live on Laramie and closing it would not be in the best interests of K-State students.

Manhattan Christian College has proposed closing Laramie Street between 14th and 16th streets for the safety of their students and to increase campus unity.

During open period, Aggieville business owner Kathi Haynes said she was not opposed to the MCC expansion. However, she said the Aggieville businesses would be harmed.

The new proposed Senate standing rules were also read at the meeting. Senate will vote on them next week.

The standing rules set Senate policies for attendance, legislative procedure and time limits for debate, open period, committee reports and director reports.

One-man jam ranges from Irish to bluesy sounds

BRANDI HERTIG
staff writer

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art was filled with the sounds of rollicking guitar playing and the sweet, mellow voice of Green Linet recording artist Brooks Williams Thursday night.

The small crowd tapped their toes and sang along to Williams' own brand of musical genius. His styles range from lilting Irish sounds to down-and-dirty blues guitar. Williams described himself as a "guitarist-songwriter with a blues-soaked soul," which is really only the tip of the iceberg of his eclectic repertoire.

The smallness of the crowd and room provided an intimacy that added to Williams' performance. His two sets were interspersed with familiar joking with the audience and hilarious stories about the evolution of some of his songs.

His song, "Baby Baby Baby, I'm Rich Tonight," had its beginnings in, of all places, the checkout line of a grocery store. Williams was standing behind a couple and overheard the man remark, "I'm not as rich as I thought I was."

Williams said he waited for the man to add something like, "But with you, baby, I will always be wealthy."

"He didn't do it," Williams grinned. "He didn't say another thing, and I thought 'You loser.'"

Williams called his guitar an extension of his body, and nothing could be closer to the truth. He handled his guitar with ease, ripping through complex fret board work and flatpicking with a grin on his face.

What sets Williams apart from other singer/songwriters of his genre is his ability to be able to take out the extra fluff in songs, and getting down to the bare bones of the music. The relaxed modesty of his playing brought out the fullest, most soulful music to have been coaxed out of a guitar.

The soothing simplicity of Williams' voice, sometimes reminiscent of James Taylor, sounded familiar even to those who had never heard it before. The blending of his voice and guitar sounded like the most natural thing in the world.

Williams performed his own songs as well as a few traditional folk songs, including one from the late-1800s, to which he added his own stark additions.

"When you find a song that was written 100 years ago, and it sounds like it was written yesterday — that's a great song," he said as he strummed the beginning of the song.

This BirdHouse series concert gave the audience a chance to witness a man in a realm of his own. There was no pretense to his one-man jam — just him, a guitar and a handful of fortunate witnesses. The smile on Williams' face as he played was mirrored on the faces of the audience members — people who clearly got more than just an evening of beautiful music.

House approves concealed carry bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A bill that would allow Kansans to carry concealed weapons has gone to Gov. Bill Graves.

Mike Matson, Graves' spokesman, said Thursday the governor is still less than enthusiastic and is not convinced that a majority in the state favors it.

The House debated briefly before voting 79-44 to accept Senate amendments to the bill.

The only substantive comment on the bill came from Rep. Ruby Gilbert, D-Wichita.

"In no good conscience can I concur," she said. "If we are going to be allowed to carry concealed weapons, we ought to be able to strap them on in here."

One provision would allow concealed handguns to be carried at legislative meetings and meetings of governing bodies of cities and counties.

They would not be permitted in the House or Senate, however, because other statutes forbid weapons from being brought onto state-owned grounds, including the Statehouse.

The bill was passed by the Senate last week. It would set up a system for the Kansas Bureau of Investigation to license citizens with clean criminal records who are trained in the use of firearms to carry concealed handguns. They could not carry them into government buildings, bars, schools or businesses that post no-carry signs.

The concealed-carry bill is HB2159. It is available on the Kansas government site on the Internet at (http://www.ink.org/public/legislative/fulltext-bill.html).

THE VARSITY eights boat practices at Tuttle Creek Wednesday morning.

STEVE HEBERT Collegian

Crew to row in toughest regatta of year

JEREMY KELLEY
sports editor

▶ Want to know more? Read the Collegian on Monday to find out about the terms, definitions and language of rowing.

The K-State women's rowing team takes to the water today around 9:50 a.m. at the Great Plains Regatta, in what coach Jenny Hale said would be the toughest regatta of the year.

The regatta, at Lake Shawnee in Topeka, certainly is the biggest race K-State has competed in this year. With 15 to 20 schools slated to appear on the water, Hale said there would be a lot of competition.

"It certainly won't be an easy race — that's for sure," she said. "We're seeing some crews that we have haven't seen before, and there will be a lot of fast boats there, but I think we will be able to compete."

There will be a few schools at the regatta K-State has seen before, in KU, Creighton and Texas — three schools K-State beat in weeks past.

But Hale said this wasn't necessarily an advantage.

"You can see it as an advantage. We're in a nice place to go out and win," she said. "We have held our own with them and have raced very well against them, but they're going to be ready for us."

K-State is taking three boats to the race: the varsity eights; the novice eights, which was undefeated against KU last weekend; and the varsity fours.

This will be the first regatta for K-State where preliminary rounds will determine who will race in the final rounds. Rower Sara Swan said that would make this race a tougher one.

"There's so much pressure in the first round," Swan said. "I think those qualifying rounds will be the toughest because we have to row our hardest if we want to get into the finals."

The women's crew has just recently turned some eyes in the sport of rowing after a great show in Waco, Texas, over spring break. Time after time, K-State has been labeled as the underdog, but apparently that hasn't hurt its performance.

"We have always been the underdog, the team who is never expected to win," Swan said. "Nobody ever thought we could win, and we have never really expected to win. We just go out there and race hard and do our thing."

In the days prior to the meet, the women's crew has battled adverse conditions and blistering cold morning weather to concentrate on making the length of their rowing stroke longer, or keeping the oar in the water as long as possible.

"All week it has just been about length — the more length in our stroke the farther the boat will go," Swan said. "We have made leaps and bounds this weekend as far as that goes."

Hale said their main focus of the weekend was to gain a lot of experience and show all the other crews that they are a real team.

"We'll just take it one race at a time and hopefully we'll get past the qualifying rounds," she said. "We want to show to everyone that we are a crew who can compete at this level."

Padres to have Hideki Irubu's right for 2 years from deal with Japan

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — The Japanese commissioner's office has ruled that the San Diego Padres will have the negotiating rights to pitcher Hideki Irabu for two seasons, a baseball lawyer said Thursday.

The Padres obtained Irabu's rights in a deal with his Japanese club, the Chiba Lotte Marines, in January. But the right-hander has refused to negotiate with San Diego, insisting that he be traded to the New York Yankees.

San Diego has received several strong offers for Irabu from other major league clubs, but things have been quiet since before opening day.

"We have put the matter on the back burner as we've focused on the opening of the season," team president Larry Lucchino said.

As for the new ruling, "We will respect the rulings of the Japanese baseball officials as we live within the rulings of the executive council here," Lucchino said. "And we will of course accept this definition of the term of our negotiating rights."

Irabu had said he didn't want to play again in Japan, but he is negotiating with Chiba Lotte about playing this season.

"The rules changed, so basically we're changing our strategy," said Irabu's agent, Don Nomura.

Last week, Irabu was told that Chiba Lotte won't take him back unless he apologized for remarks he made about the Marines, and signed a release saying he will never attempt to play for a major league team in North America.

Nomura said Irabu planned to do neither. Nomura said negotiations with Chiba Lotte are going slowly.

Irabu is holding out hope that Japanese baseball officials approve a change that would grant free agency after nine seasons instead of 10. Irabu calculates he needs just 48 more days to become eligible for free agency.

It wasn't clear how the Japanse commissioner's ruling would affect Irabu's status if that free agency change is made.

Weather, injuries hamper Kansas City

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Between the medical report and the weather forecast, Bob Boone is having a tough time managing the Kansas City Royals.

Instead of fighting the elements as they did during a snowstorm the previous night, the Royals bowed to rain and cold Thursday and postponed their game against Baltimore, scheduling a two-night doubleheader for Aug. 19.

But forecasters are calling for more of the same, and possible snow and sleet the next few days. That could endanger the weekend series against Minnesota.

And nothing messes up a pitching rotation more than rainouts — unless it's a stack of late-season doubleheaders. The Twins come back to town the last week in July.

"What does this do to my rotation?" Boone said. "We've already been talking about what we might do. We'll talk some more. There are some things you just can't change."

Beyond scheduling Tim Belcher (1-0) against Minnesota on Friday, Boone wasn't sure of his plans, although Kevin Appier (0-0) was a good bet to start Saturday against the Twins.

"We can't always get Mother Nature to cooperate with us," he said. "I'm sure they'd like to have the waters recede in the Upper Midwest, too. I'll sleep on it tonight and try to come up with a plan for the rotation. We've got about five different scenarios. And of course it depends on how many games we get in this weekend."

As Boone spoke, an aide brought in the day's report on the six players on Kansas City's 15-day disabled list. There, the news was better.

"Chili (Davis) ran on the treadmill without pain," Boone read. "Offerman — improvement seen today."

The bad weather is even holding back Davis, the 37-year-old DH who tore a thigh muscle on March 22.

"We wanted him to get outside and run today," Boone said. "He worked on the treadmill but you can't get a full sprint on the treadmill. He needs to get a good, full workout because those things are so tricky."

Nevertheless, trainers think Davis will be ready to make his Royals debut in a few more days.

Also on the 15-day DL are catcher Mike Macfarlane (strained rib cage muscle), second baseman Offerman (strained groin muscle), reliever Jaime Bluma (inflammation in shoulder) outfielder Rod Myers (broken wrist) and pitcher Rick Huisman (groin tear).

"By and large, I think everybody is coming along just about on time," Boone said. "We're getting there. If we don't have any more setbacks, then I think we can see the light at the end of the tunnel."

SMITH

Fans have been hoping he would decide to finish his career in Kansas City.

"I had a discussion with Neil yesterday. We touched on a number of issues," Schottenheimer said. "I don't think you ever close the door on any situation. But I do have a sense based on my discussion that he's interested in making a decison relatively soon."

Schottenheimer said the decision to let Smith go was financial.

"It's very difficult. But we're all operating under the same parameters, and there is a (salary cap) number you have to be at, and it forces you to make tough decisions," Schottenheimer said. "There is a market for players. And it seemed quite obvious ... that we're going to have to make a decision here, and we made a decision. And that was hard to do. But we had to do it."

Schottenheimer said the Chiefs would still like to retain Smith.

"If there is a reasonable means by which Neil Smith can be a Kansas City Chief, then that serves everybody's best interest, the Chiefs, Neil Smith and this community. But unfortunately, I don't know that that can exist."

Free agency and the salary cap, Schottenheimer said, sometimes create an unfair situation for everyone concerned.

"It's hard on the team, it's hard on the player, and where I view it as being the worst is it's not fair to the fans," he said. " Our fans have trouble identifying where this player and that player is.

"But every player has to do what's in his best interest, just as every organization does, he said."

FIRST GAME OF SERIES CANCELLED BETWEEN K-STATE, OKLAHOMA

The baseball game scheduled for tonight at 7 p.m. at Frank Myers Field has been cancelled due to probable rain and cold weather. Coach Mike Clark said he would wait until today to make an announcment about the remainder of the weekend. As of Thursday night, a double-header is slated to start at 1 p.m. Saturday at Frank Myers Field.

Cubs' rocky start to season comparable to sumo wrestling

I realized Wednesday afternoon that sumo wrestling is a lot like Chicago Cubs baseball: You go round and round and wind up really disappointed.

At the Sports Illustrated Campus Fest I partook of the fattest of all sports known to man, sumo wrestling.

Leaving all my pride on the ground with my shoes, I climbed into the well-used sumo padding and stood prepared to take on my opponent.

Despite the fact my feet didn't reach through the leg holes, and I was being choked by my all-too-big helmet, it seemed like a promising venture.

VIEWPOINT

TARA WRAY

TARA WRAY is a sophomore in print journalism. You can e-mail comments to Tara at (twray@ksu.edu).

I was wrong.

It was like a smack on the head, literally. My experience in the suit painfully reminded me of the start of the Chicago Cubs season: big, fat and stinky.

Last week it was a different story, however. I was on top of the world. It was the start of the major league baseball season, my hopes were up and I was ridin' high.

Now, a short seven days and many bruises later, things seem just a tad bleak.

The Cubs have managed to chalk up seven consecutive losses, tying a 35-year-old franchise record for their worst seasonal start ever, and the word in Chicago is "same team, different year."

As a diehard fan, I take these kind of insults to heart. You insult my Cubs — you insult me. Talk all you want about that other team down the road. I could not care less.

But you step on the toes of my Cubbies, boy, and I will take you on. If you are doubting my combat potential, just ask my sumo partner, who is waiting for her bones to set.

No, I am kidding, but I just might get pretty darned mad with you if you do not realize the potential of the Cubs.

Every year they break attendance records, do they not?

They still have one of the most famous play-by-play announcers in Harry Caray, and Wrigley Field is one of the most storied parks in baseball history. It seems the Cubs have everything — with the little exception of a decent team.

But they are still my team and that is that. This is not really something I can explain and I do not think the 35,393 Cubs fans that crammed into Wrigley Field on opening day can either.

Along with their minimalist style of play — that is, minimal offense (a .178 team batting average) and minimal defense — 11 errors in their first 6 games — they have managed to be written off by every sportswriter in North America as the worst team in baseball.

Well, this sportswriter for one does not care how their season started. The Cubs are 0-7, but ya know, I don't really care. I am brushing it off as first-season jitters.

There are 155 more chances for Chicago to bounce back. And after all, no team has ever lost every game of the season.

It takes a lot to make a winning franchise these days. It took the Florida Marlins almost $90 million to get to the point where they are, as a legitimate contender. Atlanta and Cleveland made big time swaps to revamp their lineup.

The Cubs, on the other hand, reseeded the ivy at Wrigley Field. It was not exactly a bang-up off-season for Chicago.

In baseball it seems you get what you pay for and Chicago, who ranks 16th on major league payrolls, seem to take that notion to heart.

With the exception of Sammy Sosa, the Cubs' record in 1996 reflected that of a club struggling to find big names to produce big numbers.

One thing they do not struggle for, however, is fan loyalty.

I am sure it has been said before that the only thing consistent about the Cubs is their inconsistency. Well, as lovable losers, they must be doing something worthwhile to consistently have so may fans.

I don't know, it could just be the scenery that makes them so endearing — the sights, the sounds and the smells of Wrigley.

Sumo wrestling gave me a chance to think, and while it may have just been the smell of hot plastic rubbing against my neck, I do not think the Cubs will be all that bad this year. Give the poor guys a chance.

If you don't, I am going to have to put that big, fat, funky thing back on and do a little butt whoopin'.

STEVE BIETAU, a native of Rockford, Ill., directs his tennis team Thursday afternoon. Bietau has won more dual matches than any previous coach before him.

After 13 seasons with K-State, tennis coach Steve Bietau is concentrating on Serving his team

STORY BY SHANE MCCORMICK • PHOTOS BY BRANDON WHITE

K-State women's head tennis coach Steve Bietau wasn't much of a tennis fan growing up.

As a football player, tennis wasn't one of Bietau's priorities.

Today, it is at the top of his list of priorities as he prepares his team for Saturday's match against Colorado at noon in Ahearn Field House.

Growing up in Rockford, Ill., Bietau didn't pick up a racquet until he was 14 years old. He didn't get serious about playing tennis until community college.

"My second year there, I met up with some guys I played with in high school," Bietau said. "They just convinced me that we would have a chance of having a pretty good team."

After a year of play at the community college level, Bietau began looking for a four-year school to finish his tennis career. What he found was a small school in Nebraska called Doane, which specialized in training players to be coaches.

STEVE BIETAU, coach of the women's tennis team, goes over a drill with Karen Nicholson, junior in accounting, Thursday in Ahearn Field House.

"The coach there was also the local doctor, who treated his tennis program much like a medical internship," Bietau said. "He gave guys a lot of coaching responsibilities within the team. He never went on the road with us unless it was a real important match.

"The two years I was captain, I coached the team a lot," he said. "I called the results in. I told him what the players did wrong and how they could improve. It was a tremendous opportunity because I got a chance to screw up and make mistakes in an environment that didn't threaten my career."

From there, a coach was born.

After leading his team to the NAIA national tournament, Bietau moved on to his first official head coaching job at Hutchinson Community College. In 1984, Bietau led Hutch to a 13th-place finish in the National Junior College Championships.

Into his third and fourth year at Hutch, Bietau said he started to consider the move to a Division I school to further his coaching experience.

While at Hutch he heard from a former player that K-State had an opening for a tennis coach. Bietau was named the new tennis coach for the men's and women's tennis teams in 1984.

"It was just a great match," Bietau said. "There wasn't a lot of resources and previous success here. And I didn't have a lot of college coaching background. I was very excited about the job, and I think K-State was happy to get someone who was very interested and enthusiastic about the job."

Since his arrival at K-State, Bietau has taken the women's tennis team to new heights.

The year before Bietau arrived, the Cat team had lost every dual match by a score of 9-0. By his third year, he had led the team to a .500 record at 11-11.

In 1989, Bietau and the Cats had a breakout year. In that year, he led the Cats to a 15-6 overall record. That mark brought on recognition as he earned the 1989 Big 8 Conference Coach of the Year award.

But it was the season of 1991, a year in which his team went 4-20, that Bietau remembers specifically.

"That was a big year for us," Bietau said. "That year, we beat Oklahoma State in the conference tournament finals. We had reached a level that nobody thought we could be at."

Bietau's teams might have reached that level because of his coaching philosophy.

"When players get to college, most of them can hit the ball," he said. "But the biggest thing that separates successful college players and one's that aren't is developing decision-making skills."

It is a philosophy that has helped produce three conference singles champions, Michele Riniker, Helen Schildknecht and, most recently, Karina Kuregian.

"With Steve, it wasn't all about teaching you the technical part of playing tennis," Kuregian, a 1996 K-State graduate, said. "You learned a lot about the strategy and decisions you make in a match. He was very good about teaching those qualities."

Assistant coach Jack Oxler said Bietau's attitude toward the players has brought him success.

"I have had two previous college coaches, and Steve cares about his players 10 times more than they ever did," Oxler said. "He really cares about seeing each individual player improve in their play. That's a really important element to have as a coach."

Bietau said he still loves coaching at K-State in his 13th year.

"The bottom line is that I really love it here. It is a great fit for me and my family," he said. "I have really grown as a coach here."

Marsh earns academic honors

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas point guard Jacque Vaughn, the national academic all-American, headed the list of 29 Big 12 basketball players named Thursday to the league's all-Academic team.

Joining Vaughn on the team were his teammate, Jerod Haase, and Doug Brandt of Baylor. Haase and Brandt were also on the national GTE/CoSIDA team picked by sports information directors from Division I schools.

Athletes on the Big 12 first team had gradepoints ranging from 3.3 to 4.0.

The 16 players on the first team, their schools, majors and hometowns were:

Brandt, aviation sciences, Hastings, Neb.; Ha-Keem Abdel-Khaliq, Iowa State, business administration, Kansas City, Kan.; Klay Edwards, Iowa State, finance, Morning Sun, Iowa; Jason Teeter, Iowa State,biology, Algona, Iowa; Chris Marsh, K-State, education, Great Bend; Haase, business administration, South Lake Tahoe, Calif.; C.B. McGrath, Kansas, Human biology, Topeka; T.J. Pugh, Kansas, psychology, Omaha, Neb.; Ryan Robertson, Kansas, business administration, St. Charles, Mo.; Vaughn, business administration, Pasadena, Calif.

Marsh

Danny Allouche, Missouri, business, Omer, Israel; Andy Markowski, Nebraska, pre-education, Ord, Neb.; Michael Cotton, Oklahoma, university studies, Jacksonville, Ark.; Renzi Stone, Oklahoma, university studies, Jenks, Okla.; Brandy Perryman, Texas, kinesiologypre-physical therapy, Garden City; Ross Charmichael, Texas Tech, pre-law, Dallas.

Thirteen other players were given honorable mention for gradepoints from 3.0 to 3.29

Schottenheimer not expecting Chiefs to sign Neil Smith

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Defensive end Neil Smith is unlikely to re-sign with the Kansas City Chiefs, coach Marty Schottenheimer said Thursday.

Smith, a nine-year veteran and one of the Chiefs' most popular players, has already received free agent offers from Denver and Oakland. Reports this week had him close to signing with the Broncos.

"Our door's open, but I don't know that we frankly can do the things that he might feel are necessary," Schottenheimer said. "I think it's highly unlikely that Neil will return."

Smith scheduled a news conference in Kansas City at 12:30 p.m. Friday to discuss his plans.

The 6-foot-4, 275-pound Nebraska product was the second player taken in the 1988 draft. He combined with linebacker Derrick Thomas, a first-round pick the following year, to give the Chiefs one of the fiercest pass rushes in the league.

But after five straight trips to the Pro Bowl, Smith's production declined in 1996. The Chiefs opted to use their salary cap money to sign Thomas to a long-term deal and let Smith test free agency.

COMMUNICATION COMPETITION

National Individual Events tournament teaches student to overcome obstacles

STORY BY BECKY WINTER

FRIDAY NIGHT.

"This story is what you make it. What do you want this story to say?"

My coach says this as 25 Wildcats sit crammed into a suite at the La Quinta Inn in Arlington, Texas, Friday night to prepare for the National Individual Events Tournament to begin Saturday. The tournament is host to 106 schools with 1,330 entries representing the top 10 percent of competitors in the nation.

It is an honor and a privilege to be here, but that's not enough. With 19 people qualified in 64 events, one of the largest entries in the nation, we are confident we can speak our way to a top-five finish. For the first time ever, we are shooting for No. 1.

Winter

SATURDAY MORNING.

We warm up with high energy, enthusiasm and as much K-State spirit as has ever filled the stands at a home football game. I don't know this from experience, only from what I've heard. Nearly every weekend of the school year for the past three years I have competed, communicated, connected with people at speech tournaments all across the nation. This weekend is where it all plays itself out. I started this story three years ago and have been rewriting, revising and improving ever since. Good or bad, I have no regrets.

FIRST ROUND.

I'm standing outside of my first round of informative speaking, and I think about how I got here. My story isn't one of great success carried over from high school. It's the opposite. I joined the K-State forensics team three years ago because I could not complete my first speech in my basic Speech 106 class. Completely overcome with fear, I had to sit down less than 20 seconds after I began. I was told that people like me who are not naturally talented just need a little help sometimes. At the end of that day I swore that would never happen again.

Today, I walk into the room, focus and communicate. The innate fear of failure flushes through me time and time again, but today that fear drives me. I give a flawless performance.

FOURTH ROUND.

The day continues, and by mid-afternoon I'm exhausted. In the back of my mind I hear my coach telling me that nationals isn't always a test of who is the best, but instead a test of endurance. I load up on ginseng and enough Diet Coke to put a small child into convulsions. I walk into my next round full of conviction and the personal assurance that I will be successful.

It's ironic to me how difficult it is to communicate what catapults me every weekend into the mangled confines of a dark van and the thin sheets of every Motel Six this side of the Mississippi. Time and time again, family and friends politely prod at my sanity for such dedication to this activity, never comprehending even a morsel of what it feels like to connect with an audience.

After racking my brain, the closest experience I can think of is the moment you realize that after weeks of trying to ride a bike for the first time, your father has let go and you're doing it all by yourself. Even if it's just for one moment, the adrenaline borders the perfect balance between irrational giddiness and the reality that with one false move, you can fall flat on your face.

Every round, I reach for that. In three years I think I have achieved it fewer times than I can count on one hand, but like the engine that could, I continue to try.

SATURDAY EVENING, AFTER THE SIXTH ROUND.

After 18 performances, I can't even speak a clear sentence. Groggy stares plague a vast sea of bodies huddled around the main building. Women limp barefoot from aching feet in hose with runs, and men model the exhausted and disheveled executive look with ties slightly off center and jackets held casually over their shoulders.

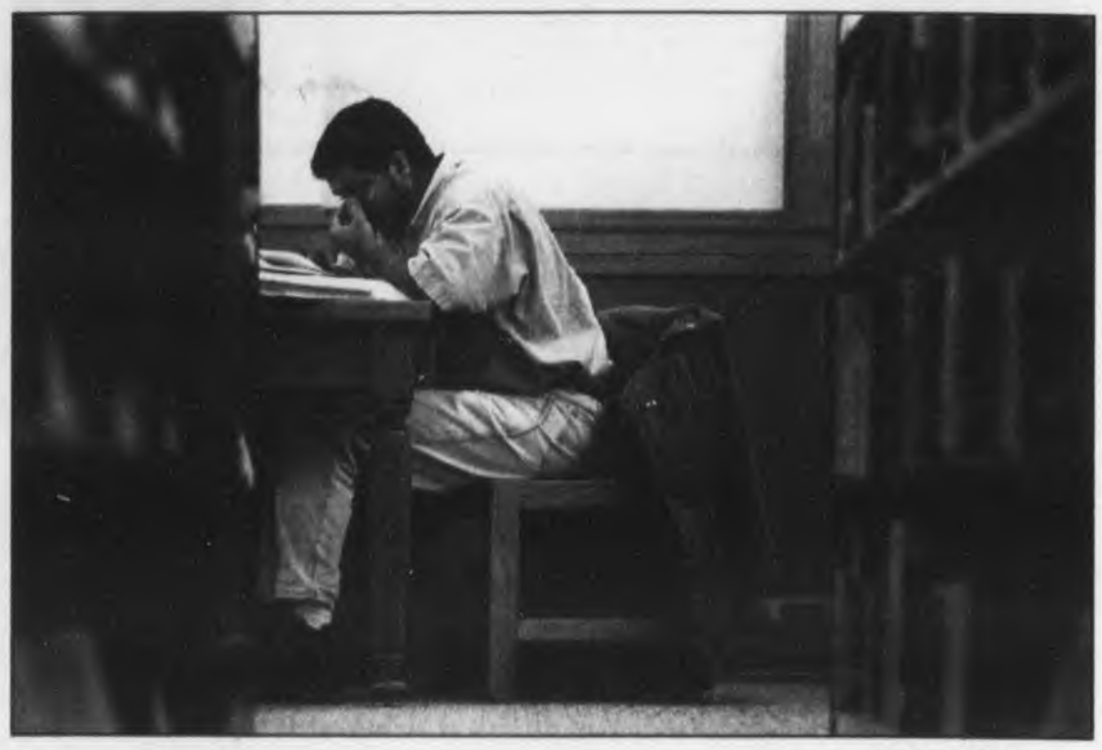
The first day is finished, but a dimly lit fire in every stare continues to burn. Just one last night of sleep and three more preliminary rounds before we see the unraveling of a story that began nine intense months ago.

SUNDAY MORNING.

We are beginning to feel the pressure. I realize I am a senior, and this tournament is my last shot at a fairy tale. I promise to make these rounds the best of my life.

I return from my last preliminary performance to the area in front of the main building. Hundreds of people are massed around scrolls of names hanging down from the parking garage on the Arlington campus. I can't see them, but I know that on those postings are the names of 72 people in three different events who have broken into quarterfinals.

I see my teammates. It's not good. K-State had only one break in this first flight. There are two more flights left to post, I hear myself say, but in the back of my mind I flash back to last year where we also had only one break at this point. We took 11th last year, a far cry from where we know we are this year. I take a deep breath and try to get my composure.



> "I see my teammates. It's not good. K-State had only one break in this first flight. There are two more flights left to post, I hear myself say, but in the back of my mind I flash back to last year where we also had only one break at this point."
> • Becky Winter

I hear a few shrills of success echo amongst many more low and quiet tones of consolation. Coaches, parents and teammates all offer condolences. For our team, it feels like someone has died.

The second flight brings excitement and the realization that this story is not over yet. We break four persuasive speeches and one program of oral interpretation. One of those persuasive speeches is mine, and I prepare for battle. I am sure that someone had stolen this nationals from us. Now it is our turn to get it back.

There are three K-State competitors in my quarterfinals round. Three get to advance to quarterfinals. It could happen. I compete in that round with more conviction than I have ever mustered up in my life. No mistakes, no hesitation. I feel good

"Aundray clearly dominated the whole tournament," Brown said. "Through preliminaries, quarterfinals and semifinals, only one judge didn't rate her as the best speaker in the pool."

Collins also finished 10th in the individual sweepstakes competition. This ranks her as the 10th best collegiate speaker in the nation. She also finished fourth in poetry.

Clayton Johnson, junior in education and speech, also returned as a national champion, taking first in communication analysis.

"I knew I had a fairly good speech, and I was hoping to get into finals. It just ended up working out," Johnson said.

This year's tournament produced a number of ground-breaking results for the team, Brown said. It was the first time three team members made it into the final round in the same event. Christina Foust, junior in speech, and Jeni Pruitt, senior in mass communications, finished second and fourth behind Johnson in communication analysis.

The fact that two teammates took first and second in the same event is also another first for the team, Brown said.

In addition to the team's ground-breaking success, another high point for the team was when Chris McLemore, freshman in political science, finished fifth in persuasive speaking.

"For a freshman to break into finals, let alone finish fifth in the nation, is exceptional," Brown said.

In the tournament, altogether five Wildcats finished with eight nationally ranked spots plus the team's third-place finish.

Collins said the team's success at nationals can be attributed to a number of factors.

"Last year's 11th place finish had a lot to do with it. We knew we could do better, so we set our goals and worked hard to achieve them. A lot of cooperation and the willingness to help each other out was the key," Collins said.

One thing that separates the Wildcats from the other collegiate teams in the tournament is the support K-State gives to the squad, Brown said.

"I heard coaches saying their universities either don't recognize the speech department or are cutting their funds. I had to be quiet when I heard that because they wouldn't want to hear about how much K-State really cares," Brown said.

With a successful season behind them, the Wildcats have high hopes for next year, Foust said.

"This was the team to beat this year and will be the team to beat next year," Foust said. "Those who finished well will know they can do it again and those that got close know what it takes to get there."

▶ MELVIN VS. THE WORLD

CHRIS BALSIGER, sophomore undecided and frontman for Jiffy Boy, performs with the band at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon. Jiffy Boy has played anywhere from house parties to Rusty's and the Bottleneck in Lawrence.

'Skacrustepifat'

Manhattan's Jiffy Boy describes their sound as a mix of their influences: ska, crust punk, Epitaph Records and Fat Wreck Chords

STORY BY PHIL KELLUM • PHOTO BY JILL JARSULIC

A small, nondescript unit of self-storage sheds on the edge of town, by the Manhattan Municipal Airport, is where the sounds of Jiffy Boy are melded and shaped into a punk rock explosion.

At least once a week, usually more, you'll find these five guys blasting out blazing three-chord punk rock as practice for their furious live shows.

Music Review

The quintet is fronted by Chris Balsiger, sophomore undecided , and filled out by bassist and backing vocalist Scott Griffin, senior in general management and marketing; rhythm guitarist Marc Johnson; "Reverend" Jed Eropkin, junior in mathematics; and lead guitarist Jeremy Sturgell, sophomore in radio and television.

Jiffy Boy formed March 2, 1996, after Griffin, Eropkin and original guitarist Damon Osipik, senior in German, saw Epitaph punk band Ten Foot Pole play in Kansas City. They decided then that they wanted to start a punk band.

Osipik left the band in February, and Johnson and Sturgell signed on in March.

"We're all too old to skate, so we play music," Eropkin said.

Osipik was replaced by two guitarists instead of just one new guitarist, because it sounds a lot better with two, Eropkin said.

"There's safety in numbers," Balsiger added.

Jiffy Boy draws their influences from many different areas, but mostly punk.

"I think our influences are very far-reaching," Balsiger said.

The band's influences range from Operation Ivy, Swingin' Utters and A.F.I. to poppier punk bands like the Queers and harder edged bands like Grimple, Logical Nonsense and Naked Aggression. Even Neil Diamond was mentioned.

"Themes Of A.C.T.I.O.N., they were definitely an influence," Eropkin said.

"The Grateful Dead is not an influence on our band," Johnson said.

"Whatsoever," Eropkin said.

Describing their sound, and the band, is difficult.

"Fat guys (Griffin and Johnson) on the left side, and skinny guys (Sturgell, Balsiger, and Eropkin) on the right," Johnson said.

"Skacrustepifat" is the term Eropkin used to describe their sound. It is a mixture of ska, crust punk, Epitaph Records and Fat Wreck Chords, from which they draw most of their influences.

Jiffy Boy has played everywhere, from house parties to clubs like Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, Bombers, The Bottleneck in Lawrence, Gee Coffee in Olathe and even Colorado State University in Ft. Collins.

However, the band favors playing house parties over shows in clubs. Their best show ever?

"The best show was any house party," Griffin said.

"Chance is really good, too. The Speeddog Champion show was good," Sturgell said.

While the band loves to play its music wherever there are a lot of people, Balsiger said, there is but one true motivation for playing.

"Free beer is the only motivation," Griffin said.

It's clear, by watching its shows that the band has fun playing together. Eropkin is the only one who is not jumping around and going crazy, simply because he is stuck behind his drum kit.

The other four members of Jiffy Boy are known to leap in the air quite frequently during live sets, a la NOFX. Balsiger also likes to make faces at the crowd and spit on them occasionally.

In the past, Jiffy Boy has performed covers of "MTV Get Off The Air" by Dead Kennedys, and "I Don't Wanna Hear It" by Minor Threat, but they do not perform these anymore.

"We're gonna do a Jackson Five cover. It's probably about a girl. It's the first one on the 'Greatest Hits' record," Eropkin said.

Future hopes for the band include recording a split 7-inch with Derailer. They would also like to go on tour with Derailer this summer.

"Because we love Derailer. They're a bunch of great guys," Eropkin said.

"Derailer is our brother band," Johnson said.

"Future plans (include) trying to get Chris back to normal again, eating meat and animal products," Johnson said.

"No way. Future plans are trying to make the rest of the band vegan like me," Balsiger said.

Jiffy Boy is playing Tuesday at Bombers with local ska band Ruskabank and ska-punk band Missile Command, from Austin, Texas.

The Academy of Ancient Music to bring classical music to McCain Sunday

PORTIA SISCO
arts and entertainment editor

Hear classical music played the way the composers intended it to be played.

Music Review

The Academy of Ancient music, directed by Christopher Hogwood, will bring the music of Johann Sebastian Bach and George Frideric Handel to K-State at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

The Academy differs from other orchestras that perform classical music because they strive for authenticity by performing with the types of instruments that were used at the time the music was composed.

Andrew Manze, violinist, gives a stunning performance on the Academy's compact disc, titled "J. S. Bach Single and Double Violin Concertos."

In the first selection, titled "Concerto for Two Violins in D Minor," Manze is partnered by Rachel Podger, violinist, as they perform the second movement, "Largo ma non tanto."

This first piece is subtle, with a light, teasing play between Manze and Podger.

The cello provides a rich background as the violins reach for higher notes. A harpsichord is a welcome addition, with its distinctive plucking sound providing the authenticity that the Academy is known for.

Manze and Podger each take turns leading, with changes so subtle that at times it's hard to tell who is playing.

The second selection is the third movement, "Allegro assai," of the "Concerto for Violin in A Minor." Manze plays a rapid first violin, using splendid runs and finger-play across the instruments. Despite the quick, challenging passages, his music remains crisp, with a stunning vibrato.

The cello is the heartbeat of the music, keeping time for the rest of the instruments.

Manze, nicknamed a Baroque terrorist, will be with the Academy throughout their United States tour, including their performance at McCain on Sunday.

The new CD, in collaboration with Harmonia Mundi USA, is Manze's first release with the Academy as the Associate Director of The Academy of Ancient Music.

Tickets for the performance in McCain are available noon to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday at the McCain Box Office. Tickets are $28 for the general audience, $14 for students and children and $26 for senior citizens.

Surgeons removed a cataract from the eye of the National Zoo's 6-foot-long Komodo dragon "Muffin" in the hope that she could better see how studly the male "Friendly" was, and thus would mate with him.

And in January, doctors in Johannesburg, South Africa, performed spinal surgery on a 10-foot-long python, which had been run over by a car.

Contrary to what one's eyes tell us, the python has 306 vertebra and 268 ribs.

And in Jackson, Mich., in February veterinarian Timothy England fitted a stray rooster with artificial legs after he had to amputate his natural ones because of frostbite.

individual counseling," Lisa said.

The center offers 24-hour assistance, which enables people to call and receive help. They also meet with some victims during the day in a public place, which appeals to some victims whose abusers are not home at that time.

If victims do not feel they can get out of the situation, Lisa said, the counselors try to help them understand why they need to get out.

"We talk about their safety and that of their children, if children are involved."

One of the main concerns of victims is confidentiality because victims are worried about their safety.

"We talk about it all in confidence," Lisa said. "A lot of times that's very important to the victim."

When people contact University Counseling Services, counselors meet with them and try to find out if the counselors can help.

"What we would do is meet with them individually," Clairressa Goad, psychology intern, said. "If their issues are beyond what we could provide, we would refer them to someone in the community."

While the University Counseling Services office is not open 24 hours a day, someone is always available to talk with. If people calls the office number, the answering machine will give them a number to contact counselors who is on call 24 hours.

Both facilities said they are kept busy, but neither could give exact numbers of people who use the services. But Lisa at the Crisis Center said the number of people needing help does vary.

"Some nights and days we're busy with calls and people coming into the shelter," she said. "Some nights there's long stretches with no one. I would say on weekends and Thursday and Fridays that we have a few more calls."

SHOOTING

close to the victim, Lt. Herbert Crosby, Riley County Police Department, said. He also said it appeared another bullet struck the shutter of the Tri-Delt house.

DeMoss then attempted to take the victim to his vehicle.

"He had a hold of her and was attempting to drag her to the vehicle," Crosby said.

There were four witnesses who came to the victim's rescue. They were Edward O'Malley, senior in history; Adam Green, senior in sociology; George Bocox, junior in accounting; and Chris Bainter, freshman in computer engineering. They are all members of the Beta Theta Pi house.

Bocox said he doesn't think he is a hero.

"I don't want to be looked at as a hero," he said.

Bocox said they were leaving the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority house, of which the victim is a member, when they first saw DeMoss in his vehicle.

They heard the shots fired and saw the victim behind the tree. He said that was when they ran across the street to the victim.

Three of the men restrained DeMoss, while the fourth one pulled the gun out of the way, Bocox said.

"They took his gun away and detained him from continuing his activities," Crosby said.

DeMoss cooperated with the four men while they waited for the police to arrive to take him into custody.

"He was very cooperative. He didn't put up a fight at all," Bocox said.

Kerry Boydston, Kappa president and junior in agricultural journalism, said the victim was fine, and she was not physically hurt.

UNION

second floor space, currently occupied by the Cats' Pause Lounge.

Pitts said since the project is on a tight budget, some items will be placed on an alternatives list and funded when money is available. The enhancement budget is still in flux, Pitts said.

Union enhancement has been guided for the past few years by a series of committees, involving students, faculty and staff of K-State.

Pitts said those committees have now been dissolved and reformed into a steering committee, involving representatives from Student Governing Association, the administration and Union administration. It will oversee design and construction issues as they arise.

Pat Carney, Union Governing Board chairperson, co-chairs the steering committee with Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco.

The committee last met the week before spring break when it finalized the project for submittal to the state.

Carney said the biggest changes in the project involved the addition of 3,000 square feet to the Office of Student Activities and Services.

This space would come from the removal of the automatic teller machines. The ATMs would be in the new convenience store and in the bank, both on the first floor.

Because the bank was moved to the southern end of the first floor, it frees up space near the existing copy center for the addition of more retail or student activity space.

"We haven't placed any designation on that space yet," Carney said.

The committee will not meet soon but is waiting for the state to formally approve the project.

"They have given tentative approval, but not formal approval due to verification of some codes," Carney said.

The original Union expansion project, funded by a special student fee, was to include the addition of more space to the current Union facilities, but safety and Americans with Disabilities Act considerations reduced the available budget. The current design is a scaled-back version of the expansion.

The new Union will include a food court, a coffee bar, a computer store, a bank and many remodeled areas throughout the building.

A planned renovation and expansion of the free-speech zone — the outdoor space between Seaton Hall and the Union — will not begin design and construction with the Union project, but will occur over several years.

Pitts said the delay was necessary because the free-speech zone will be partially funded by University money.

JOBS

he has to study more efficiently.

Kevin McCann, senior in radio/television, also has little time to devote to school because of his as job co-host of K-Rock's morning show.

"I don't have the opportunity to stay up late to do class projects since I get up every morning at 4:30 to work. This makes studying difficult," McCann said.

He began his job as a temporary employee about a year ago and moved up to his job as the a full-time DJ.

"My job is not very difficult. I just play music and talk, which is not a bad thing. It's a lot of fun, too," McCann said.

He said he meets many people on the air. Last week, a girl brought in about 40 pieces of lingerie to the studio during a ruse McCann and his co-host, J.B. Morrison, were doing about an ex-girlfriend.

"It was pretty odd. The girl had no problem sharing her underwear with us," he said.

LARAMIE

area that would still allow pedestrian traffic through the campus, but cars would be diverted to other streets, such as Anderson Avenue, Fairchild and Leavenworth.

In May 1996, MCC commissioned BG Consultants Inc. to study the effects of closing Laramie. The firm blockaded the part of the street in question and counted cars at several surrounding intersections.

Traffic slowed on the segment of Laramie west of 16th, doubled on Fairchild and Leavenworth, and showed little change on Anderson and on the segment of Laramie east of 14th, into Aggieville.

The leap in traffic on Fairchild and Leavenworth alarmed the residents.

"We do want to make it unattractive for traffic to be on these streets and put it on Anderson Avenue, where it should be anyway," Jack Messer, city engineer, said.

Cable said the planned widening of Anderson would compensate for the closing of Laramie, but neighbors such as Margolies are skeptical.

Margolies said the traffic study was skewed by a too-narrow scope and an inappropriate testing time. The test area should have included all the streets from Sunset to Manhattan avenues and from Anderson to Poyntz avenues, he said.

He also said the study should have been conducted at a time when K-State students weren't at home studying for finals.

His neighborhood is in a delicate balance between homes that are owner-occupied and those that are rentals, Margolies said. Close to a park and an elementary school, the locals are families and many have small children.

"If you start bringing more traffic through here, people are going to be less interested in living here. And if people start moving out, there's going to be a lot more rentals," he said.

Aggieville has the opposite problem: Instead of increased traffic, it could experience decreased business.

Haynes also said the study was skewed, and said it didn't show the scope of the drop in traffic Aggieville could experience if Laramie closes.

"If we are going to attract the type of retail tenants we want in that area, you just cannot restrict access," Haynes said. "We already had to open a business on the west side of town because people tell me, 'I'd like to come down there, but I can't park. I can't get in there.'"

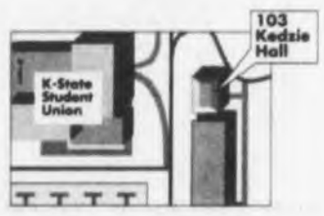
Haynes said she absolutely supported MCC's expansion, but she wants that to happen without the closing of Laramie.

Cable said the expansion was part of a push to increase MCC's enrollment. The college hired an enrollment-management firm to review its potential, and the college learned that although its staff and activities showed promise, an increase would be difficult without developing the campus.

"Our contention is it will not adversely affect Aggieville," Cable said. "Aggieville is a destination, and people go there because they want to go there."

MCC students say they feel most strongly about having a unified and attractive campus, but they do get a bit tired of getting honked at and even risking their lives when trying to cross from one building to another.

"The people who have a problem with it are the ones who like driving a million miles an hour down the middle of our campus," Smith said.



All parties have suggested compromises, such as narrow intersections and traffic circles to help discourage and slow the increased traffic.

Such measures could work, Margolies said, but he said MCC should have shown a willingness to compromise before pushing the PUD through the Planning Board and sparking panic and protests.

"So far it's been set up as a conflict, and that's too bad," he said.

WINTER

about what I have accomplished, and I know I could do no more.

I return for postings of the final flight. Nervous, anxious and leery, we look with anticipation. After postings go up, we realize K-State has made a comeback and could be a main character in this scene. We break one after-dinner speech, one poetry program, one dramatic interpretation and seven communication analysis speeches, one of which is mine. I look to my coach and know that it's a long shot, but the fairy tale is still alive.

At this point it is late in the afternoon, and I am one of the last speakers in the round. I am very tired, and I sit in the back of the room bouncing my feet on the ground, snapping my knuckles and biting my cheeks trying to keep myself awake.

With so much stress in the past month, sleep has taken a back seat. I'm regretting it now. When the judges call my name I set up my visual aids and sit down. From across the room, one of my competitors tells me that they are uneven, and for some reason that makes me angry. I get up, fix it and with all the energy of the General Electric company, I deliver the speech as though I had just returned from a Caribbean vacation. I am relaxed, confident and focused. I know I have communicated with the audience.

SUNDAY NIGHT.

After that round, the tournament is host to a big banquet. Everyone I have ever competed against is sitting in that room, and it's a really overwhelming feeling.

What's even more overwhelming is the announcement of semifinalists in persuasion. K-State has three competitors in semifinals. I am not one of them. I walk across campus to the van. It's a really bad feeling when you know you have done all you could to win and you still weren't successful, but I remind myself it would be worse if I hadn't done it at all.

I take a lesson from one of my favorite stories as a child, "Anne of Green Gables." Tomorrow is a whole new day with no mistakes in it. I still have one speech left to find out about, so I sleep with the hope that I will have at least one more performance left.

MONDAY MORNING, PERSUASION SEMIFINALS.

I find myself mouthing the words to my communication analysis speech during the round. I take it as a sign that intuitively I know I made it out. When postings go up I'm glad I practiced. I will need it for my semifinal round.

MONDAY MORNING, COMMUNICATION ANALYSIS SEMIFINALS.

This round seems so long. I'm sitting, looking at the time, trying to look as though I am paying attention. I'm not. When I get up, my adrenaline is at an all-time high. It was good to break to two quarterfinals rounds, but to make it to a semifinals round has always been my goal. Slowly the wheels begin to turn, and I know that with this performance I have found that perfect balance between having complete control and the confidence to take risks. I shift my performance into high gear, giving it everything I have. Today I do not sit down. I don't even think about it. Today, like a bicycle for the first time, I ride.

When I am finished, I am happy. I assure myself that regardless of how this round ends up, I will not be disappointed.

When postings go up for finals, I am still happy. I didn't make it out, but I've learned what no textbook could ever teach me. It is what professors and intellectual scholars talk about when they discuss the fruit of life. I have learned how to overcome the obstacles inherent to myself.

AWARDS ASSEMBLY.

I take a long look at the hundreds of people in this huge room. I am lucky to have been able to practice my passion in the presence of such minds and in the company of so many great people.

This certainly isn't the ending I expected to this story when I began, and I suppose it's not the one I would have written for myself, but I can stroll into the sunset knowing that what I have gained from this activity transcends more than any metal paper weight could ever represent. Exhausted, apprehensive, I have fully completed the final chapter to my story.

Intersession enrollment begins

HANG NGUYEN
staff reporter

Early enrollment for May and August intersessions began Wednesday.

The Division of Continuing Education recommends students enroll for May and August intersessions during the primary enrollment April 9-25 in Willard 217. Secondary enrollment dates are April 9 through the first day of class at College Court 131.

Students who enroll after the second class meeting ends will be charged a $25 late fee.

"If students go through early enrollment, it decreases the danger of courses being canceled or filled," said Deb Taylor, a program coordinator for the DCE.

There will not be individual notifications sent out if classes are canceled. Notices will be posted in the K-State Student Union near the information desk on April 30.

The DCE has not always offered two intersessions. Last summer was the first time in years that intersession has been offered in two sections, Taylor said.

May intersession courses will be May 19-June 6, while August intersession will be August 4-22.

"It gives students who want to stick around this summer a variety of course offerings," Taylor said.

Some new courses will be offered this summer, including The Age of Dinosaurs, Jewelry Fabrication, Family Mediation and Applied Geostatistics, which fits a requirement in the colleges of Engineering, Arts and Sciences and Agriculture.

"Both faculty and students have the opportunity to take on topics that are more specialized, and it allows students to pursue areas that they usually can't, especially interdisciplinary courses," Keith Miller, research assistant, said.

Miller will teach The Age of Dinosaurs this summer.

Tuition will be due at the time of enrollment. On-campus tuition will be assessed on a resident/nonresident rates.

Off-campus course work will be $85 per undergraduate hour and $125 per graduate hour. Students can use credit cards to pay for classes.

"There is a direct link between how students spend their time and how they benefit from college," Kuh said. "If students spend more time socializing than studying, they will learn less," he said.

This is why an academic residence life is beneficial, he added.

Students need ample opportunities for educational, purposeful student involvement in the life of the institution, Kuh said.

"Programs and services should be congruent with student characteristics and needs," he said.

Kuh said he considered work an interference with these issues.

"I think of work as an unnecessary distraction to the real business of learning," he said.

An ethos of learning is what an institution needs, Kuh said.

"It takes a whole village to raise a child," he said.

Kuh said an institution fits this statement because learning cannot happen exclusively from the curriculum.

"It should be a holistic, seamless way," he said.
